BURGESS' ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, Warehouse, 107, STRAND, corner of the Savoy Steps, London.—JOHN BURGESS and Son, being apprised of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the ORIGINAL, to observe the NAME and ADDRESS correspond with the above:—the general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection, J. B. and Son submit the following caution;—Some are in appearance at first sight "Burgess' Essence of Anchovies;"—others "Burgis's," and many more without address.—JOHN BURGESS and SON having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the labels previous to purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments. Burgess' New Sauce for general purposes, having giving such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient sauce—will keep good in all climates.—Warehouse, No. 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy Steps.

(The original Fish-sauce Warehouse.)

THE BRITISH SPECIFIC, for re-producing and promoting the GROWTH of HAIR.—The principle of its operation is to cool and contract the pores which are opened by a redundancy of heat, occasioning a relaxation of the roots, that render them incapable of retaining the hair; to counteract which nothing is better calculated than the British Specific, as, from its invigorating and oleaginous properties, it almost immediately arrests the falling off, and affords such effectual nourishment to the roots, that persons giving it a fair trial may assure themselves of its speedily restoring it, even where it has become completely bald, however long it may have been so, and, if grey, gradually to restore it to its natural colour. The superiority of this preparation (the invention of a medical man) derives additional recommendation from its being, unlike other compositions for the hair, so extremely clean and agreeable, that its application is a real pleasure, and is only requisite to be generally known, to receive the preference of every article in use for similar purposes. To be had only of D. PEDEN, 15, Burlington Arcade, Piccadilly, in bottles, 6s. each, or cases of four bottles for 1l., forwarded to order, on receiving the amount, post paid.

LADIES and GENTLEMEN may rely on it, although there are articles daily puffed in the Newspapers for the hair, but it is acknowledged as a fact, whoever makes a fair trial of the Original Thick Russia Oil, has found it, through the Aromatic Oils it is prepared with, the wholesomest and best Oil for preserving and promoting the hair of ladies, gentlemen, and children, and if used constantly not a hair will fall off or turn grey, and is such a nourisher to the Hair, that if it has began to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour; will restore the hair on the bald part, if the least signs of roots are remaining, has been proved by hundreds.

A. PRINCE is proud to acknowledge the favour of his Gracious Majesty of Great Britain, in sending for six bottles of his celebrated Russia Oil. It might really to be generally known; the principal Physicians have recommended those who wear false Hair to rub their heads often with the Russia Oil, as though the aromatic ingredient it is prepared with is wholesome and refreshing to the Head. Observe, Mr. Marshall, and other respectable Court Hair-dressers, will recommend no other article for the Hair but Prince's Original Thick Russia Oil, as they have experienced it is the best for dressing, preserving, and promoting the Hair; but there are several Hair-dressers, when Ladies and Gentlemen have their Hair dressed by them, they recommend Bears' Grease, or other Oils for the Hair, although they know it is a humbug.

Ask for Prince's Russia Oil. The Ounce Bottle, Five Shillings; a large Bottle containing Five Ounces, one pound, which is a saving. Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. Price, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street; Mr. Smith, Perfumer to his Majesty, 117, New Bond-street; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders. Be particular, and observe his address, "A. Prince, 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street, London," on the cover of each bottle; without, it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose.  Purchasers ought to be particular, as counterfeits are in circulation.

Also PRINCE'S RUSSIA DYE is so improved, as there is no doubt that it will change Red or Grey Hair on the Head, Whiskers, or any part to Brown or Black in a few minutes.—Directions sealed up with each Bottle, at Half-a-guinea a Bottle, or Two Bottles for One Pound

BURGESS' ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, Warehouse, 107, STRAND, corner of the Savoy Steps, London.—JOHN BURGESS and Son, being apprised of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the ORIGINAL, to observe the NAME and ADDRESS correspond with the above:—the general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection, J. B. and Son submit the following caution;—Some are in appearance at first sight "Burgess' Essence of Anchovies;"—others "Burgis's," and many more without address.—JOHN BURGESS and SON having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the labels previous to purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments. Burgess' New Sauce for general purposes, having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient sauce—will keep good in all climates.—Warehouse, No. 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy Steps.

Their manufactory for STRAW and "ITALIAN" LEGHORN HATS is detached from the Show Rooms which now form a magazine of novelty for the season. Childrens' Leghorn Hats of choice fabric, as imported. French Flowers and Trimmings. Ladies' Leghorns continue to be bleached in the Italian style, 344, Strand, nearly opposite Waterloo Bridge.

EMMETT'S QUEEN'S GOLD AND SILVER EYED NEEDLES.—T. EMMETT, (late TROTT,) Pin, Needle, and Fish-Hook Maker, (by appointment) to their late Majesties, wholesale and retail, No. 27, Holborn Hill, London. Established upwards of a century. Pins of every description. Needles, bead, betweens, blunts, book-binders, carpet, chenille, cottoning, cross-stitch, embroidering, glovers, groundowns, harness, lambine, looping, mattress, netting, packing, quilting, rug, saddlers, sail, sacking, surgeon, tambour, vellum, yarn, &c. Fish-hooks, lines, and tackle; gilt, plated, black and white Hooks and Eyes. Thimbles, gold, silver, metal, white steel, &c., steel thimbles, lined with silver; bodkins, knitting pins, meshes, cap-pins, quillers, &c.; improved travelling and dressing cases, with complete fittings; work-boxes, reticules, and needle-cases, in tortoiseshell, Morocco and Russia leather, &c.; cutlery; scissors, pen-knives, razors, tweezers, &c.; combs, fancy, gilt, and steel goods, beads, bracelets, buckles, centres, clasps, corkscrews, ear-rings, elastic girdles, neck chains, necklaces, purse snaps, reticules, sides, tassels, watch chains, ditto guards, and every other article in the fancy line; gilt, silvered, and coloured lustre pins, hair pins, needle and brass points; brass, copper, and elastic wire.—A liberal allowance to merchants, captains, and others.

THE BRITISH SPECIFIC, for re-producing and promoting the GROWTH of HAIR.—The principle of its operation is to cool and contract the pores which are opened by a redundancy of heat, occasioning a relaxation of the roots, that render them incapable of retaining the hair; to counteract which nothing is better calculated than the British Specific, as, from its invigorating and oleaginous properties, it almost immediately arrests the falling off, and affords such effectual nourishment to the roots, that persons giving it a fair trial may assure themselves of its speedily restoring it, even where it has become completely bald, however long it may have been so, and, if grey, gradually to restore it to its natural colour. The superiority of this preparation (the invention of a medical man) derives additional recommendation from its being, unlike other compositions for the hair, so extremely clean and agreeable, that its application is a real pleasure, and is only requisite to be generally known, to receive the preference of every article in use for similar purposes. To be had only of D. PEDEN, 15, Burlington Arcade, Piccadilly, in bottles, 6s. each, or cases of four bottles for 1*l*., forwarded to order, on receiving the amount, post paid.

LADIES and GENTLEMEN may rely on it, although there are articles daily puffed in the Newspapers for the hair, but it is acknowledged as a fact, whoever makes a fair trial of the Original Thick Russia Oil, has found it, through the Aromatic Oils it is prepared with, the wholesomest and best Oil for preserving and promoting the hair of ladies, gentlemen, and children, and if used constantly not a hair will fall off or turn grey, and is such a nourisher to the Hair, that if it has began to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour; will restore the hair on the bald part, if the least signs of roots are remaining, has been proved by hundreds.

A. PRINCE is proud to acknowledge the favour of his Gracious Majesty of Great Britain, in sending for six bottles of his celebrated Russia Oil. It ought really to be generally known; the principal Physicians have recommended those who wear false Hair to rub their heads often with the Russia Oil, as through the aromatic ingredient it is prepared with is wholesome and refreshing to the Head. Observe, Mr. Marshall, and other respectable Court Hair-dressers, will recommend no other article for the Hair but Prince's Original Thick Russia Oil, as they have experienced it is the best for dressing, preserving, and promoting the Hair; but there are several Hair-dressers, when Ladies and Gentlemen have their Hair dressed by them, they recommend Bears' Grease, or other Oils for the Hair, although they know it is a humbug.

Ask for Prince's Russia Oil. The Ounce Bottle, Five Shillings; a large Bottle containing Five Ounces, one pound, which is a saving. Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. Price, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street; Mr. Smith, Perfumer to his Majesty, 117, New Bond-street; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders. Be particular, and observe his address, "A. Prince, 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street, London," on the cover of each bottle; without it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose,  Purchasers ought to be particular, as counterfeits are in circulation.

Also PRINCE'S RUSSIA DYE is so improved, as there is no doubt that it will change Red or Grey Hair on the Head, Whiskers, or any part to Brown or Black in a few minutes.—Directions sewed up with each Bottle, at Half-a-guinea a Bottle, or Two Bottles for One Pound.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY.

Some witnesses were examined relative to the Gardner Peerage, and the further hearing postponed to next Monday, in order to give time for the production of an important witness.

Mr. Shifton from the Dover Harbour Commissioners presented accounts of the receipts and expenditure of the Tonnage Duties at Dover.

Lord Holland presented a petition from Thomas Burgess, of the county of Bedford, against a clause in the Lunatic Traverse Bill.

The Lord Chancellor presented a petition from Thomas Robert Gourlay against the Canadian Corn Importation Bill.—Earl Bathurst gave notice that he should move the second reading of the Canadian Corn Importation Bill to-morrow.

Messrs. Davenport, Fitzgerald, and others from the Commons, brought the Atlantic Steam Navigation Bill, the Mines in Ireland Bill, the Scotland Courts of Justice Bill, the Irish Lunatics Bill, the Deceased Officers' Effects Bill, and several private Bills, which were read a first time.

On the motion of the Lord Chancellor, the Order of the Day for receiving the report of the Committee on the Law of Merchant and Factor Amendment Bill, was discharged, and fixed for next Thursday.

Earl Bathurst moved that an humble Address to be presented to his Majesty, requesting that he would graciously be pleased to order a dispatch from Sir Thomas Maitland, on the subject of the Plague, dated the 8th of April, 1819, should be laid before the House.

The House resolved itself into a Committee on the Scotch Small Debts Recovery Bill.—After a few words from Earls Rosslyn and Lauderdale, the bill was reported without any amendment.

The Juries and Jurors Bill also went through a Committee, and was reported.

The House then went into a Committee on the County Courts Bill.

Equitable Loan Bill.—Counsel having been called to the bar—Mr. Fonblanque concluded his argument on the part of the Pawnbrokers against the bill.—Mr. Frederick Pollock was then heard at considerable length on the part of the Auctioneers against the bill.—Both counsels having terminated their arguments—the Lord Chancellor moved that their Lordships be summoned to-morrow on the second reading of the Bill. Ordered.—Adjourned at nine o'clock.

TUESDAY.

Sir Robert Farquhar, Mr. Bnougnen, and others from the Commons, brought up the Mauritius Trade, the Duke of Cumberland's Annuity, the 10,500,000*l.* Exchequer Bills, the Scotch Prisoners' Aliment, the Bristol Town Dues, the Edinburgh and Glasgow Iron Rail, the Scotch Lowland Churches Bills, and a great number of Private Bills, which were read a first time.

Petitions were presented from Rochdale, in favour of the Equitable Loan Bill—from the builders of Dublin, complaining of the duty on Foreign Oak.

On moving the second reading of the Colonial Intercourse Bill, Earl Bathurst said, the present measure was granted on a complete abandonment of the old system of commercial intercourse, the same duty was levied on American ships, as the Americans had laid on British. Goods warehoused were allowed to be re-exported free of duty; the object was, to establish the warehousing system on a broader scale. A commercial intercourse would be established, and the British Colonies would enjoy all the advantages granted to the Americans.—The Marquis of Lansdown expressed his cordial approbation of what had fallen from the Noble Earl. He himself, at a former period had endeavoured to effect something similar in the other House of Parliament. But no measure had ever been so strenuously attacked both in and out of the House. He trusted that the present measure would lead to a system of free labour in the West Indies; and he hoped by a gradual improvement, that great object might be attained. The Earl of Liverpool said, as to the Bill alluded to by the Noble Lord, he (Lord Liverpool) had at the time opposed it, as thinking it unsuited for the times. Since that time a most important change had taken place in the commercial relations of the world. Should the Bill be adopted, the Colonies would cease to be Colonies, and would become integral parts of the Empire. The Colonial towns would have the same advantages as Liverpool, as Bristol, even as London herself.—The Bill was committed for Thursday.

Lord Dacre moved the second reading of the Equitable Loan bill.—The Earl of Lauderdale said he would not at present object to the progress of the Bill, but let it go into Committee. The institution of a Joint Stock Company to counteract the efforts of individual industry, was one of the greatest evils that could befall a country. He should take the sense of the House on the third reading of the Bill.—The Lord Chancellor could not say a word as to whether the Company was legal or not in its present state, when the deed was incorporated in the Bill by Act of Parliament, it would then be competent for the House to decide on the question. Till that was done, he would neither admit nor deny the legality of the Company.—Lord Dacre was confident that beneficial results would follow from the Bill. When the deed was made part of the Bill, the House would come to an impartial decision—The Lord Chancellor said, it was both for the interest of the parties and the public that the deed should be made part of the Bill, and that should be publicly known, both in the present and in all similar transactions.—After a few words from the Duke of Athol, the Bill was read a second time, and committed for to-morrow.—Adjourned.

WEDNESDAY.

The Lord Chancellor presented a petition from certain Attornies of Cheltenham, and one from James Preston, of the county of Stafford, against the County Courts Bill. Laid on the table.

The Earl of Donoughmore complained that certain returns from Ireland had not yet been laid on the table.

The Earl of Harewood presented a petition from Leeds, praying for some alteration in the law for the recovery of small debts. Laid on the table.

The Earl of Lauderdale presented a petition from the Porters of the City of London against the Equitable Loan Bill. Laid on the table.

The Irish Mines Bill and the Pirates Head Money Bill were read a third time and passed.

Mr. Johnson, from the office of Chief Secretary for Ireland, presented a report from the Commissioners of Enquiry on the state of Education in Ireland.—Adjourned.

THURSDAY.

At twelve o'clock all the Judges attended to give their opinion on some points of law relative to the Newburgh Peerage. The Lord Chancellor then made a few observations to the House, and said, that final judgment would be given on Thursday next.

Mr. Hart was heard for the claimant herein, who is the lineal descendant of Sir Philip Sydney; he concluded his speech with an emphatic appeal to their Lordships, to restore to the Peerage a descendant of two of the most illustrious families that had ever been in Britain—the Warrens and the Sydneys.

Mr. Abercrombie appeared on behalf of Sir Henry Hudlow, an infant, descendant of the sister of the last possessor of this title, and submitted his interests to the protection of their Lordships.

The Chief Justice and the other Judges sat for some time with the Lord Chancellor on a Writ of Error.

Earl Fitzwilliam presented a petition from the Prothonotaries of the City of York, claiming a compensation if the County Courts Bill passed into a law.

Lord King said he held a petition signed by an individual, Dr. Maccan, in favour of the removal of the Quarantine laws.—The Lord Chancellor did not mean to oppose the receiving of the petition; neither would he venture an opinion as to the contagious or not contagious nature of the plague. All he could say on the subject was, that if the plague had been introduced into that House, he could have no difficulty in telling their lordships its name. (A laugh.) The petition was then ordered to lie on the table.

On the motion of the Earl of Liverpool the Duke of Cumberland's Annuity Bill went through a committee, and was reported without amendments.

Equitable Loan Company.—Lorn Bexley presented a petition from the corporation of the City of London, praying to be heard by counsel at the bar against certain parts of the Equitable Loan Bill.—The Duke of Athol was understood to oppose the prayer of the petition, as the House had already decided that the interests of the City of London were not sufficiently affected by the bill, to justify the hearing of counsel at the bar on its part.

FRIDAY.

In "the Earl of Winchelsea and others, Trustees to Lady Essex Ker v. the hon. H. Bellenden and others, heirs portioners of that lady, and of Lady Mary Ker, her sister," interlocutors of the Court of Session affirmed.

In "the Earl of Breadalbane v. Claud Russell, Esq. Trustee for the creditors of J. Campbell, Esq. W. S." the cause was remitted to the Court of Session, to review it.

Counsel were heard in "Jeffrey v. Ure," "Callum v. Ferrar," and in part of "Pearson v. Jack," the last to be heard further on Tuesday next.

Counsel was heard and witnesses examined on the Sullivan Divorce bill, the further proceedings of which were postponed to Monday.

Earl Darnley was understood to postpone the second reading of the Quarantine Laws Regulation bill till next Tuesday.

Earl Bathurst laid on the table a copy of Sir Thomas Maitland's dispatch, dated Corfu, May, 1822, on the subject of the plague.

Mr. Bootle Wilbraham, Mr. Blackburne, and others, brought up from the Commons the Bonded Corn bill, the Canadian Corn Importation bill, and a great number of private bills.

The Earl of Liverpool moved that the Bonded Corn and Canadian Corn Importation bills be read a first time.

Interest of Money in India.—The Marquis of Hastings rose to explain, in a few words, the nature of the bill which he was about to present to their lordships. Its object was to define clearly the 63d clause of the 13th of George III. relative to the limitation of interest on money in India.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY.

On the question that the Report of the Western Ship Canal Bill be taken into further consideration, and the amendments of the Committee agreed to—The division was—For the Bill, 42—Against it, 9—Majority, 33.

Lord Nugent postponed to Monday next the presentation of a petition from Banbury and West Looe upon the subject of the Elective Franchise.

Lord Milton presented two petitions from the operative shoe-makers of Daintree and from Sheffield, against the re-enactment of the Combination Laws.

Mr. Dawson brought up a return of the offices and places in the gift of the Lord High Chancellor of England.

Upon the motion of Mr. Hart Davis, the adjourned debate upon the clause proposed to be added to the Bristol Town Dues Bill was resumed. After a short discussion the House divided, when there appeared—For the Clause, 52—Against it, 30—Majority, 22—The bill then passed.

Mr. Sykes presented a petition from certain Seamen of Kingston-upon-Hull against the system of Impressment. The hon. member strongly supported the prayer of the petition.—After a few words from Sir G. Clerk and Sir G. Cockburn, the petition was ordered to be printed.—Mr. Sykes presented a similar petition from the town of Nottingham.

Sir H. Parnell presented a petition from the Chamber of Commerce in Dublin, praying for an alteration in the law between Merchant and Factor.

A Message from the Lords announced that their Lordships' had agreed to various Bills.

Mr. Powlett presented a petition from certain Owners and Occupiers of Lead Mines in the county of Durham, against the proposed reduction of the duties on the importation of Foreign Lead.

Mr. Coke presented a petition from certain Owners and Occupiers of Land attending Norwich Market, against any alteration in the Corn Laws.—The hon. member presented similar petitions from Lynn, and from a Hundred in the county of Norfolk.

Mr. C. Hutchinson presented a petition from the Distillers of Ireland, against the Distillery Bill, which they considered a violation of the Act of Union, and as calculated to subject them to other material injuries. They prayed to be heard by counsel against the bill.—Mr. S. Rice supported the petition.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer thought the petitioners were not intitled to be heard by counsel.

Mr. Maxwell gave notice, that on the 21st instant, he should present a petition from the Weavers of Scotland, against any alteration of the present Combination Laws.

JUDGES (INDIA) BILL.

The House agreeably to the Order of the Day, having gone into the further consideration of the report on this bill, its amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and to be read a third time on Wednesday se'nnight.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer moved the Order of the Day for the re-committal of the Distillery Laws Bill.—Mr. Western after a few remarks, moved that rum should not be included amongst the other spirits named in the subsequent clause.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer opposed the amendment.—And after some observations from Mr. W. Smith, Mr. W. Whitmore, Mr. Coke, Mr. J. Bennet, Mr. H. Sumner, Captain Maberley, Mr. Huskisson, Sir R. Ferguson, and Mr. T. Wilson, the Committee divided.—For the Amendment, 43—Against it, 81—Majority in favour of the Clause, 38—The House then resumed, and the report was ordered to be received to-morrow.

The Report from the Committee of Supply, on the Grant of 13,000*l.* for the repairs of the Cobb of Lyme Regis was brought up.

On the resolution for granting 30,000*l.* in aid of Emigration from Ireland to Canada.—Mr. Hume moved, as an amendment, that a Commission of Inquiry be instituted as to the effect of similar former grants.—The House then divided on the amendment. The numbers were:—For the Amendment, 19—Against it, 62—Majority, 43.

Upon the Order of the Day for the third reading of the Court of King's Bench Bill, Mr. Secretary Peel said he wished to correct a mistake he made in a former debate relative to the retired allowance of the Chancellor of Ireland. He had stated it to be 4,000*l.*, whereas being in Irish currency, it only amounted to 3,690*l.*—The third reading of this and the other bills relating to the Salaries of the Judges was postponed to Friday.

TUESDAY.

The Western Ship Canal and the Irish Mining Companys' Bills were passed.

Mr. Littleton presented a petition from the inhabitants of Nottingham, praying that no alteration might be made in the laws prohibiting the exportation of machinery. Amongst the evils which would result from suffering the exportation of machinery, might be principally reckoned 13 inventions in mechanics, now exclusively known to English manufacturers, but which would be thereby lost to the country; while even on the principle of reciprocity, the latter could be no gainers, because the French had but three inventions in mechanism which were unknown to the English.—Mr. Huskisson was aware that considerable alarm prevailed amongst the manufacturers, lest the exportation of machinery should be allowed. At all events he was not disposed to abolish the present laws at a sweep, without further enquiry, more particularly at a time when alarm upon the subject seemed to be so very prevalent.—Mr. Hume, Mr. Baring, and Mr. T. Wilson, were convinced, that imaginary fears of the results of the exportation of machinery prevailed to a greater extent than they had any evidence of.

Sir M. W. Ridley, in answer to a question from Mr. Ellice, said that he expected to be enabled to lay before the House to-morrow, or the next day, the report of the commissioners upon the combination laws, and that he would also be prepared to introduce a measure founded upon that report.

Mr. Denman presented a petition from Martin Camfor, complaining of the conduct of Mr. Kenrick, one of the Magistrates for Surrey, and one of the Welch judges. The charge against Mr. Kenrick was founded upon two affidavits; and, although the individual had received damages in a court of justice, yet, a personal injury was trivial, compared with the alleged misconduct Mr. K. he thought the house should investigate the conduct of that individual, possessing as he did a high office in the administration of public justice.—Mr. Dennison said that Mr. Kenrick was a near neighbour of his, though they were opposed to each other in politics, and that he could bear testimony of his character in private life. He wished to state that Mr. Kenrick had an objection to the printing of the affidavits prior to the house being in possession of the matter which is contained in them.—Mr. Secretary Peel put it to the hon. and learned gentleman, whether he thought he could proceed during the present session; and, if not, whether it would not be unfair to print them six months before any measure could be founded upon them.—Mr. Denman replied, that he thought the probable duration of the present Session of Parliament would afford sufficient time for the purpose of immediate procedure.—Sir R. Williams said Mr. Kenrick bore on the circuit which he went the character of an honest and an upright judge.—The Attorney-General said, that Mr. Kenrick had never been heard in the Court of King's Bench upon the merits of the case.—After some conversation in which Mr. Scarlett, Mr. C. Wynne, Mr. Sturges Bourne, and Mr. Sumner, thought that Mr. Kenrick would be prejudiced by the printing of the affidavits.—Sir M. Ridley said, that Mr. Kenrick desired that any form of the house might be dispensed with, and the fullest enquiry gone into.—Mr. Secretary Canning said, that whatever disposition there might be in the house to evade forms, if depositions were laid on the table, the individual answering the charge, must give an answer not upon oath.—The petition and affidavits were laid on the table.

Mr. Hume brought under the consideration of the house the state of the Church of Ireland. The hon. member said that being strongly impressed that it was a main cause of many of the evils of that country, he could not reconcile it to his notions of duty to be silent. It was only necessary for him to state what the numbers in the Irish Church were to share, to shew that it was too large for the duty it had to perform. Here were 22 Bishops, 38 Deans, and the dignitaries, making altogether 515 dignified clergy, to superintend the religious instruction of 500,000 Protestants. There had formerly been 33 bishops in Ireland, but government had by unions of dioceses thought proper to reduce the number to 22. The hon. member contended at some length, that a reduction of the benefices ought to take place, and referred to the estimates of Mr. Wakefield, to shew the great value of the land possessed by the church. In seven dioceses only, there was land to the value of 278,000*l.* a-year if resumed by the crown, and let to individuals. Here was a large fund which might be applicable to the religious education of the people. He then animadverted on the board of first fruits, as one in which the clergy sat as judges on themselves: Things could not remain as they were in the Church of Ireland; and it was both the right and duty of the house to interfere. He meant to call upon the house to pledge itself to enquiry in the ensuing session. The hon. member concluded by moving a resolution, that the property of the Church of Ireland was public property, and another, pledging the House to inquiry into the state of the church of Ireland in the course of the next Session.—Mr. Secretary Canning objected to the motion, on the ground that, if carried, it would be an innovation on the fifth article of the Union, which related to the English and Irish Church. Should the Hon. Member carry his principle it might be voted that the property of the corporation of London was at the disposal of Parliament. Did that property, which might be sacred in the hands of the Church, become less sacred when it came into lay possession? At the time of the Union with Ireland the proportion betwixt Protestants and Catholics was nearly the same as now, when it was determined by the Parliaments of both kingdoms that the property of the respective churches should be inviolable. The House had never heard so monstrous a proposition as that of the Hon. Gentleman, which he believed would find but few supporters in that House, and none in the country.—The motion was supported by Mr. F. Burdett, and Mr. Brougham, and opposed by Mr. Thant, Mr. Sergeant Onslow, and Mr. Secretary Peel.—Mr. Hume replied; after which the motion was negatived, the Hon. Gentleman declining to put it to a division, as his object would be attained by a motion which he intended to propose, pledging the House to take up the subject early in the next Session of Parliament. Upon this latter motion the House divided. For the motion, 37; against it, 126; majority 89.

Mr. Monk withdrew the Labourers' Wages Bill, but gave notice he would bring forward another bill upon the subject early in the next Session of Parliament.

The second reading of the Bill for the repeal of the Bubble Act was postponed until Thursday next.

WEDNESDAY.

At four o'clock, there being only sixteen members present, the house was adjourned.

THURSDAY.

Mr. Brougham presented a petition from an individual of the name of Bishop Burnett, complaining of the conduct of the Colonial Government at the Cape of Good Hope, and praying that the house would institute an enquiry. It was alledged that Mr. Burnett was induced by the representations of Government to go out to Botany Settlement, and to expend a large sum of money, nearly twenty thousand rix-dollars in expences and improvements. In the course of these contracts with the Colonial Commissariat, he had been accused of some defalcation by the Commissariat, and in other respects treated with great harshness and injustice. These sufferings and injuries he made known to Lord Charles Somerset, in a memorial. The hon. and learned gentleman stated, that the conduct of Lord Somerset merited impeachment if the allegations of the petition were true. The Petitioner sent in his Memorial to the Governor, and instead of ordering it to be inquired into, Lord Charles Somerset put it into the hands of the Fiscal to be prosecuted, and the unfortunate Petitioner was banished from the colony for five years. During the pending prosecution against him, certain nefarious libels had been circulated against Lord Somerset accusing the noble lord of certain abominable offences. Now the noble lord was as incapable of such offences as Mr. Burnett was of accusing him of them. It afterwards appeared that the author of these libels was the infamous Oliver, who now called himself Jones, and was in high favour at the Cape. The imputations of those libels had been made the cause of other vexatious proceedings against Mr. Burnett. His house was broken open, and his papers violently taken away. For all these proceedings he asked some reparation, or at least for some inquiry. He should now move for leave to bring up the petition.—Mr. W. Horton began by complaining of the personal discourtesy of the learned gentleman, who had not previously informed him of the contents of the petition, in order that he might be prepared with a reply. He cautioned the House against too easily crediting such heinous accusations against Lord Charles Somerset. He believed there was a conspiracy against him.—Mr. Baring reprobated the principle on which the Government established its new Colonies.—Mr. Hume dwelt on the abuses of the Government at the Cape, and said they were universally known. He had within a few hours seen a person from the Cape, who bore out all the charges against Lord Charles Somerset. Would the Colonial Office furnish the House with a copy of the memorial presented by Mr. Burnett to Lord C. Somerset, and on account of which that individual had been banished. The great agent of evil at the Cape was the notorious spy Oliver. He held an office of great power, which power he abused to the great injury of the Colony. On this subject, he (Mr. Hume) had indisputable evidence to submit; he intreated the House to interfere at once and correct the system.—Mr. Maberly said the facts were too serious not to be enquired into, and it was idle to wait any longer for the Report. The House would not do its duty if it did not institute an enquiry. Justice to all parties, and particularly to the noble lord himself, reqoired it.—Mr. W. Horton said he had no power to interfere. He was ready to admit, that if Mr. Burnett had been punished as he stated by the Dutch laws, those laws ought to be changed. But the facts were not yet proved, and it was necessary to wait for the Report. —Mr. Brougham then moved that the petition be printed.—Mr. Brougham gave notice that he should on Tuesday move to refer the petition to a Select Committee.

Mr. S. Wortley presented a petition from Mr. R. Gourlay, on the subject of the Poor Laws.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. N. Calvert presented a petition from Ware, relating to the slaughtering of horse.

Mr. Hume presented a petition from the Journeymen Coopers of the city of Dublin, praying that they might be heard by counsel against the enactment of the Combination Laws.—The petition was ordered to be printed.

Mr. Hume presented a petition from certain Seamen, imploring the House to adopt measures for limiting the service in the Navy, and for the prevention of punishment, unless through the intervention of a court-martial.

Mr. Sykes presented a petition from the Merchants of Kingston-upon-Hull, praying that no alteration might be made in the duties on woollen goods.

Mr. Western said he rose for the purpose of moving for a report of the number of commitments, on charges of felony, to the different gaols of the country, at the last Spring Assizes, the home circuit excepted, distinguishing the number of persons acquitted and convicted, the number against whom no bills had been found, and the dates of their commitment.—The motion having been put from the Chair, Mr. Secretary Peel said he had no objection to furnish the document, or any other that might be required on the same subject. It was with much reluctance he felt himself obliged to state, that hitherto it was found impractible to carry the arrangement of a third Assizes further; it had been tried on the home circuit, and the result gave general satisfaction. There were, however, great difficulties in the detail, nor was he quite certain whether justice could be administered in so satisfactory a way at the third Assizes as at the other two. The great obstacle arose from the present constitution of society. He did not, however, abandon all hope of further extending the experiment.—Mr. Denman agreed in what had been said by the right hon. gentleman, but he doubted whether the frequent appearance of the array of justice might not diminish the respect in which it was now held.—The motion was then agreed to.

Mr. Bankes moved for, and obtained, a Select Committee, to examine the progress made in the execution of an Index to the Journals of the House, from the Union with Ireland to the present time.

Mr. Wallace, in bringing up the Report of the Committee upon the Combination Laws, expressed his most anxious desire that the Report should be printed, and in the hands of the members, with a view of carrying into effect the recommendations of the Committee during the present session.—Mr. Hume deprecated as much as any person, the outrages that had been committed in Dublin and Glasgow; at the same time he had to complain, that in the Committee the operatives were not examined.—Mr. Secretary Peel highly disapproved of any discussion at present on the propriety of the Bill which his right hon. friend moved for leave to introduce.—The Report was then brought up, and leave was granted to bring in a Bill to repeal the Act of Parliament of last Session, respecting Combinations, and to substitute such regulations as might be deemed expedient to remedy the evils arising therefrom.

Mr. W. Horton, in a low tone of voice, wished to be informed of the course intended to be pursued upon the subject of the affairs of Jamaica, and the conduct of the Duke of Manchester.—Dr. Lushington was at a loss to know how that honourable gentleman could be ignorant of the course he intended to pursue, as from the discussions which had already taken place upon the subject, the hon. gentleman might have perceived it was his intention to move that the petition and the papers connected with it should be referred to a Select Committee. Any other course, he was apprehensive, would fall short of doing that justice the petitioners which he was desirous to obtain for them.—Mr. W. Horton said it devolved upon him to offer some explanation to what had fallen from the honourable and learned gentleman. When he had the honour of a conversation with that hon. and learned gentleman he distinctly stated, that the case did not rest upon the papers before the House. Considering the state of feeling which existed in a colony where there were no less than thirty-six thousand men of colour forming part of the free population, and only twenty thousand whites, and satisfied with the disposition of the Duke of Manchester to exercise his authority properly, he could not agree to any censure upon that noble individual.—Mr. Scarlett had taken the pains to look over the proceedings, and he was not ashamed to confess, that as one of the individuals concerned was a near relation of his own, he felt a great anxiety to see whether he had drawn a correct conclusion on the case. The evidence, as it struck him, was very strong in favour of the prisoners. It had been said, that further evidence had been taken before the Secret Committee; but he did not find that the person accused had ever had an opportunity to appear before the Secret Committee.—Mr. Secretary Canning said that the noble Duke having stated that he was prepared now, as well as at the first, to meet this charge fairly before a jury of this country, he thought he had done every thing that could be required of him, and that this circumstance was strong presumption in his favour respecting not only his conduct itself, but his own conscientious opinion that that conduct was upright and consistent with his duty. If their opinion should be that his proposition was just and reasonable, they would, he thought also consider it fair not to continue the debate any further.—Mr. Brougham said, that he rose for the purpose of requesting his hon. and learned friend (Dr Lushington) to accede to the offers of the right hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Secretary Canning), for the house and the country then had a very distinct and positive promise that the matter was not to rest here, but was to come under their immediate consideration early in the ensuing Session. The petition was then withdrawn.

Mr. C. H. Hutchinson rose to make some request about the postponement of the third reading of the Distillery Bill.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer agreed to postpone it until Monday.

The Assimilation of Currency Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Townland's Boundaries Bill (Ireland) was read a third time and passed.

BUCKINGHAM-HOUSE BILL.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer moved the second reading of this bill.—Mr. Bankes expressed his regret at the intended alterations of Buckingham-house. He did not think that any alteration could sufficiently improve that building for the purposes it was intended. If the public money was to be expended, it would surely be much better that it should be laid out in the erection of a Princely residence, the site of which might be Hyde Park, or the Regent's Park, and which should be at once suitable to the dignity of the Crown and the importance of the nation.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer admitted it was highly desirable that such a residence should be built for the Sovereign, as would at once be suitable to the dignity of the Crown, the convenience of the subject, and an ornament to the metropolis. But the question was how this would best be accomplished? It was easy to cast one's eyes about, and point at this favourable situation and that, and write pamphlets about it; but for his part he had never seen any one situation as yet perfectly free from objection on the score of public inconvenience. With respect to Hyde Park, that he conceived to be objectionable; for it appeared, it was not supposed that it was only necessary to build a comfortable residence for the Monarch, but the idea of a Royal Palace was contemplated, which should afford accommodation also for the Ambassadors and Great Officers of State. Buckingham-house was desperately dirty, and some expence was required, but according to the proposed plan, they might make his Majesty one of the finest apartments in the world. The expence to make it complete, would be about 200,000*l*.—The bill was then ordered to be committed to morrow.

The Scotch Judicature Bill was read the third time and passed.

FRIDAY

A person from the Court of King's Bench presented Copies of the Affidavits ordered in the Case of Mr. Kenrick.

Mr. Alderman Wood presented a petition from certain Dissenters, praying a repeal of the Test Act.

Mr. Alderman Wood presented a petition from two journeymen sawyers, against the repeal of the existing Combination Laws.

The University Police Bill went through a Committee, and was ordered to be reported to-morrow.

Mr. Secretary Peel observed, that the Juries' Bill, notwithstanding the predictions of hon. gentlemen opposite, had been returned from the House of Lords with only one verbal amendment. (A laugh.)

The Chancellor of the Exchequer moved the order of the day for the third reading of the Judges' Salary Bill. Mr. Brougham said that he should be sorry to do any thing which might appear disrespectful to the reverend and learned personages to whom this measure related, but he felt it his duty again to declare his objection to the alterations which it was intended to effect. He wished to see them properly rewarded, but he did not see why a puisne judge, who had no establishment to support when he was off the circuit, should receive the same income as the Speaker of the House of Commons, or the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. Mr. J. Williams expressed his opinion that some provision ought to be made for compelling retirement from the bench before the faculties of judges became disabled by age and infirmity. He agreed with his hon. and learned friend, that the more the income of judges was increased, the longer they would be induced to remain upon the bench after they became incapacitated. Mr. Secretary Peel said, that it was a difficult thing to legislate upon the question of age, but that he agreed with the hon. and learned member in the general principle. The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, that the amount of salary could be reduced, but that of the retired allowance could not, according to the rules of the House, be increased. The bill was then read a third time, and upon the question that it should pass, Mr. Hobhouse moved, as an amendment, that the sum for the salary of the puisne judges be reduced to 5000*l*.—The house divided, and the numbers were...for the amendment, 45; against it, 74. majority, 29. The bill was then passed.

Upon the order of the day being moved for going into a committee of supply, Mr. Abercromby rose and said, that as upon a question of supply every member had the privilege of calling the attention of the house to any matter which he should deem worthy of its consideration, he was about to direct it to the condition of one of its members; he meant the hon. and gallant member for Southwark. The errors of his gallant friend, if errors they were, had resulted alone from the excess of an ardent, and generous, and chivalrous disposition. He would not enter into a description of the military services of his gallant friend, which had been interrupted by a dismissal that was preceded neither by inquiry nor trial. All he wished was, to call upon the house, and ask whether his gallant friend was for ever to suffer the consequences of those transactions which had long been forgotten, and whether the country was for ever to be deprived of his services? With the knowledge they all had of the gracious and benevolent character of their sovereign, they could not fear that any expression of opinion would be considered as an interference with the royal prerogative. If the general expression of this wish on the part of hon. members should lead to that object, as he hoped it would, such an act of favour, come when it might, would be received with grateful satisfaction by the house, the army, and the public. (Hear, hear, hear.) Mr. Lyttleton fully agreed with the hon. and learned member, that whatever had been the errors of the gallant officer, no recollections ought now to be associated with his name but those of his great personal gallantry and the devotion which he had always manifested in support of the honour and character of the army. (Cheers.) Mr. Wodehouse united with his hon. friend, in expressing the satisfaction which he should feel in seeing the gallant member restored to his rank. Lord W. Bantinck said, that if the royal favour should be extended to the gallant member, he had no hesitation in stating his opinion that it would be gratefully received by the army at large. Sir R. Ferguson said, that after so high an authority as the noble lord near him (Lord W. Bentinck), it was unnecessary for him to say how gladly the restoration of his gallant friend to the service would be hailed by the whole army. Mr. Brougham expressed his entire concurrence in what had fallen from his hon. friend (Mr. Abercromby.)

The house then resolved itself into a Committee of Supply, and a resolution, which we could not hear, was agreed to.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer proposed the insertion of the appropriation clause in Committee on Surplus of Grants Bill.—Agreed to, and the report was ordered to be brought up on Monday.

Mr. Huskisson moved that the House resolve itself into a Committee on the further consideration of the Report on the Customs Consolidation Act. He was desirous of calling the attention of the House to the reductions which before Easter he had the honour of submitting to the House. On cotton goods it was not his intention to propose any alteration. On metallic substances he would not propose any further reduction, except as far as related to lead. On earthenware articles, it was also his intention to propose a further reduction of duty. On linen manufactures, the duty was proposed to be 25 per cent. On the article of glass he would propose a still further reduction of duty. The next article to which he should call the attention of the committee was that of paper in a manufactured state, by which he meant when it was made up into books. Now, to remedy that inconvenience, he would propose that all books which were printed twenty years ago should be admitted on a reduced duty from the present duty of 6*l*. 10*s*. to 1*l*. On books printed within the period he had specified, he would propose as a general scale of duty, that it be altered from 7*l*. to 5*l*. On flax and tow he would propose a still further reduction. The present duty on timber was fifty-five shillings per ton according to the cubic measure. There was a duty also of 4*l*. 12*s*. on one hundred and twenty-five planks. He begged in the next instance to call the attention of the house to a duty which affected the shipping interest. At present there was a duty of 50 per cent. on all foreign vessels broken up and sold in this country, which was, he suppose, the reason that the large ship (we presume the Columbus) was not broken up and sold in this country. It would be well, perhaps, to do away with this duty altogether. There was one other article to which he had forgotten to advert, the duty on pepper. The present duty amounted to 500 per cent. The price of the article now was 5d. per lb., the duty 2s. 6d., and his proposal was to reduce the duty from 2s. 6d. to 1s. per lb. After a few words from Mr. S. Rice, Captain Maberly, Mr. Alderman Thompson, Mr. Huskisson, and Mr. Denman, the resolution was then agreed to.

The house went into a committee on the Apothecaries' bill. Mr. Abercomby proposed an amendment to limit the duration of the bill to next session. Mr. Brougham opposed it on the ground that it would be the means of introducing a bill next session. After a few words from Mr. Hume, the Attorney-General, and Mr. Denman, the amendment was negatived without a division. The bill then passed through the committee. Report on Monday.

The second reading of the Felons' Counsel bill was postponed to next session.

The Slaughtering of Horses' bill was thrown out upon the question that the report be received.

The house went into a committee on the Buckingham-house bill. Mr. Hume asked whether there was any plan upon which the repairs of Buckingham-house were to be made. The Chancellor of the Exchequer answered in the affirmative. Mr. Hume then asked the estimate. The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, he had stated on a former evening, that it would be about 200,000*l*. The resolution having been agreed to, the report was ordered to be received to-day.

The other orders of the day were disposed of, and the house adjourned at three o'clock.

After a few words from Mr. Grattan, the further consideration of the Poor Relief (Ireland) bill was postponed to this day three months.

THE CEREMONY OF LAYING THE FIRST STONE OF LONDON BRIDGE.

This ceremony was one of the most imposing exhibitions with which the citizens of London have been gratified for many years. The arrangements which it was intended to make, had his Majesty found it convenient, consistent with his health, to preside upon the occasion, were fully adopted, as the committee were determined to do honour to an occasion on which the Sovereign's presence was solicited, and upon which the chief magistrate acted the principal part. The procession set off from Guildhall at two o'clock on Wednesday, and was graced by the attendance of many noble visitors, and others of great rank and affluence; it was as follows:—

A Division of the Artillery Company.
Constables.
Band of Music.
Marshalmen, City Marshal, Water Bailiff, and his Assistant.
Barge Masters.
City Watermen, bearing Colours.
Remainder of the City Watermen.
Bridgemaster and Clerk of the Bridgehouse.
Contractor.
Model of the Bridge.
Engineer.
Members of the Committee.
Visitors and Members of the Committee of the Royal Society.
High Bailiff of the Borough of Southwark.
Under Sheriffs.
Clerk of the Peace of the City of London.
The City Solicitor.
The Remembrancer.
The Secondaries.
The Comptroller of the Chamber.
The Common Pleaders.
The Judges of the Sheriff's Court.
The Town Clerk.
The Common Serjeant.
The Chamberlain.
Members of Parliament (visitors.)
The President of the Royal Society.
The Sheriffs.
The Aldermen below the Chair.
The Recorder.
The Aldermen who have passed the Chair.
Visitors (Privy Counsellors.)
The Speaker of the House of Commons.
Visitors (Peers.)
Great Officers of State.
Members of the Royal Family.
Music, Colours, and the Insignia of the Lord Mayor.
Company (the Goldsmiths.)
Marshalmen.
The Lord Mayor's Servants.
The City Marshal.
The Lord Mayor's Household.
The Lord Mayor in his State Coach.
The Artillery Company as Guard of the Lord Mayor.

This procession was joined by about 50 carriages; it moved up Cornhill and down Gracechurch-street to London Bridge, where a large opening was made in the balustrades, and a flight of steps formed, by which the company descended into the coffer-dam. The coffer-dam contains four floors, round which seats were erected for the company. The lowest floor, that upon a level with which the first stone is laid, accommodated 500 spectators; the next, 400; the third, 400; and the fourth, 300. In this number those who form the procession, as the necessary supporters of the dignity of the City, were not include d.

The usual forms were gone through, and the Stone was lowered upon a brass plate bearing a Latin inscription, of which the following was circulated as a translation:—

"The free course of the River being obstructed by the numerous piers of the ancient Bridge, and the passage of boats and vessels through its narrow channels being often attended with danger and loss of life, by reason of the force and rapidity of the current, the City of London, desirous of providing a remedy for this evil, and at the same time consulting the convenience of Commerce in this vast emporium of all nations, under the sanction and with the liberal aid of Parliament, resolved to erect a bridge upon a foundation altogether new, with arches of a wider span, and of a character corresponding to the dignity and importance of this Royal City: nor does any other time seem to be more suitable for such an undertaking than when in a period of universal peace, the British Empire, flourishing in glory, wealth, population, and domestic union, is governed by a Prince, the Patron and Encourager of the Arts, under whose auspices the Metropolis has been daily advancing in elegance and splendour. The First Stone of this Work was laid by John Garratt, Esquire, Lord Mayor, on the XVth Day of June, in the Sixth Year of King George the Fourth, and in the Year of Our Lord M.D.CCC.XXV. John Rennie, F.R.S. Architect."

Robbery of the Prince of Saxe Cobourg's Carriage.—Late on Wednesday evening, as his Royal Highness Prince Cobourg was proceeding in his travelling carriage to London from Claremont, some thieves contrived to detach a portmanteau from the rear of the carriage, with which they got off unobserved, notwithstanding two footmen were sitting in the dickey immediately above. The robbery was not discovered till they reached town. The portmanteau contained a miscellaneous assortment of his Royal Highness's apparel of considerable value. It was supposed the robbery was effected while the carriage was passing over Wimbledon Common, by some of the numerous tribes of Gypsies encamped there. No trace has yet been discovered of the property.

Mr. Graham on Tuesday made his 24th ascent from the Bedford Arms Tavern, Camden Town. He was accompanied by two females, Mrs. Graham and Miss Eliza Beckett. The balloon ascended in very beautiful style, when the immense mass of persons sent forth an almost deafening shout as the aeronauts passed over them. This was one of the finest ascents that has been witnessed. After a pleasant voyage of nearly an hour, Mr. Graham and his fair companions alighted in perfect safety at Feltham, between three and four miles beyond Hounslow, and arrived in town about half-past twelve o'clock.

Weymouth, June 16.—Yesterday a public meeting of the inhabitants of this Borough and Town was held at the Guildhall; John Martin, Esq. (Mayor) in the chair, when an address was unanimously voted to the Duke of York, expressing their gratitude to his Royal Highness for his late constitutional speech delivered on the Catholic question, in the House of Peers, which is to be presented by the members of the Town.

Dublin, June 14.—The old Theatre, in Crow-street.—It has been at length determined that this mass of dilapidation shall be totally removed. A presentment which was traversed came on before the Recorder yesterday, and it appearing from the evidence of Mr. Neville, the City Surveyor, that a store at the corner of Cecilia-street, and the house immediately adjoining in Temple-lane, might be rendered perfectly safe by a slight repair, they have been ordered to stand. The remainder of the building, if it deserved that name, is to be taken down immediately.

Wednesday evening, as a lad about 15 years old, named Tudor, was bathing in the river, above Battersea-Bridge, he unfortunately got out of his depth, and before assistance could be procured, the youth was carried away down the stream and drowned.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We grieve to learn that Lord William Lennox has actually declined reading our Paper, of which we hear he complains in rather a bitter manner—but we do recommend his Lordship to cast his eye over it for one or two numbers to come, as he may perchance see something that may amuse this scion of the House of Richmond.

Dramaticus informs us that Madame Vestris has resigned her situation at the Opera, in consequence of the engagement of Signor Veluti. What can he have to do with her?

We have received a floundering letter from Smart, upbraiding us for not placing that touch of knighthood—Sir George—before his name—we can only say as we observed on a former occasion,

"Things that love night, love not such night as this."

We are surprized that Mr. Rowland Stephenson should be so severe upon us, for the simple statement we made last week, of his reported marriage with Miss Goodall—although a matter of perfect indifference, we should perhaps have passed, ere we stated it positively, knowing the many "slips between the cup and the lip" that have happened in his matrimonial speculations.

T. A. S. is answered in full.

A letter signed W. E. Jennings, and dated Cheltenham, has been received, ordering a discontinuance of the "Age" at the rooms in that place. If the said Jennings, who is the clerk of the Proprietors, should take the liberty of addressing us again, he must at least pay his postage, or his letter will be returned—but if he wants to keep the "Age" out of their News Room, he must apply to those Subscribers who weekly send it there, and not to us who should never dream of sending a single copy to such an insignificant place. If Jennings wants a spare paper let him apply to those two persons, one of whom hid the number with the article on General Molyneux in it, and another stole a copy out of the room—he knows the parties—let him apply to them, and tell them there will be something next week equally worth their attention.

Captain B.'s suggestions will not be disregarded.

Some information from authority which came too late for insertion, and which completely exonerates Lord Molyneux and Wilton shall positively appear in our next.

THE AGE.

LONDON, June 19.

It affords us the most heartfelt satisfaction to be enabled to announce to our readers that His Majesty enjoys uninterrupted good health, and that the exertions attendant on holding a Court on Thursday, and entertaining a splendid dinner and evening party on the following day has not made the slightest inroad on the present re-established state of His Majesty's constitution.

The nearer the time for a General Election approaches, the more conspicuous the Whigs are making themselves, for the purpose of creating a favourable impression towards them in the minds and dispositions of their constituents. A miserable instance of this determination was evinced on Wednesday last, in the celebration of what is called the Independence of Middlesex, on which occasion that magnanimous blockhead, Mr. Shaw Lefevre (the mention of whose name throws every body else into one) informed his brother Electors of the pleasure he felt in "presiding over the commemoration of the event!" The Chronicle, which is the organ of this fine affair, informs us that "the company was much less numerous, and consisted of fewer persons of distinction, than it remembered on any former occasion—that the dinner was barely tolerable—that the wine was infamous, and that the only persons present of any celebrity were Mr. Byng, Mr. Whitbread, Sir Francis Burdett, Mr Hobhouse, and Lord Nugent;" and our readers may therefore fancy what a splendid affair it was altogether, whether with reference to the provision, or to the precious assemblage of celebrity that came there to devour it. After the cloth was removed (as the old phrase goes) Non nobis Domine was sung by Mr. G. Smith (who, we perceived by the Gazette, just got out of the King's Bench in time to be present on the occasion), and others, when the Chairman, as a matter of decency, proposed the King's health; after which he gave "the Duke of Sussex, and the rest of the Royal Family," which reminds us very forcibly of the same kind of sentiment once given by the celebrated Colonel Hanger, which offended, and so justly, His present Majesty, when Prince of Wales; after which Mr. Fever—pshaw—Lefevre—we beg his pardon, after lamenting that so many of their friends had gone to lay the first stone of New London Bridge and were, at that moment, dining gratis with the Lord Mayor, begged to propose, without a note "the healths of Messrs. Byng and Whitbread, their worthy representatives." Of course poor Byng got up, and to those who have heard this foolish old fellow speak, we need not say another word—his harangue consisted of the usual quantity of flummery—heartfelt thanks—incapable of expressing himself (which nobody doubted)—he gave them his assurance (which was equally evident)—that no man in the county gave him an interested vote (which is neither more nor less—than that no man in the county took any interest about him)—that he should always appear before them with the fullest confidence (whereat they all laughed), and so on, when down he went; and Mr. Whitbread, the other bucket of this political well rose up, who managed to make himself really more ridiculous than we gave him credit for; and although there are not many particular passages in his speech worthy of comment, we cannot omit noticing that he told the company "he was one of those reformers who, if he could not obtain all he wished, would take all he could get!" which those who knew the brewers, never for a moment doubted—after which he concluded, in a most novel way, by "drinking all their very good healths!" The Chairman then gave the healths of "Burdett and Hobhouse, the upright Members for Westminster," in proof of which the former immediately stood as upright as possible, and amused the company with a long account of the wicked Mr. Pitt, whom he compared to Robespierre—he then entered upon the unprincipled war by which we were enabled to prevent the rest of the world from cutting our throats and [illegible] at the concomitants of Peace, which seemed to bother poor Byng's understanding confoundedly—of course the worthy Representative harped upon his favorite instrument of Reform, or there would have been no fun—and among other crying necessities for it, he alluded to the circumstance of many members, himself among the number, reaching the doors of the House to vote against the grant to the Duke of Cumberland five minutes after they were closed! The devil a bit did the debate concern him, or the rest of his friends, as long as they could sit in the adjoining coffee house, enjoy their wine, and just get in time to influence a division—and really taking an impartial review of this case, we think there is room for reform, though it was a good joke to think that these biters, who had calculated to within five minutes of their time, should be at last bit. After philandering throughout his usual metaphors and pleasantry, the baronet wound up by telling them that "such was the burthen of his song, which, like the Cuckoo's notes, generally saluted their ears about this time every year"—and, although no one present doubted his particular claim to that title, we understand there was a general hope entertained that the report of it might not reach the ears of Lady Burdett. As surely as Doctor Johnston told Boswell, on the latter accusing him of being a surly cur, that he was "a tin kettle tied to his tail," so surely, considered in the same light, does Hobhouse, (à la kettle,) follow Sir Francis—and he did so on this occasion. He congratulated his country on the possession of a Free Press, though there was no proof of it in the room, on the present anniversary—he then corrected his honourable colleague, who had called the House of Commons a Leopard, when he meant a Leper—and as every man admitted the absolute necessity of reform, the Electors of Middlesex would have the proud gratification of knowing they were instrumental in effecting it! Our readers will be surprized to know that this hint to the Electors to kick out their present Representatives at the next Election was received with shouts of applause—but so it was—he then thanked them for drinking his health, and at last sat down quite fatigued, when a Mr. Wolf and others sang the hunting chorus in Der Freischutz—and then on the proposition of the Chairman, the health of Lord Nugent was drank "with honors" as they call it at Hackney. This unwieldly nobleman then rose, and thanked them from the bottom of his heart—on hearing which (judging by his "outward man" what size that part of his heart must be) the whole room burst into an immoderate fit of laughter, which lasted some minutes. His Lordship then in a very modest manner "returned thanks to God" that he was one of those on whom the favors of constituents might with honour be bestowed—he was grateful to them for the honor of his seat in Parliament, and more so because it was given him on account of his fundamentally sound principles—the laughter here so much increased, that His Lordship had only time to express his admiration of the late Mr. Whitbread, which we have no doubt was very much to the purpose, as also of the principles of his son, "their worthy representative," when he resumed his seat! Of course Byng could not now do less than drink Mr. C. Shaw Lefevre, which as many of them as could stand managed to do, and Mr. C. Shaw Lefevre, as well as he could, returned thanks for the same; when a Mr. Huxley sang, "Over the water to Charlie." We hear that some other toasts were given, by which we presume that tea was served round to the few who remained after the secession of the immortal Chairman.

It is almost a pity, at least as far as respects the efforts of the Whigs, that by the intelligent and prudent councils of His Majesty's Ministers, the Empire is in so flourishing a state—that its revenue, owing to the prudent curtailments of office, is *in*creasing, though its burthens are *de*creasing—that its agriculture is thriving—its commerce prosperous—its associations and bonds of society united and firm—for if any one circumstance more than another were wanting to strengthen this happy communion of men and things, it is to be found in the miserable exhibition these political mountebanks hold up to their country, whenever they avail themselves of an opportunity to expose their miserable pretensions.

LITERARY INTELLIGENCE.

It is perhaps not generally known that the number of days in a year (365) multiplied by five, produces the date of the present year—1825.—Morning Post.

There really is no end to the genius and research of the Post.

In consequence of the reception of Mrs. Coutts at Court having been so fearlessly and fully commented upon by us, and so completely passed over or compromised by our cotemporaries, we are, as our readers may naturally suppose, overwhelmed with letters upon the subject, from all parts of the town and country; and although they are mostly a mass of the most incongruous stuff with which a Journal can well be assailed, we shall venture to make a selection from the rest, which appears to be the only one at all entitled to a reply. It is not the idle threats of an infatuated Lord, the vapourings of any poor dependant, or the bribed resentment of a hacknied scribe, that can in the least deter us from fulfilling what we consider to be an important public duty; and as no one argument hitherto advanced has shaken the validity of ours, we only quote the letter signed T. A. S. to convince him that his are very far from effecting the object they propose. The writer desires us to ask Lady Guildford the grounds on which she presented Mrs. Coutts; but all questions or remonstrances to this Lady would be perfectly useless, with the knowledge before us, that she felt so insensible to the [illegible] memory of her departed mother, as to be influenced in any conduct [illegible] to take a step to [illegible] the mind that would not reply to the suggestions its own conscience must have dictated, would feel but little inclination to answer the less imperative demands of public interrogatory. Our correspondent then directs our attention to the Marchioness of Worcester and Lady Aldborough, maintaining that the objection we made to the appearance of Mrs. Coutts is equally applicable to these ladies; but on that point, it is impossible for the writer to have betrayed a greater ignorance—for we maintain, that there can be no objection to the reception of either of those ladies, nor is there any kind of parallel between their cases and that of the last-named individual. My Lady Aldborough may formerly have had many lovers, in the most unlimited sense of the term; but her husband did not know it, or if he did, did not choose to take public notice of it, and consequently nobody could had a right to do so—she was never kept by a man whose wife was then living, or married a man while his wife was dead—she has never committed any other excesses with, though done as openly as it is possible to imagine, as yet considered sufficiently private to bar any general mention of their grossness—and under such circumstances it would be an act of great injustice, as well as impolicy to issue a prohibition which, as it could only rest on the vague foundation of report, in many cases excited by curiosity or envy, would, with equal application and truth, have reference to one-third of the whole number that attend. On the character of the Marchioness of Worcester we do not believe the most fastidious or the most scurrilous could by any ingenuity cast the slightest shadow of stain—her reputation is spotless—her conjugal and maternal conduct exemplary—and the only position on which our correspondent has ventured to create an objection, is one on which none can be raised. We are of course aware that she is the half-sister of the first Lady Worcester, but the marriage is not a void one, though it is voidable, provided proceedings were issued in the life time of her husband—but that is a circumstance we shrink from the contemplation of, and never hope to see—and should rejoice to find that Parliament passed some act that would put the matter beyond the possibility of doubt, as there are hundreds of marriages at this moment existing between persons precisely similarly situated in the inferior walks of life, which were contracted without the parties being aware of their possible illegality—and while the Legislature interfered in a much more summary and unwarrantable manner to establish the legitimacy of Lord Belfast, it can consequently furnish no excuse for refusing to interfere in such instances as the present. If it were in the least respect necessary, we could enlarge upon the statements that aid down by our Correspondent, but we feel assured, that on a perusal of these lines, not only himself but the other sceptics that have stepped forward to advocate the pensions of this infatuated woman, will see at once the fallacy of their arguments, and admit the application of ours; and although quite enough has been advanced on the present case, and we do not intend to open our columns to a further controversy on the subject; we shall not hesitate on any similar occurrence to state our feelings as plainly and unreservedly as we have herein done; which, exclusive of the pride of fulfilling our own duty, is urging the fulfilment of a similar duty by the nation at large.

FOUND A LADY'S RETICULE.

On Friday last, returning from Highgate where, as the Cockneys say, we had been "to inhale the breeze's perfume," we stumbled on a reticule, which we believe was dropped by some lady coming from Mrs. Coutts's dejeune. Not knowing to whom it belongs, we mention (as in the instance of the Nobleman's pocket book in former number) the contents of the same—which consisted of a pot of rouge very much used—bottle of eau de luce, love letter, six crossed bars, with an Earl's Coronet on the seal—ninth number of Harriette Wilson, and the following memoranda:—

Monday.—Went to the exhibition at Somerset House—met Alvanley—remembered his penchant for the "House of Somerset"—saw Jemmy Bradshaw—Alvanley hinted at his conversion to Popery, from his being so addicted to idol-a-tree.

Tuesday.—Went to see "the Battle of Waterloo" in the Park—met Anson there looking out for himself, in consequence of his late promotion—nonest inventions—Trench, of Quay notoriety, came in with Rutland's race—"Manners makes the man"—N.B. informed that Trench was gazetted for a proposal to set the Thames on fire! and Colonel Palmer for his management of the Bath Theatre! Went to Opera—saw Kang Cook in high spirits—quite clarified—Mrs. Orby Hunter trying to get rid of the "stock on hand"—secession of beaus this season—attributable to the marriage of Georgy, and the dismissal of the artiste du cuisine.

Wednesday.—Drove into Regent's Park—overtook William Lennox—his affection said to be more Platonic than Platonic—went to Almack's—notice given of A Ball for the benefit of "six unfortunate children," under the patronage of the Lady Patronesses—not exactly decided to whom they belong.

Thursday.—King's Drawing Room, very full—likely to be fuller next year, as many more applications are expected—"Ce n'est que la premiere pas qui Coute"—tortured by Chevalier the coiffeur before the Drawing Room—tortured by Chevalier William Elliott at it—reached home early—being fatigued with the drawing room, retired very soon to the bed room.

Friday.—Received a card for Mrs. Coutts's dejeune—reminded me of the time when she used to send me the same [illegible] for her [illegible]—went to Fire on Fray—Ba[illegible]

; an act to his wife!—Lord Chesterfield there, not th Madame Le Gros.

Saturday.—Waded through the Morning Post—saw Mrs. utts's 20 guinea advertisement—600*l.* for fruit and ex- cs—Luttrell, who came in, told us that in addition to ose purchased, the following were presented:

ne and Melon.....By Lord Burford.

We have been solicited, with a reference to the late otion of Counsellor Phillips in the case of Judge versus erkeley, to point out the conduct of the Plaintiff, and the nsequences likely to ensue from his calumniation of the De- ndant, which consequences are mentioned as consisting of e future general discountenance of Cheltenham, and more rticularly of the withholding all that patronage which the heatre in the said town has so long received, from the erformances and general support of the gentleman in uestion. Without at present entering into the merits or emerits of the action at issue between the parties, w ve no hesitation in affirming, that if the severities of r. Judge's criticisms have been the means of suspending e future performances of Colonel Berkeley and his iends on the Cheltenham Stage, he is entitled to the espe- ial thanks of the community at large, for removing from nem, in the first place, a general nuisance, and for hold- ng out, in the next place, to these infatuated personages he exact quality of their pretensions. It is an old but apt aying, that "a little learning is a dangerous thing," and here is no avocation relative to which the adage is half so rophetic as that of the stage—for in the present degene- ate days, so many men of fashion by a certain quantity of old, and a greater quantity of brass, obtain the entre of he London Green-rooms, learn by circumstance or ccident, a few of the technicalities, without an atom of ne knowledge of the profession, and thus equipped, no- hing on earth can induce them to believe but they are the ost scientific adepts of the art. Whether on the score f this presumption, or from a larger proportion of vani- y than falls to the lot of most men, Colonel Berkeley as been induced to "fool" upon the Cheltenham Stage, or some years past, we do not pretend to determine; but aving once (for which may we he hereafter forgiven!) sat ut an exhibition of "gentlemanly" performance in this c - - - are enabled to speak with a conviction on which we vant no other earthly opinion. A larger quantity of human lisfigurement than was seen on this occasion we defy the very barns of "Bartlemy" to present—legs where you least expected to find them, and arms where they were never in- ended to be—the eye, which should regulate and follow the lisposition of the stage, anxiously looking for the wing its master was to get off at, or revelling with assurance in the lress circle, and gazing with vacuity and alarm on the pit— he misapplication of dialogue and dramatic point—and pos- essing altogether no other qualification than a vastly fine suit of clothes. You may dress up a sweep on the 1st of May like monarch, but the identity terminates with the dress; nd in the instance of these gentlemen it is the more amentable, because their births and educations, which prove both their abilities and rank in private life, indicate nothing else, in public, but their buffoonery: for in ad- dition to the local means by which Berkeley's attempts have been stuffed down the throats of his auditors, Cap- tain Jenner, who figured away there with nearly equal claims, on the score of habitation, and with a name really an universal passport in that and most parts of the em- pire, could not, with all his father's greatness in the line, inoculate the water-drinkers with the least idea of his heatrical genius. In the instance of Colonel Berkeley, here is not one earthly excuse for his conversion to moun- ebankery, inasmuch as he does not possess one solitary qualification for the task; if a man has a fine figure, let him sport it in the drawing-room; if he is gifted with an un- derstanding, let him devote it to the high calling of his country—to the duties of her senate, or legislature—or to the adornments of society; and where, as in this instance, the splendid rank of ancestry is dazzling before his eyes, and within his reach, let him not tarnish its glory by any such vagabondry, when, in addition to all these considera- tions, he is really six feet of the worst dramatic stuff that ever "smelt the lamps." We have delivered our senti- ments exactly as we feel them; and although in so doing Colonel Berkeley has necessarily come under our lash, we do not entertain the slightest apprehension, as in the case of Mr. Judge, of coming under his: and as to the alarms and lamentings of our correspondents at Chelten- ham, we suspect Messrs. Yates and Farley will be the only losers in the business, if the offended Colonel should withhold the display of his resplendent genius from the inhabitants. We are well aware that these performances are devoted to charitable purposes—but half the money which it must cost these fashionable noodles, would make up for the loss of their important services, and the people would be thus spared such an annual infliction, and the parties the consequent disgrace of any future public ex- posure.

A certain fascinating actress, whose love affairs have lately occupied so large a share of public attention, has, we hear, found a new and favoured swain in a city wine merchant.—Morning Herald.—What will Ninny say to this?

HIGHGATE DEJEUNE.

Air and Chorus.—"Here's Coutts in a bumper wherever she goes."

Would you know the grand cause of this grand raree-show,
Why London is emptied and carriages filling,
Why spendthrifts from Bond-street, and bankers from Bow,
Have gone all their finest array up the Hill in?
'Tis the breakfast at Highgate—that chaste fairy scene
Where Ladies of Virtue alone are admitted:
Where Diana herself, of morality Queen—
Should she come, must be tried, and condemned or acquitted.
We shall presently see
Who the votaries be—
But first let us venture a toast to propose,
With bowls to their brinks,
As she always drinks—
"Here's Coutts in a bumper wherever she goes!"

First, old Lady Lansdowne, whom Lady Clare cut
Because she was once such a friend of Peg Plunkett's;
But the Marchioness minds not that libellous slut,
While she at all fours with Lauderdale junkets!
Another old woman came—Goruon's great Duke,
Who made a mistake with the lass of a hovel,
Then married, in spite of the people's rebuke,
A sort of Balchristie in Walter Scott's novel.
His Grace with a nod Began thanking God*
"He was ninety years old"—and then, blowing his nose,
Gave out with full glee,
And with three times three,
"Here's Coutts in a bumper wherever she goes!"

There was next Lady Coventry, very well known
As the fair one to whom the Count Peletier came wooing;
And her husband, because he's as blind as a stone,
Could'nt see the least error in what they were doing.
Then came Lady * * * * * * * * * leaving a sigh,
Because they omitted to ask my Lord Bingham;
And fearing that no other person was nigh
Who knew all her virtues, or so well could sing 'em.
However they both
Were not the least loth
To join as oft as the company rose,
In measures, as large
As their hostess, to charge---
"Here's Coutts in a bumper wherever she goes!"

Lady Tankerville too—and as Tommy Moore sings,†
So Walpole believes (for 'tis quite delightful)
By day to read through all De Grammont's fine things,
And by night of De Grammont to have your arms quite full.
St. Antonio's Countess too—partial to play,
Before she was married, with young Keppel Craven;
And then Charlotte Durham, who set, as they say,
Not any one man, but all the town, raving!
They wouldn't have shrunk
When the Mistress was drunk—
And therefore as oft as the rest of them chose,
They fail'd not to toast,
With reciprocal boast,
"Here's Coutts in a bumper wherever she goes!"

There were numerous others of virtue as great,
Or virtue as easy—that's one and the same thing;
For this kind of liason, most people state,
Unless rather open, is rather a tame thing!
Let us look at the men then who joined the raff,
In morals and goodness whose principal trade is—
And I really believe you will muster by half
More virtue in them, than there is in the ladies!
They vied, one and all,
To answer a call
Which the taste of their Hostess so forcibly shows;
And with glasses in hand,
Drank, while they could stand,
"Here's Coutts in a bumper wherever she goes!"

There was Deerhurst, the purest among the whole lot,
Yet it would have been better if he had been farther;
Though it's probable too, that he really forgot,
They might ask (which they did) his friend General Arthur.
'Tis vastly delightful, I havn't a doubt,
Of a gentleman's wife for another to ease him;
It matters not much if he isn't found out,
But when once he is, why—it may not quite please him.
They nevertheless
Both met at the mess,
And (as any who all their morality knows Might by them do the same)
They drank to the Dame—
"Here's Coutts in a bumper wherever she goes!"

Then Marlborough happen'd to drive up that way
To pay his respects to the ladies, in passing,
But most of them thought, what he'd much better pay—
Were the numerous debts he had long been amassing!
There was Valletort looking as much like a goose
As he does, when he doses the House with his speaking;
And seem'd as at Woburn he just was let loose,
Because it was clear he a Duchess was seeking!!
This notable pair
Getting up to declare
To the thirst for this drinking they neither were foes;
Gave with measure more full
Than that of their skull,—
"Here's Coutts in a bumper wherever she goes!"

The players were singing and dancing all day,
The servants had two-shilling tickets for eating;
And it was not till twilight had melted away—
That the company melted, or thought of retreating.
His Highness Prince Leopold's last on the list,‡
Who ey'd the old Landlady, longing to win her;
And as he went out some refreshments were mist,
Which, 'tis said, went to town for the family dinner!!
His Highness then said—
"A tought in mine head,
Is best de amusemens and evening to close;
"Vor, while she can sink,
I begs leave do drink—
"Here's Coutts in de bumper—and den down she goes!"

* After a lapse of an hour, the Duke of Gordon said, "I have, by the blessing of God, just attained my 90th year and I feel highly honoured in proposing the health of Mrs. Coutts, with three times three."—Morning Post.

FASHIONABLE MISCELLANY.

On Tuesday His Majesty held a Court at his Palace in Pall Mall, which was attended by the Lord Chancellor, the First Lord of the Treasury, the Secretary of State for the Home Department, the Master General of the Ordnance, the President of the Board of Trade, the President of the Board of Controul, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, the Lord Chamberlain, the Lord Steward of the Household, the Comptroller of the Household, the Treasurer of the Household, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench, the Judge of the Admiralty Court, the Recorder of London, and the Earl of Plymouth.

His Royal Highness the Duke of York, attended by his Staff, inspected the 3d Battalion of the Grenadier Regiment of Guards, of which he is Colonel, on Wednesday morning, in Hyde Park. The Battalion received the Commander-in-Chief with the general salute; after wheeling back from line into open column, the Battalion in review order passed his Royal Highness in slow and quick time, and at quarter distance. The marching, wheeling, and firing of the corps were admirable, and the whole of the manœuvres were well performed. The Duke expressed himself highly pleased with the manner in which the evolutions were executed.

On Wednesday the King gave a most splendid Gala at Carlton Palace to his illustrious relatives, some foreigners of distinction, several of his Cabinet Ministers, the great Officers of State, and a numerous assemblage of nobility. Those invited to dinner amounted to upwards of forty.

A most spirited and faithful likeness of His Royal Highness the Duke of York has just been published by Mr. Sams, to which we have much pleasure in directing the particular attention of the public—it is engraved by Reynolds, from a painting by Jackson, and, whether with reference to the fidelity of the artist or the copyist, may be considered in every respect a perfect resemblance of this illustrious Individual.

By way of creating a most formidable resistance to its progress through a Committee, to which it will appear by our Parliamentary report the Equitable Loan Bill has been referred, that magnanimous sample of city stupidity, Mr. Robert Waithman, moved on Thursday last, in the Court of Common Council, the presentation of a petition to the House of Lords, praying that counsel and evidence might be heard against it before a committee of their Lordships. If this motion had proceeded from any other person in the whole Court, we should really have felt a degree of surprize, but nothing that Waithman does or says can ever again create such a feeling in our minds; for when it is possible that a man can commit himself in the many respects this fellow has, there is no effort of his intellect entitled to momentary consideration; but in order that no person, with even a more common capacity than Waithman himself, may be misled by this bare-faced attempt at something, we shall take the liberty of placing the position in its true light. The general grounds of this attack on the Company are so ably answered by a correspondent, in another part of our paper, that we shall not entertain this part of the question at all, but examine into the causes of the charges thus brought forward, and the character of the person who has had the impudence to advance them. Mr. Robert Waithman, though generally considered a linen-draper at the corner of Fleet-street, may, without much impropriety, be designated a pawnbroker, inasmuch we could remind him of many instances in which he has carried on the trade to a tolerably good tune, for it is by no means an uncommon thing for a lady of fashion to make a nominal purchase of a shawl at his counter for one hundred and twenty guineas, for a night's use, and call on the Alderman the next morning to receive back one hundred in return for the same, provided it is not soiled or damaged; by which means the sum of twenty guineas is secured for one night's wear! If this is any thing else than pawning, and pawning to some purpose, we resign all pretensions, for the future, to the commonest order of understanding. Every one knows the old joke of the shawls between Cooper and Co. and Waithman, as also the opinion expressed by Lord Kenyon of Master Robert, relative to the case of Stamford versus Briston, and yet in the face of these recollections, he has the hardihood to bring before the Common Council a tissue of falsehoods, merely for the purpose of attempting to invalidate a bill that goes directly to militate against a very profitable part of his own trade. Ignoraut as Waithman is, it is impossible that one person in a hundred can be so blind as to be deceived by the tirade got up by him on this occasion, which amounts exactly to this position—"it was understood in the committee that no evidence with respect to the Pawnbrokers was to be brought forward; but that the evidence was to comprehend other branches of trade. Now the only other branch of trade that Waithman cares one fig about, is the one in which he himself is engaged, and as this by our shewing is decidedly that of a Pawnbroker, the shallow quality of his argument at once falls to the ground, as no evidence relative to them was to be brought forward! If this man's motion had the common attainment of common sense about it, if it professed an object worth consideration, we would give it all it was entitled to; but when its sole purport is to heap the most unfounded calumny on a High and respectable body, the principles of whose company he has not the capacity to comprehend, we laugh it to scorn—and taking into calculation the respectability of the calumniater's character, we recommend him in a very common adage to remember "before he throws stones at other persons, the windows in his own shop are made of glass."

It is not, however, either the abuse of Waithman, which is the dernier resort of the worst description of Pawnbrokers, the bribed efforts of the Press, or the blustering and scrutiny of Lord Lauderdale in the Committee, that can prevent the progress of this Bill for having gone through the preamble already, it will be reported in the course of the ensuing week, and passed, in our opinion, beyond the shadow of a doubt.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE AGE.

SIR—As a friend to the principle of the Equitable Loan Company, I beg to call the attention of the public to some recent illiberal and unfounded imputations, by which it is sought to asperse the character of the individuals forming that Company. I perceive by the papers of yesterday, that Alderman WAITHMAN has again made the Equitable Loan Company the subject of coarse and vulgar attack in the Court of Common Council, and again endeavored, by a gross misrepresentation of facts, to create a prejudice in the public mind against it.

Sir, had the worthy Alderman confined himself to mere abusive language, I should not have thought it worthy of any public notice, for, as a matter of taste, I would prefer his vituperation to his praise. He has, however, gone beyond that, and must take the consequence of his temerity in putting forth statements which he either knew to be unfounded, or which he had not the prudence to examine before he uttered them. His first assertion is, that out of 40,000 shareholders, only 6,000 have signed the Trust-Deed. Now it is impossible that Mr. WAITHMAN could have been so ignorant as not to know that there never were 40,000, or even 6,000, or half that number of shareholders in the Company: but a man of his great mind is above an attention to petty details, where his object is to produce an effect by a sweeping assertion. It is easy to perceive what he was driving at on this occasion—his intention was no doubt to create an impression that some trick was intended, by shewing that the great majority of the Proprietors are unwilling to sign the deed.

Now I will suppose this to be the fact (for the sake of argument) and I ask, what does it prove? It will prove this, that 34,000 shareholders, out of 40,000, are determined to relinquish their shares, and the deposits made on them, for for that must be the case if they refuse to sign the deed. If this were to happen, how would it affect the Alderman's view of the question. It would either put an end to the company, or it would not. If it should destroy the company, the worthy Alderman (according to his principles,) ought to hail it as a public benefit; if it should not, then those shares must be made good and the capital paid upon them by some parties, who will stand in the same situation, and will have the same means of conferring benefit or injury on the public, as the Company now possess. As an argument against the company therefore this is rank nonsense, and shews only the ignorant malevolence of the party using it. The same reasoning will apply to the Alderman's statements respecting the Vice Presidents and the Directors, (supposing those statements to be correct.) The Company will still have all the means of being publicly useful, as long as its capital exists, and if all the present Vice Presidents and Directors were to quit the Company now, (than which nothing is more improbable), the holders of shares in so extensive an undertaking will always be able to find among their body men sufficiently intelligent to conduct its affairs with advantage to the proprietors. I repeat, sir, that it matters not, who holds the shares, the capital being once subscribed, the business must be carried on equally well, whether that capital stand in the name of 40,000 individuals, or of 40.

So much for the Alderman's logic;—now for his facts—

He says that none of the Directors possess more than 20 shares, and then confidently asks what has become of the promise that each Director was to hold 300 shares! Sir, I do not think I can answer the question more effectually than by here inserting an extract from an official communication made by Sir W. CONGREVE, as Chairman of the Company, on this very subject. The communication is dated the 4th of this month, and is addressed to a Nobleman. It says—

"An anonymous paper has been privately, but assiduously circulated, imputing to the Vice-Presidents, Directors, Auditors, and Officers of the Equitable Loan Bank, an unworthy abandonment of the Company, and a sale of shares that has deprived them of all interest in the undertaking, and the public of all security for its good conduct and success.

"Indignant at such imputations, the Board of Directors have instituted an inquiry, and I have the satisfaction, as Chairman of the Board, to learn, that besides the great number of shares distributed by them among many wealthy, active, and benevolent friends, the officers of the Company are themselves, at this moment, in possession of more than eighteen thousand shares; as the following statement will show:

	Shares.
In possession of the Vice-Presidents, Directors, Auditors, and Officers of the Company	18,015
Distributed by the Directors amongst their immediate Friends	4,333
Distributed by the Directors to the Public	10,640
Sold by some of the Directors	5,027
Not issued	1,985
	40,000

"How, then, my Lord, have we forfeited our responsibility to the Public? Can it be contended that the possession, at this moment, of more than eighteen thousand Shares, out of forty thousand, the whole Capital of the Company, does not constitute a sufficient responsibility?

"We have been accused of some illegality of proceeding, in reference to what is called the Bubble Act! but how stands the real offence in this case? The Statute against which we are said to have offended, was obsolete and forgotten, and is now admitted to be so anomalous and absurd, that it is actually on the point of repeal: not to mention that thirty-four Acts have been allowed to pass, since the enactment of this Statute, under similar circumstances to our own, but without similar imputation.

"It has been insinuated, also, that many of the Shares have found their way into the hands of persons who have not the means of fulfilling their engagements. My Lord, were this assertion true (which it is not), the Public could be no losers; since the business done by this Institution can never exceed the amount of capital actually invested—while, by the Articles of the Deed of Trust, every Share that is not signed for, is forfeited; and by the same Deed, the Shares that are not paid up, even after signature, are also forfeited.

"My Lord, if ever there was an Institution to which the word Bubble cannot apply, it is the Equitable Loan Bank, both as it affects the Public and the Subscribers. False representations may be made as to the probable success of a Canal, a Rail-way, or a Mine; but the advantages of a Mont de Piete speak for themselves. To facilitate the Relief of Distress must ever confer the greatest benefit on the public; and it is self-evident, that the needy will prefer a Loan of Money at Ten per Cent. instead of borrowing it at Twenty.

Hence, therefore, the entire success of the Equitable Loan Bank is certain; and it is to the indisputable truth of this proposition that we owe all the opposition we have encountered."

If it be asked why the parties holding shares to this amount have not yet signed the deed, or have signed only for twenty shares, when they held so many more? I answer that it was not necessary until the Bill was in a state of forwardness—but the parties are ready to sign whenever they may be so called upon. No definite period could hitherto be fixed for the signature. As soon as the measure receives the sanction of the Legislature, of which there is now no doubt, a period will be fixed for the signing of the deed, and all persons who delay to sign, after such period must forfeit their deposits and shares; but it can make no difference as to the merits of the Company, if some proprietors should defer signing until the last moment allowed.

The Alderman most grievously laments, that shares were bought and sold by the Directors of this Company. If that is an objection, then few of the Companies now in existence are legal, for shares have been bought and sold in almost every one of them before they obtained their Act of Parliament. If the worthy gentleman has no more forcible objection than this—if he cannot shew the injurious tendency of the Company, if he cannot rebut the evidence given in proof of its utility, let him spare himself the trouble of opposing the measure on the ground of its "tendency to violate an Act of Parliament"—Tendency to violate an Act of Parliament!!! This is rather a ticklish subject for Alderman WAITHMAN to touch upon; but some men will not let well alone.

He has however threatened "to expose the delusion," in which he asserts this Company is founded. I defy him to the proof;—I challenge him to the attempt, and I undertake, if he makes it, to demonstrate one by one the gross fallacy of his statements. I shall prove from his own mouth, or from the mouths of his witnesses, if he should call an honest one—that in promulgating such statements as he has made with respect to this Company, he is himself the dupe of some designing knaves, who have imposed on his credulity, or that the whole of this farrago about "exposing hypocrisy," "unmasking delusion," &c. &c. is nothing less than a piece of jugglery preparatory to a start at the ensuing election. Again and again I call on him, and say, if he can prove the delusion, let him do so. Indeed, I expected that he would have been down at the Committee of the House of Lords on Friday, with his proofs, in fulfilment of his promise of the day before—but no: the committee met and unfortunately the noble Lords were obliged to try and get on as well as they could without him. He never shewed his face there during the day. I once more repeat my call—"prove your charge, Mr. WAITHMAN, or even your civic dignity will not protect you from the suspicion of casting imputations which you know to be unfounded."

The worthy Alderman complains of libels on him, and says, that after two months search he has discovered their author,—If he has, let him take his remedy. The mention of this fact, however, would be knew not be of much value to him, unless he could in some way connect it with the Equitable Loan Company; and therefore, we are told of the "curious" incident, of his having also discovered, that this libeller was paid by a check drawn on the Bankers of the Company, and signed by the Directors!

Now this I pronounce to be a gross fabrication. I will not be so uncourteous as to suppose that the Alderman himself has the merit of its invention—but I do say, that with whomsoever it originated, it is utterly destitute of foundation.—If it be true, nothing can be more easy of proof. Will the worthy Alderman favour the public with any proof of its truth? The tale did very well for the meridian of Guildhall, and no doubt had a "prodigious" effect among the "wise men" of the Common Council. As an assertion, however, it has this defect, (a trifling one perhaps with the worthy Alderman), IT IS NOT TRUE!

A FRIEND TO FAIR PLAY.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Insults continue to be offered to Mr. Brownlow in various parts of Ireland, in consequence of his conduct on the Catholic Question. The Newry Paper of Thursday last contains the following article:—"A Correspondent informs us that at Newtownhamilton, on Wednesday evening last, an effigy of Mr. Brownlow, dressed and decorated according to the fancy of the individuals concerned, was burned in the presence of an immense concourse of spectators; between three and four thousand, he says, were assembled. Neither the Magistracy nor the Police interfered on the occasion; and, after the ceremony of burning was gone through, the people separated in a peaceable manner. The following were among the inscriptions on the effigy:—'Judas sold the Saviour of the world for thirty pieces of silver.'—'Esau sold his birth-right for a morsel of meal.'—'Behold the Traitor.'"—(Newry Telegraph.)

The Macclesfield Hunt, after a duration of nearly 70 years, is at length broken up. The great increase of operative population, and the great decrease (from one cause or another) of country, has rendered such a measure imperative. A part of the hounds are drafted to the Stockport.

A bill is now before Parliament for the better preservation of peace and good order in the Universities of England, by which the Chancellor or Vice Chancellor is authorised to appoint constables within the precincts of the University. In the absence of the Chancellor or Vice-Chancellor, any Pro-Vice Chancellor or Deputy Vice-Chancellor may execute the powers of this Act. By another clause it is enacted, that common prostitutes and night walkers shall be deemed idle and disorderly persons within the meaning of the Act of last Session, and may be apprehended and dealt with accordingly.

The fight between Sampson, the Birmingham Youth, and Jem Burn, took place on Tuesday, about twenty-eight miles from town, within the confines of Bedfordshire, the parties having been chaced from Hertfordshire by the Magistrates.—The contest lasted an hour and ten minutes, during which time twenty-three rounds were fought, when Jem being quite exhausted and nearly blind, gave in; he fought bravely to the end, though it was easy to see that he stood no chance after the third round. Sampson was led away amid the shouts of his friends. He did not show one scar on his face, although his eye was swelled. In point of science Burn was certainly the better of the two, but Sampson displayed the greatest coolness, and met his man with a tremendous welcome. Burn seemed anxious to take the lead after the first four rounds and finish it, but Sampson was not to be out-generalled. The fight was more a specimen of tactics than hard hitting, but Sampson would not fight but when compelled, until the 18th round, when he took the advantage of Jem's blindness, and set to in earnest. The vanquished was woefully punished.

The demand in France for English riding horses is increasing in a most unprecedented manner. For two months past, there have been daily arrivals at a restaurateur's, in the Haymarket, of French horse-dealers, who have come hither for the express purpose of purchasing riding and cabriolet horses.

A new toll has lately been begun to be collected on the road leading from the Portland-road to Camden Town, by the Jew's Harp.

It appears from one of the New York papers last received, that the barristers of that great commercial State have formed themselves into a committee, for the purpose of devising some remedy for the delays of justice, incident to their present judiciary system. The head of the committee is Mr. THOMAS ADDIS EMMETT, an advocate of high reputation, and brother of that unfortunate but most eloquent youth, whose story is written in bloody characters in the annals of Irish suffering, and its natural consequence, Irish rebellion!—Times.

The cheese, which was forwarded to Davies Davenport and Wilbraham Egerton, Esqrs., representatives for Cheshire, for presentation to the Duke of York, reached its destination on Monday, and was then sent to his Royal Highness, with the address. The following is his Royal Highness's answer.—

"Horse-Guards, June 13.

"Sir,—I have to acknowledge the receipt of the address which you and Mr. Egerton have been instructed to present to me from certain of the loyal inhabitants of the city of Chester, and to request you will assure them of the sense I entertain of the friendly terms in which they have expressed themselves in regard to the line of conduct which I have felt it my duty to pursue upon the subject of the Catholic question. I must further request, that you will convey to them my best thanks for the cheese which they have been so kind as to send to me.

"I am, Sir, yours,

We understand that Mr. GEORGE HAYTER has just returned from Rheims, where he made a number of very fine sketches, for a large picture of the coronation of CHARLES THE TENTH. It is hardly necessary for us to say, that this will be one of the most splendid productions of the English School; as the great talents of the Painter, and the picturesque beauties of the scene, must be generally known to our readers.

The will of the late Bishop of Salisbury was proved in Doctors' Commons on the 9th instant, by Dorothea Fisher, widow, the relict, as the sole executrix. The personals were sworn under 20,000*l.*

We are informed that the paragraph which has appeared respecting Lieutenant Clapperton, is erroneous. However extraordinary and successful the discoveries of the gallant Officer have been in other respects, we are authorised positively to state, that he has not been so fortunate as to obtain any journal or manuscript which formerly belonged to the late Mr. Park.

Bristol, June 13.—The Palmerston steam packet ran aground yesterday morning, about three o'clock, on the sands, close under the Nash Point, between St. Dennis and Marcross; all the crew and passengers, with part of their baggage, were saved: and it is hoped that the steam boat will be got off the next tide. There were about 150 troops on board and 50 passengers, among whom were the Rev. Dr. Cummings, his wife, and family; the Rev. J. Taylor, and Mr. Hillhouse.

Westminster Infirmary for diseases of the Eye.—A public meeting was held yesterday at the Thatched House Tavern, St. James's Street, for the purpose of raising a sum by subscription, to erect a building for the above charity. His Grace the Duke of Wellington being called to the Chair, the Secretary read the report since the last meeting; by which it appeared that the Court of Directors of the East India Company, has subscribed 105*l.*; Lord Hardwicke 50*l.*; John Angerstein, Esq., 50*l.*; Prince Leopold, 25*l.*; besides several other sums from Noblemen, Gentlemen, &c.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—FRIDAY.

ABERNETHY v. THE LANCET.

The LORD CHANCELLOR having declared his intention of giving judgment in this important cause, the court at an early hour was much crowded.

His LORDSHIP on entering the court, commenced his judgment. This was a motion, he observed, for an injunction to restrain the publishers of the Lancet from communicating to the world the lectures of Mr. Abernethy, and had been argued on three grounds:—A violation of literary property; a breach of trust, and of implied contract. At the conclusion of his former observations, he raised the questions, whether, if these publishers were pupils, they would not be guilty of a breach of an implied contract in publishing to the world lectures, which it was intended never should be so published; or, if they were not pupils, but obtained their information through some one or other of the pupils, they would not be guilty of such a violation of trust, as would warrant the interference of that court to the extent now prayed? The importance of the quest on had led him to advise with the Common Law Judges on the subject, who were unanimously of opinion, that if the publication were by a pupil, an action for damages would lie against him, as the Common Law would assume an implied contract, or that if the publication were by a person who received his information through the pupil, and there was no other way in which he could receive it, a similar action would lie against the person thus publishing, for the law would not permit that which could only be obtained by fraud, to be employed by a third party to the injury of the person in whom the property existed. In this view of the law, he perfectly concurred; and it was well for the protection of that large and meritorious class of individuals—our public lecturers—that such was the law. On the whole, he was of opinion, that if had been made satisfactorily to appear, that this publication was effected by either a breach of implied contract or of trust, and, on either of these grounds, Mr. Abernethy was entitled to the injunction prayed.

Motion granted.

In the course of the morning, the LORD CHANCELLOR said, that he should not be able to sit in that court to-morrow, as he had to attend the Privy Council on a case of a very pressing and important nature, and on which it was thought necessary to have the assistance of the Lord Chancellor, the two Chief Justices, and the Chief Baron.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.

DUNCAN v. TREND.—When this was called on, Mr. HOLT rose to beg that it might be put off till Mr. Brougham should be in Court.

LORD-CHIEF-JUSTICE—If you can tell us what to go on with, we will accede to your proposition.

The notes of the trial being read by the Lord-Chief-Justice,

Mr. HOLT, in the absence of Mr. Brougham, proceeded. In this case there was a verdict for the defendant, and I have to show cause against a rule for a new trial obtained by the plaintiff. The ground on which Mr. Attorney-General made his application is very singular. He contends that when the fact of publication is made out in evidence, the jury have only to turn round and find a verdict for the plaintiff. When any person has once been acquitted on a charge of personal tort, it has been decided, over and over again, that there cannot be a new trial. Thus, in a case which was tried here, though no where reported, but which your lordships' well remember, in which an action was brought against a Mr. Beresford, a fellow of Merton-college, for criminal conversation with the plaintiff's wife, he was acquitted, and the court unanimously refused a new trial, though on the very evidence on which he was acquitted the plaintiff went to the House of Lords and obtained a divorce.

LORD CHIEF-JUSTICE—You are wrong, Mr. Holt; he did produce other evidence in the House of Lords. It was a letter which the rules would not permit to be read as evidence against the defendant in the ROYAL WESTMINSTER INFIRMARY.——At an Adjourned Meeting of the Noblemen and Gentlemen, supporters of the Royal Westminster Infirmary for Diseases of the Eye, Warwick-street, Golden-square, held at the Thatched House, June 18,

The DUKE of WELLINGTON in the Chair:
It was moved by the DUKE of RICHMOND, and seconded by LORD LYNEDOCH, that the Report of the Committee be printed.

"That during the year 1824, 1402 persons of all ages have been admitted to the benefits of the Charity, making a total of 9527; of which number 302 have been restored to sight by the different operations of cataract, &c., some at a very advanced period of life, and many who were born blind. The Committee earnestly entreat the charity and benevolent exertions of the Governors and the Public, and, in an especial manner, draws their attention to the Building Fund, commenced under the auspices of his Royal Highness the Duke of York, the Patron, at the Anniversary Dinner at which his Royal Highness presided, for procuring a Building which should place the Infirmary on a permanent footing. The Committee, in recommending to the liberality of the Public this Fund, have done so from seeing the inadequacy of the house now annually rented, for the reception of either out or in-patients; of the former, from one hundred and ten to one hundred and sixty are collected together on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, in rooms not affording decent accommodation for half that number, and the consequence is great confusion and irregularity. Of in-patients six only can be received, whilst there are urgent demands for three times that number; and cases of great distress of the six now in the House; two are from Ireland, and one from Scotland, without one farthing in their possession, one from Hampshire, one from Buckinghamshire, and one only who lives usually in London. Of these, four have undergone operations for cataract and artificial pupil, and the remaining two have lost one eye each, were taken into the Infirmary to save the others, which has been done. Of the applicants for admission who cannot be received for want of room, one is a pensioner of the 88th regiment, now blind, yet susceptible of some relief; the second is also a pensioner of Chelsea Hospital, similarly situated; the third a poor labourer from Sunbury; the fourth from Poplar, and for whom the Overseers of the Poor are willing to pay, if he could be received; the fifth a sailor from Wapping; the sixth a man formerly a respectable tradesman, but now in poverty from blindness; with several other cases of acute disease, which may be seen by any charitable persons on the regular days of attendance."

EMMETT'S QUEEN'S GOLD AND SILVER EYED NEEDLES.—T. EMMETT, (late Trott,) Pin, Needle, and Fish-Hook Maker, (by appointment) to their late Majesties, wholesale and retail, No. 27, Holborn Hill, London. Established upwards of a century. Pins of every description. Needles, bead, betweens, blunts, book-binders, carpet, chemise, cottoning, cross-stitch, embroidering, glovers, gromdowns, harness, lambing, looping, mattress, netting, packing, quilting, rug, saddlers, sail, sharps, surgeon, tambour, veining, yarn, &c. Fish-hooks, lines, and tackle; gilt, plated, black and white Hooks and Eyes. Thimbles, gold, silver, metal, white steel, &c., steel thimbles, lined with silver; bodkins, knitting pins, meshes, cap-pins, quilters, &c.; improved travelling and dressing cases, with complete fittings; work-boxes, reticules, and needle-cases, in tortoiseshell, Morocco, and Russia leather, &c.; cutlery; scissors, pen-knives, razors, tweezers, &c.; combs, fancy, gilt, and steel goods, beads, bracelets, buckles, centres, clasps, corkscrews, ear-rings, elastic girdles, neck chains, necklaces, purse snaps, reticules, slides, tassels, watch chains, ditto guards, and every other article in the fancy line; gilt, silvered, and coloured lustre pins, hair pins, needle and brass points; brass, copper, and elastic wire.—A liberal allowance to merchants, captains and others.

By the King's Royal Letters Patent, granted May, 1825.

PAYNTER and HAWKE respectfully solicit the Nobility, Gentry, and Public, to inspect their new-invented PATENT FIRE FEEDER, the novelty and utility of which will be found to exceed that of any other invention of late years. It supplies fires with coal, or any other fuel for the whole of the day without the use of the coal-scoop, or the attendance of domestics; prevents dirt and dust, and also materially lessens the quantity of fuel which is required in the ordinary method. It is used with great ease, and can be attached to any stove in common use, without being exposed to view.—To be seen at their Manufactories, Nos. 178 and 282, Strand, near Norfolk-street, also at No. 7, Cheapside, corner of St. Paul's Churchyard, where it is kept in daily use.—N. B. Shower, vapour, warm, and cold baths, on entire new principles.

FEATHERS, FEATHER BEDS and MATTRASSES.—W. TIBBATTS, Feather Bed, Mattrass, Bedstead, and Sea Bedding Manufacturer, No. 303, HIGH-HOLBORN, near Chancery-lane, begs leave to return thanks to his friends and the public in general, for the very liberal support he has met with, and assures them that no pains shall be spared on his part to supply them with good clean Bedding at fair and moderate prices, not pretending to sell cheaper than other tradesmen; but to sell such goods as will always be a credit to himself, and really serviceable to his customers. W. T. trusts by assiduity and perseverance, and an honorable mode of conducting business, still to merit the favours of a generous and discerning public.—Families Furnishing and Taveru Keepers, will find their advantage.

 Bedsteads made to order, but no fixed price, as the Proprietor is determined not to sell trash of any description, and knows, as a man of business, that it is impossible to make Bedsteads at the price some tradesmen advertize.—Schools liberally supplied.

It is the Proprietor's particular request that those families who honour him with their commands, will send their servants, or some trusty friend, to see the Feathers put into the Ticks, and by that means prevent any possibility of being deceived, and have the great advantage of buying their Feathers by weight, so that it will remain entirely with themselves what price they give for Beds.—Persons fearful of not having their Feathers quite dry, may see them put into their Ticks, hot from the Stove.

PERRING'S PATENT DOUBLE EDGED SILK HATS.—PERRING (original inventor of this justly celebrated Hat,) invites the members of fashion, taste, and fancy, to his establishments, 413, Strand, and at Hammersmith. The Peer, the Gentleman, the Man of Fash on, the Tradesman, and the Sportsman, here find a hat suited to their wants, and worthy their peculiar notice. Little need be said respecting the qualities or advantages of the Hats in question; suffice it to say, they possess what every good manufactured Hat ought to do. Public estimation is the best criterion to preference, and it is fully borne out in the universal satisfaction and esteem in which these inimitable Hats are held. The double-edged Silk Hat differs from all others in possessing an extra quantity of napping on that part of the crown most exposed to wear, thereby removing that long-existing prejudice against them. Price 17s.

Best Superfine light Beaver Hats, in a variety of modern shapes, warranted to retain their shape and colour in any climate, 23s.

Youth's Silk Hats, Gentleman's and Youth's Seal and Fur Furage Caps, Young Ladies' Hats and Bonnets, Hats covered with Silk and double edged, 12s.

Their manufactory for STRAW and "ITALIAN" LEGHORN HATS is detached from the Shew Rooms which now form a magazine of novelty for the season. Childrens' Leghorn Hats of choice fabric, as imported. French Flowers and Trimmings. Ladies' Leghorns continue to be bleached in the Italian style, 344, Strand, nearly opposite Waterloo Bridge.

BRADBERRY'S PATENT SPECTACLES, upon unerring principles, to preserve the sight to extreme old age. It is necessary to caution the public against the use of improper Spectacles, as their effects prove injurious, instead of beneficial to the eye. The unremitted and anxious study Mr. Bradberry has paid to his glasses for upwards of thirty years, has called forth the most distinguished approbation of their merit from the Medical profession, and from many thousand of persons of the highest rank and respectability.—To be had only at 28, Holles-street, the first door out of Oxford-street, next to the large Fruiterer's at the corner, facing Hanover-square, and at no other place in the United Kingdom. Orders from the country immediately attended to. Removed from 332, Oxford-street.

THE BRITISH SPECIFIC, for re-producing and promoting the GROWTH of HAIR.—The principle of its operation is to cool and contract the pores which are opened by a redundancy of heat, occasioning a relaxation of the roots, that render them incapable of retaining the hair; to counteract which nothing is better calculated than the British Specific, as, from its invigorating and oleagmous properties, it almost immediately arrests the falling off, and affords such effectual nourishment to the roots, that persons giving it a fair trial may assure themselves of its speedily restoring it, even where it has become completely bald, however long it may have been so, and, if grey, gradually to restore it to its natural colour. The superiority of this preparation (the invention of a medical man) derives additional recommendation from its being, unlike other compositions for the hair, so extremely clean and agreeable, that its application is a real pleasure, and is only requisite to be generally known, to receive the preference of every article in use for similar purposes. To be had only of D. PEDEN, 15, Burlington Arcade, Piccadilly, in bottles, 6s. each, or cases of four bottles for 1*l.*, forwarded to order, on receiving the amount, post paid.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY.

Mr. ADAM summed up on the evidence adduced in the Gardner Peerage against the claimant by the first marriage, Henry Fenton Jadis, calling himself Gardner. He contended that he could not be the son of Lord Gardner, but of Mr. Jadis. The usual period of gestation was nine months or forty weeks—a day or two before or after. The opinion of several eminent physicians supported him in that assertion, and the cases decided against left the question untouched. There was no physical impossibility that the child could have been Lord Gardner's, for he left this country in January, or early in February, and the child was born on the 8th of December. It was besides in evidence that a criminal intercourse had been carried on between Mrs. Gardner and Mr. Jadis, previously to her going on board her husband's ship before he left this country, and it was plain that she was with child in July when he came home. When she found that the child might be born so as to bring it within the proper period, she used every means to forward the delivery by riding over the stones, &c. and she gave it out to the family that she was pregnant; but finding, as the time drew near, that she could not be delivered in the time, she denied the pregnancy, and said that she had the dropsy and spasms. Lord Gardner never slept with her after his return. On the 6th of December finding that she was near her time, she sent for her brother, and told him to take out Lord Gardner on the following day. On the night of the 7th or morning of the 8th, she was delivered without her husband's knowledge. Then there was first, the concealment of the pregnancy, next of the delivery, and afterwards of the child, who was carried away privately, and brought up and educated as the son of Mr. Jadis. He was entered at Westminster School as Jadis, and was subsequently put into a public office under the name of Jadis. The case of the Banbury Peerage was exactly in point, as if it had been got up as a precedent for this case, for there Lady Banbury married Lord Vaux, as Mrs. Gardner did Mr. Jadis. He concluded by trusting that the house would guard the purity of the Peerage by not entertaining the claim of Mr. Jadis. He added that the preamble of the bill for dissolving the marriage of Lord Gardner, stated that the child was not legitimate.—Mr. TYNDAL objected to the preamble, as being that of a private bill, and not therefore evidence.—Mr. ADAMS said there was a saving clause.—The LORD CHANCELLOR never knew of such a thing as a saving clause in divorce bills, touching the legitimacy.—The bill was sent for, and the LORD CHANCELLOR looking at it, said, there were some words in it which ought to have been struck out, "that Henry Fenton Jadis was not begotten by Lord Gardner." These could not be received as evidence, being in the preamble of a private bill to which the claimant was no party.—Mr. TINDAL was then called on for his case, and asked what he meant to prove. He said that he had witnesses to prove that the gestation was longer than stated, and he prayed for time.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said, that it was very proper that these medical gentlemen should be called forthwith, because it might be necessary to call back the other medical gentlemen who differed with them in opinion in order to contrast them. In a week medical men could be had from Scotland.—The further consideration was adjourned.

The LORD CHANCELLOR proceeded to give judgment in the Bargany Cause. With his usual accuracy and distinctness, his lordship detailed the procedure, conclusion of the summons, nature of the defences and arguments, pro and con. both in the former action, as it then stood on different grounds; and on the new action brought by Mrs. Fullerton, that resting on grounds different from the former. The Judgment of the House of Lords in 1801, wherein the title to pursue and title to exclude were considered and settled; and the action as in 1816. His lordship referred to the opinions of the Judges in the division where the cause was tried, and to the collected opinions of the whole consulted Judges, thirteen being of one opinion and two of another; and these two, Lords Robertson and Craigie, whose opinions he had attentively weighed with the rest. He had weighed and considered the opinions on the present occasion; and upon the whole, their lordships, he would propose, ought to affirm the Interlocutors of the Court of Session in this important cause, on the ground that, by the legal construction and effect of the deeds in question, which Mrs. Fullerton, however, had challenged, such Interlocutors embraced the correct view in point of law and justice of the cause.—The Earl of LAUDERDALE could not avoid addressing their lordships, merely to say how heartily he agreed in all that had been stated.

Mr. BROGDEN and others from the Commons, brought up the Excise Duties, the Judges Salaries Augmentation, the Office Courts, the Bubble Act Repeal, the King's Bench Offices Sale Abolition, the Goods Warehousing, and a number of Private Bills, which were read a first time.

Earl GROSVENOR presented a petition from a person named Gundill, respecting the delays in the Court of Chancery; and said, whether the evils arose from the system or from other causes, he was sure that inquiry into those causes could not be much longer deferred.—The LORD CHANCELLOR was extremely pleased at the presentment of the Petition, and said that the Duke of Queensbury had left a large estate upon leases, which were obliged to be thrown into Chancery, in consequence of doubts as to their validity. Some of those estates were in Scotland, and between appeals to the Lords and to the Court of Session, in Scotland, great delay had occurred. He thought that in this cause it was most unreasonable to complain, for the Judge had no power to alter the Rule of Court. He could, however, state that that Rule of Court was made by one of the ablest Judges who had ever presided in that Court. Still in that cause he would repeat, that the Court had been more expeditious than in any other whatsoever.—Earl GROSVENOR said, that without meaning to impute blame to his noble friend, (the Lord Chancellor) he could not help observing that this favourable case had been, ten years pending.—Lord REDESDALE said, that with respect to the delay, no blame could be imputed to the Court if the testator left his affairs in such embarrassment as to prevent the money from being safely paid away. He could say that the delays in the Court of Chancery were attributable to the practisers in that Court, more than any other cause whatever.—The Earl of LAUDERDALE said, the estates in Scotland were left in such a state, that if the rule of the court had not been in existence, still would the petitioner have been no better off.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said, that although ten years had elapsed while that case continued in the Court of Chancery, yet no blame could be imputed to that Court, which had been prompt in following up for the benefit of the suitors, the decisions of the Courts of Law. He did not object to the petition, which it was natural the individual might present; but much calumny had been thrown upon the Court of Chancery, by well-meaning individuals, who, however, were ignorant of that of which they complained.—The petition was then read, and ordered to be laid on the table.—Adj.

TUESDAY.

In Duncan v. the Lord Advocate of Scotland—Auchterlony v. Officers of Scotland—Young and Co. v. Ramsay, the interlocutors of the Court of Session—affirmed. In Jeffrey v. Ure—Magistrates of Montrose v. Ewing—and John Graham, W. S. v. the Keeper and Commissioners for the Society of Writers to the Signet, and their Treasurer and Procurator Fiscal, the interlocutors of the Court of Sessions—reversed. In the last case it was so decreed on the single grounds that the Respondents did not sue in the character of a "Corporation," but merely in the names above characterised, individually. In Pearson v. Jack, Counsel fully heard.

Mr. BROGDEN, and others from the Commons, brought up the Western Ship Canal Bill, and several Private Bills, which were read a first time.

Mr. THORNTON, from the Directors of the East India Company, presented a copy of the case laid before his Majesty's Attorney-General and Solicitor-General, in the year 1822, relative to the 30th section of the 13th of George III. entitled an act for the better regulation of Loans in India, with the opinion of the Attorney and Solicitor-General thereupon.—The Marquis of HASTINGS said, that these Papers having been laid before the House, there was no further occasion for delay. He therefore gave notice that he should move to-morrow the second reading of this bill to amend the 13th of George III., and moved that the Judges be summoned. Ordered.

Mr. HARRISON having been heard a considerable time at the Bar, in support of Sullivan's Divorce Bill, a conversation ensued, in which the Lord Chancellor, the Earls of Lauderdale and Limerick, and Lord Bexley took part, after which the bill was read a second time.

On the second reading of the Quarantine Laws Amendment Bill, Earl DARNLEY objected to that clause in the bill which gave a discretionary power to the Privy Council, to extend the Quarantine of Ships, or to dispense with it altogether. This power had of late been much abused. He understood that vessels laden with cotton had been admitted in the River, without undergoing any quarantine or any airing whatever, although they had come directly from Egypt, which was the focus of the plague. If it were granted, as he conceived it must be, that the plague was contagious and might be shut up in cotton packages, it was most extraordinary that those vessels had been so admitted. It was true that they had clean bills of health; but any one acquainted with the state of the Consulares in the Levant, knew that it was not very difficult there to obtain clean bills of health. If it were true therefore that the plague was contagious, it was extremely hazardous on the part of his Majesty's Government to act as they had done. He refuted the doctrine of Dr. Maclean, that the plague was not contagious, and read several passages of Sir T. Maitland's dispatch from Corfu, to show that the plague was caught by contact and not by infection. He then called upon their lordships to put an extinguisher upon opinions which, if adopted, might lead to public danger.—The Earl of LIVERPOOL said, that the present bill had been introduced at the suggestion of the Mercantile Interest, who felt themselves unable to compete with the Dutch in the several trades, owing to the milder regulations with regard to quarantine. For 150 years there had been no plague in England, or in any of the northern countries of Europe; still precaution was necessary. The expences of quarantine were by former laws to be paid by the ships which were compelled to perform it. Than this nothing could be more unjust; it ought to be borne by the public, for whose safety the measure was persevered in; and such an alteration was one of the main objects of that bill.—Lord KING said, that the noble lord (Darnley) had advanced a strong argument in favour of the abolition of the Quarantine Laws altogether.—The second reading was then agreed to, and the bill was ordered to be committed to-morrow.

The House then resolved itself into a Committee, on the County Courts Bill. After some discussion from Lords REDESDALE and ELLENBOROUGH, the house resumed, and the Bill was ordered to be recommitted that day three months.

The Mauritius Trade Bill, and the Irish Currency Assimilation Bill, went through Committees and were reported.—Adj.

WEDNESDAY.

The LORD CHANCELLOR, the Marquis of WINCHESTER, and the Earl of SHAFTESBURY appeared as his Majesty's Commissioners, and brought down the Royal Assent to the following Bills:—The Duchess of Kent and the Duke of Cumberland Annuity Bills, the Exchequer Bills Bill, the 10,500,000*l.* Exchequer Bills Bill, the Colombian Postage Bill, the Newspaper Conveyance, the Excise Duties, the Juries Regulation, the Scotch Peers oath, the Convicts' Property, the Bonded Corn, the Articled Clerks, the Scotch Prisoners Aliment, the Deceased Soldiers Effects, the Stealing in Mines, the Canada Tenures, the Scotch Leasing, the Scotch Small Debts, the Irish Grand Juries Presentments, the Irish Sealing of Writs, and a great number of private Bills.

Mr. BROGDEN, and others from the Commons, brought up several private Bills, which were read a first time.

The Duke of BEAUFORT presented Petitions from Neath, Swansea, Cardiff, Ponty Pool, and Carmarthen, in favour of the Western Ship Canal Bill.

Lord ROLLE presented similar Petitions from Langport, Bridgewater, Exeter, Axminster, Colyton, and eleven other places.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE also presented a Petition to the same effect, from the Merchants of Newry.

On the motion of Viscount DUDLEY and WARD, the Western Ship Canal Bill was then read a second time.

INTEREST OF MONEY IN INDIA.—The Order of the Day having been read,

The Marquis of HASTINGS said, that he had already explained the object of the Bill of which he was about to move the second reading; but as the Judges of the land were in attendance, and there were also many Noble Lords present who had not heard his explanations, he should briefly recapitulate what he had said on a former night, in order that they should know the necessity which existed for the measure. The object of this Bill was to explain the exact meaning of a clause in the 13th of George III. relative to the interest of money in India, on which their Lordships would see by the papers on their table that his Majesty's Attorney and Solicitor General had expressed in 1822 an opinion contrary to the practice established for fifty years in India. He should now move the second reading of the Bill, and should follow up that motion by another, for putting the following question to the Judges:—"Whether or not the construction stated in the Bill with regard to the clause in the former Act, did truly set forth the intent and meaning of that clause?"

THURSDAY.

GARDNER PEERAGE.—Mr. TYNDAL appeared at their lordships' bar, and prayed for further time in this case, in order to be able to bring forward the body of evidence, on which he founded his case.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL opposed the prayer for delay. The whole case had been delayed from time to time, and now came the climax of delay. He did not know what delay they would have, if a year's time was not enough, for they had had already fifteen months time to prepare themselves.—Mr. ADAM, on the same side, said, that Henry Fenton Gardner had presented his claim in March, 1824, to the Attorney-General, and that fifteen months had elapsed since the other party had notice to prepare.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said, that this application was of great importance and of great delicacy; if no other was concerned but that of the party at the bar, he should say that no case had been made out.—Mr. TYNDAL said, that if it was their lordship's wish, he would bring forward what witnesses he had, though they might not be the most important to his case.—The Earl of SHAFTESBURY asked if he was ready with those witnesses now?—Mr. TYNDAL said that he was not, but he would bring them forward any day the Committee might appoint.—The further proceedings were adjourned.

The Lords Committee of Privileges, according to appointment, entered into the consideration of the claim of John James Hope Johnstone, of Annandale, Esq. (The claimant, as heir male of the body of the heir female, Lady Ann, claims the title in terms of the Patent and Charter in 1661 and 1662. Mr. KEAY argued in favour of the claimant; and the ATTORNEY-GENERAL (the Lord Advocate being absent) having required a day or two to prepare himself thoroughly on the part of the crown, it was, under the circumstances, ordered that their Lordships' Committee adjourned the farther consideration of this claim until next Session.

Mr. TOMLINE, from the Treasury, presented accounts of the value and quantity of the Baltic and American timber imported.

The Quarantine Laws Regulation Bill was read a third time and passed, as were several private bills.

The Earl of LIVERPOOL moved the order of the day for the second reading of the Judges Salaries Augmentation Bill. The noble Earl observed that it was unnecessary to trouble their lordships on this subject to any considerable extent. There were several bills upon the table of the House, all of which tended to the same point; he would first move the second reading of the bill for abolishing the sale of offices in the Court of King's Bench.—The Marquis of LANSDOWN gave his unqualified approbation to the mode of paying the Judges by salaries instead of the sale of offices, which was both degrading to their character and must place them sometimes in unpleasant situations.—Lord ELLENBOROUGH contended, that if the object of the bill was to prevent at once the sale of offices, that object would not be attained by the present measure. In his opinion the public would practically derive no immediate advantage from the measure; even the abolition of the sale of offices was postponed to a long period.—The Earl of LIVERPOOL maintained that no office was to be saleable from the passing of the bill, but admitted that it was not intended to touch those which had been sold, and which were in the possession of individuals. The LORD CHANCELLOR approved of the abolition of the sale of offices on the part of the Chief Justices of the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas. His reason for saying so was this; not that he thought they had made an improper use of that power, but because the public would never be satisfied that an improper use might not be made of it, and the character of public justice could not be kept too pure. The bill was then read a second time.

EQUITABLE LOAN BILL.—Lord DACRE moved that the report of the Committee up stairs be received.—The LORD CHANCELLOR expressed his intention of saying, not content to the bill. The amendments were so numerous that it would give too much trouble to their Lordships to consider them to-night. He should therefore take the discussion on the third reading of the bill, which he understood was to be fixed for to-morrow. He also understood that there would be a full attendance, as cards had been issued stating that to-morrow the Equitable Loan Bill would be at home.—After a few words from the Earl of LAUDERDALE against, and the Duke of ATHOL in favour of, the bill, the report was received, and their lordships summoned for to-morrow.

The Irish Currency Assimilation bill was read a second time.

The Distillery Bill went through a Committee, and was reported.

Sir G. CLERK, and others from the Commons, brought up the Leith Dock, the Plate Duties Transfer, the Scotch Partnership Societies the Vexatious Writ of Error Abolition, the India Judges Salaries, the Edinburgh Commercial Bank Bills, and several private bills, which were read a first time.

SCULLY v. SCULLY.—The LORD CHANCELLOR moved the house to affirm the judgment of the Chancellor of Ireland in this case without costs.

FRIDAY.

The Earl of LAUDERDALE presented a Petition from the owners and occupiers of land, and tradesmen of Woodbridge, against the admission of Bonded Corn, under the Distillery Act.

Lord DACRE said he had a Petition to present from a Gentleman of very great respectability, and having made inquiries into the circumstances stated in the Petition, had found them to be correct. The Petition accused a Clergyman of the Church of England of the grossest indecency and immorality, and prayed their Lordships to institute such proceedings as might put an end to scandal such as was detailed in that petition.—About the year 1814 or 1815, a Dr. Free came to reside as Rector of the parish of Sutton, in the county of Bedford, and shortly after that period was guilty of conduct almost too gross and too immoral to conceive, proof of which was immediately adduced, in various ways, by witnesses, and by the number of his natural children. The parishioners earnestly prayed their Lordships to enact such measures as should enable them to take proceedings against this individual; if not by enlarging the period of limitation, by some other means that might give them relief.

The Petition of Montagu Burgoyne, Esq., of Sutton, in the county of Bedford, on behalf of himself and several other parishioners, praying that the moral conduct of the Revereud Edward Dax Free, Rector of Sutton, in the said county, might be inquired into, was then read.

The Bishop of LINCOLN said, that as this petition originated in his diocese, and as the Noble Lord (Dacre) had alluded to him, he felt it necessary to address a few words to the House. No words could be too strong to describe the gross immorality of the individual whose case was then before their Lordships, and it was his (the Bishop of Lincoln's) most anxious wish that some remedy might be suggested, which not only in this instance, but in all similar instances, would empower the Bishop to bring such offenders to a justly merited punishment. Soon after he had been appointed to the See, the case stated in the petition, with all its aggravated circumstances, was laid before him by the parishioners, and he had done all in his power to punish the offender in his court, but had found that he could do nothing. He felt it his duty to express his thanks to the Noble Lord (Dacre) from having abstained from entering into the disgraceful and scandalous circumstances detailed in the petition, which could only do harm to the cause their lordships would advocate. He trusted that their lordships were fully impressed with the importance of the subject, and the necessity of doing something to prevent the repetition of the evil.

Lord DACRE moved the third reading of the Equitable Loan bill.—The LORD CHANCELLOR moved that the bill be read a third time that day three months,—The House divided on the Amendment—Contents, 27—Not-Contents, 14—Majority against the bill, 13.

The Bill for abolishing the Sale of Offices in the Court of King's Bench, and the Judges Salaries Bill, were read a second time.

The Scotch Copartnership Societies Regulation Bill was also read a second time.

The Bill for abolishing the sale of Offices in the Court of Common Pleas, the Excise Duties and Drawback Bill, the Irish Currency Assimilation Bill, the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellor's Salaries Bill, the High Office Holders Compensation Bill, and the University Police Bill, went respectively through Committees and were reported.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY.

Petitions were presented from the inhabitants of St. Mary-le-bone, for leave to build a new church—from West Looe, praying the house to inquire into the right of voting—from the owners of wharfs on the banks of the Thames, respecting the Thames quay—for Cardiff, in favour of the Catholic Claims.

Mr. LAMBTON complained of a misrepresentation of him in The Morning Herald, with respect to his conduct on the Hull Dock Bill. He had at first intended to have the Printer called to the bar; but he should content himself with stating, that the whole of the statement made in that Paper, was entirely false and calumnious.

Mr. C. DUNDAS brought up the report of the Committee on the Berks and Hants Canal Bill.—Mr. JONES complained of the conduct of the Committee, in coming to the conclusion, that there was not time to carry the bill through, founded on some supposed knowledge of the time that his Majesty would put an end to the Session.—Mr. BANKS, Mr. MONK, Mr. ESTCOURT, and Mr. MABERLY severally defended the report of the Committee.—The report was ordered to lie on the table.

The SPEAKER, with reference to a question which had been agitated in this Committee, stated that he conceived a member, having a direct pecuniary interest, was disqualified from voting, rather by the usage than the law of Parliament. With respect to witnesses having a direct interest, he did not conceive that did, or ought to disqualify them from giving their testimony.

On presenting the West Looe petition, Lord NUGENT said, that considering the advanced state of the Session, he should defer till the commencement of the next Session any specific motion; but he should then feel it his duty to move for a Select Committee to inquire into the subjects.—Mr. D. GILBERT said, he was much mistaken, if one of the points mooted by these petitioners was not to be decided in the Court of King's Bench to-morrow.—Lord J. RUSSELL did not think that if the right of voting were extended, as the petitioners desired, that the Representative System would be much improved by it, but he thought that where individuals claimed a right to vote, there ought to be a Committee appointed something on the plan of those under the Grenville Act, to decide upon such claims.—Mr. S. BOURNE objected to the practicability of appointing such Committees for the purposes alluded to by the noble lord (Russell), on account of the great expence which must be incurred in prosecuting such inquiries.

On the motion that the house go into a Committee on the Writ of Errors Bill, Mr. J. WILLIAMS said, he thought the judges ought to have the power of awarding something more than taxed costs in the case of frivolous and vexatious appeals. He thought the right hon. gentleman would have done infinite service, if he had introduced the subject of sham pleas, and given the Court the power of awarding double costs in those cases also.—Mr. Secretary PEEL stated he was unwilling to throw any obstacle in the way of real appeals, but if the present should not be sufficient, he would in the next Session adopt the suggestion of the hon. and learned gentleman. He had not had his attention called to the subject of sham pleas, till too late to make the inquiries he should desire to make before legislating on the subject.—The house then resolved itself into a Committee on the bill, when the general clauses were agreed to.

The report of the University Police Bill was brought up.—A discussion arose relative to the clause authorising the imprisonment of prostitutes.—Mr. J. Williams moved that the punishment should apply to such as were conducting themselves "in a violent or indecent manner."—Mr. Secretary Peel said, the power given by this clause was no greater than that already enjoyed under the charter of the University. That permitted banishment to ten miles from the university, and imprisonment upon a return within the prescribed limits. The house divided. For the amendment, 9; Against it, 37; Majority in favour of the original clause, 28.

On the third reading of the Scotch Stabbing Bill, Mr. J. P. Grant objected to the Bill, as originating in local and temporary circumstances—no legitimate ground for a legislative enactment. The word mammed used in the bill was unknown to the law of Scotland. He should move to leave out the clause relative to the throwing vitriolic acid.—The Lord Advocate defended the clause, from the frequency and pernicious effects of the practice. He stated two cases on the authority of medical men, in which the parties had been dreadfully disfigured from having had vitriolic acid thrown in their faces. Several persons had been transported for the practice; but that had been found insufficient to put a stop to the offence, and a new and more severe enactment was called for. Should the clause be thrown out, the bill would be useless. He proposed to limit the duration of the bill to five years.—Mr. Secretary Peel said, he had been about to propose that the term should be limited, when the noble and learned lord made the proposition. Nothing could be more cruel than the offence, and nothing more proper, than by this limitation to keep the laws of Scotland more nearly assimilated to the laws of England.—Mr. J. P. Grant withdrew the amendment.—Mr. W. Smith would support the bill. The criminal code of this country frequently punished the invasion of property more severely than an assault on the person. The bill was then read a third time and passed.

On the third reading of the Distillery bill, Mr. Hutchinson said, the Irish Distillers had taken the opinion of two eminent counsel.—Mr. Shadwell and Mr. Denman were of opinion, that the bill was a contravention of the union, as by one of the articles of that union, the Irish distiller could not be called upon to pay duty till the spirits had arrived in an English port.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer said that a very imperfect representation of the facts of the case had been made to the eminent counsel alluded to. The object of the Irish distiller was to prevent an equality of duty. Should the spirits of the English distiller be lost at sea, he was still liable to the duty, and from that the Irish distiller claimed to be exempted. The bill was read a third time.

Mr. W. Smith moved a clause to do away the penalty from distillers having possession of mills.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer should not object to the clause at present; but should it be found injurious to the revenue, he should move for the repeal.—The Attorney-General thought the clause would be highly injurious, and lead to great frauds on the revenue. The clause was negatived.

Mr. W. Smith then moved a clause, allowing the use of rum to the distiller in England, as well as to the rectifier of spirits.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer thought the clause too important to be introduced after the third reading of the Bill.—Mr. Hume supported the clause, and Mr. Herries opposed it, as tending to produce great confusion in the Bill.—No division took place. The clause was understood to have been withdrawn, and the Bill was passed.

Mr. Herries brought up the Report on the Smuggling Prevention Bill, which was agreed to, and the Bill ordered to be read a third time on Monday.

The Report of the Apothecaries' Bill was brought up, and a clause proposed by Mr. Hume agreed to, exempting private Practitioners from the right of search conferred upon the Apothecaries' Company; also a clause for enabling Apothecaries to charge for their attendance, independent of their medicines.

The Report of the Slaughtering of Horses' Bill was taken into further consideration, and ordered to be read a third time on Thursday.

TUESDAY.

Counsel was heard on Moore's Divorce Bill.

The Holyhead Road, the Irish Bank Tokens, and the University Police Bills were passed.

The Writs of Error Bill was ordered for a third reading to-morrow.

Mr. W. Dundas presented the Report on the Edinburgh Bonds' Bill.—After a few words from Mr. Abercromby, the Report was read and agreed to.—Bill to be read a third time to-morrow.

Mr. Denman moved the attendance on Friday next of Mr. Camfor, John Franks, and Esther his wife, and another person, in order to be examined, and explain certain circumstances stated in the letter published by Mr. Kenrick. He thought there was such a case of impropriety made out as would authorise the House to address the Crown for the removal of Mr. Kenrick, always understanding that the papers remained uncontradicted.—Mr. Secretary Peel thought it would be dealing only fair by Mr. Kenrick if the honourable Member were to put his charge in writing.—Mr. S. Bourne opposed the motion.—Mr. Abercromby supported it.—Mr. C. Wynn thought that in the first place the House ought to decide whether there was before them sufficient ground for further inquiry.—Mr. Tierney thought the Petitioner should be allowed to substantiate the matter of his petition if he could, and that his learned friend, who was no party to it, ought not to be called upon to make a written charge.—The Solicitor-General thought it absolutely necessary that whoever took upon himself the office of accuser should reduce the charge to writing; a contrary proceeding would be repugnant to every principle of justice.—Mr. Brougham said, he had long known the hon. and learned individual alluded to, and he had great hopes that he (Mr. Kenrick) would be able to clear himself of these charges; but at the same time the House must inquire into them.—Mr. Secretary Peel repeated his objection to examining witnesses before the whole of the papers were printed. He thought a delay of three days would be desirable.—Mr. Denman said, he would withdraw all that part of his motion which related to John Franks. He should now move that Martin Camfor be summoned to attend the House on Friday, on which day he would move for a Select Committee to inquire into that case.—The question was then put and carried, that the House do on Friday inquire into the subject of Mr. Camfor's petition, and that Mr. Kenrick be served with a copy of the petitioo, and have leave to attend by himself or bis counsel.

Petitions were presented from the cotton spinners of Glasgow, respecting the Combination Laws; and from certain Unitarians, for the amendment of the law respecting their sect.

On the motion of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the House went into a Committee on the Newspapers' Bill. The several clauses were agreed to, and the Report was ordered to be received to-morrow.

The West India Clergy Bill was read a third time, and a clause added by way of rider, for paying the salaries out of the 4½ per cent. Duties, after which the Bill was passed.

The House went into a Committee on the Public Works in Ireland Bill.—Report to-morrow.

The Glass Duties' Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Report on the Plate Duties' Transfer Bill was received, and the Bill ordered to be read a third time to-morrow.

The Customs Temporary Duties' Bill was ordered to be read a third time on Friday.

The Doblin Wide Streets' Bill went through the Committee.—Report to-morrow.

The Customs' Consolidation Bill was read a second time, and committed for Thursday.

The Isle of Man Trade Bill was ordered to be read a third time on Thursday.

The Pilotage Bill was read a first time, and ordered to be read a second time to-morrow.

Mr. R. Martin moved the second reading of the Cruel Treatment of Cattle Bill.—The Attorney-General said, that the offence was already a felony, and the bill of the hon. gentleman made it a misdemeanour; so that the offence would at the same time be a felony and a misdemeanour. The bill, in its present form, could not pass, and he must oppose it.—The bill was supported by Mr. C. Wilson.—The House divided—For the second reading, 18—Against it, 27.—The bill was consequently lost.

On bringing up the report on the Church Lands Exchange Bill, Mr. Green suggested the propriety of introducing a clause to enable Chapters in Collegiate Bodies, to exchange their lands, and not to limit the quantity of land to be so exchanged to 40 acres. The hon. member moved to leave out the words limiting the exchange to that number of acres.—Lord Palmerston could not consent to the omission.—The House divided—For the amendment, 8—Against it, 34. The Report was then agreed to.

On the question of the second reading of the Spring Guns bill, Mr. Tennyson stated several instances of melancholy accidents happening from Spring Guns, and sometimes to the parties themselves, in whose grounds they were set. The object of the bill was to render it unlawful to set Spring Guns, and where death ensued within a year and a day after being wounded by such an instrument, the party setting such gun should be guilty of Manslaughter.—Mr. S. Wortley thought that a great deal of property in the kingdom could only be protected by the use of those instruments, which, he acknowledged, he had himself for years made use of. He should oppose the second reading of the bill, because, by every law of right, as well as by the law of the land, he had a right to set spring-guns for the protection of his property.—Sir F. Burdett thought the greatest evil resulting from the use of spring-guns, was allowing the use of them for the protection of game. If their use could keep the prisons clear of poachers, it might be a question of choice between two evils; but it produced no such beneficial result.—Mr. H. Gurney supported the bill.—Lord Binning was opposed to the second reading of the bill, which was directed to the abolition of the use of spring guns for the protection of gardens, as well as of game.—Mr. Scarlet supported the bill.—Mr. Tennyson replied, and the House divided, when there appeared—For the second reading, 39—Against it, 27—Majority 12.

The Gardens Protection Bill was read a second time. To be committed to-morrow.

It was moved that the House should resolve itself into a Committee on the Assessors' Election Bill—Mr. Hobhouse opposed the motion, on the ground of the lateness of the Session.—Mr. H. Twiss said, he had taken the earliest opportunity for bringing the measure forward, but was prevented by the great press of business from doing it sooner.

WEDNESDAY.

The Speaker, attended by several Members went to the House of Peers to hear the Royal Assent given by Commission to various bills.

Mr. Bagot presented a paper, which was a copy of the Charter of the Apothecaries Company.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer presented a petition from certain Linen Manufacturers in the City of Dublin, praying that the Linen Hall may not be appropriated to any other purposes.

Mr. Hume presented a petition from an individual named Frederick Jones of Bristol, complaining of the existing state of the currency.—Mr. T. Wilson said, that unless the hon. member knew the petitioner, or some one who had introduced him, the petition might be false, and only proceeding from some mischievous motive towards the banking-houses. He therefore thought that the hon. member ought to withdraw the petition until he had ascertained the correctness of the facts.—Mr. Hume assented, and the petition was withdrawn.

Mr. Brougham asked the Right Hon. Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, whether he was aware of the arrest of General Devereux, a British subject, by the Austrian Government, in the Venetian States? Mr. Secretary Canning said, that he was aware of the fact from private information only.

Mr. Bernal wished to ask the Right Hon. Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, and when, it was probable that there would be a distribution of the Deccan prize-money? The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, that the Agents were exerting themselves with the utmost vigilance, and preparing lists of distribution, in which they had made considerable progress.

Mr. Huskisson postponed the third reading of the Ships Registry bill until to-morrow, and gave notice that he should then move to add a clause of great importance to the shipping interest in the River Thames. Its effect would be to empower his Majesty, in cases of combination amongst workmen, to issue Orders in Council to enable ships to go for repairs to foreign ports.

Mr. Brougham said, in reference to a petition which he presented a short time ago respecting the conduct of Lord Charles Somerset as Governor of the Cape of Good Hope, he should save the trouble of the house, by stating his willingness to postpone the matter, if he could hear that there was likely to be a fair enquiry; as his motion would only go to pledge the House to enquire.—Mr. Secretary Canning said that leave of absence had been sent out to Lord Charles Somerset, under the presumption that he would wish to meet the various charges made against him in this country in person. If the noble lord did not choose to avail himself of that opportunity, the Reports of the Commissioners would be before the House in the next Session, and upon them the House could act. Under these circumstances he thought it would be worse than wasting the time of the House to go further into the subject.—Lord Edward Somerset said, he wished to take this opportunity to say a few words, deeply interested as he must be in the charges preferred against his noble relation. He could assure them that it was his intention to avail himself of the leave of absence, and to return and meet the charges in this country.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer moved the order of the day for bringing up the Report of the Newspaper Duties Bill. Mr. Hume expressed his regret that he was not in the House when this bill went through the Committee, as he intended to have proposed some alteration in the clauses. He could, however, still effect his object with very little trouble. That object was, to reduce the duty on all newspapers in the same degree as the right honourable gentleman proposed to reduce it on supplements only. If the right hon. gentleman would consent to make the experiment, he would guarantee him against loss. Let him but try it for one year, and if it did not succeed, he would then consent to any alterations the right hon. gentleman might propose. The hon. member moved an amendment for leaving out the words in question.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer said that if he were going to sell an estate to the hon. member he might take his guarantee. But when the consideration was half a million of taxes, he must be excused for preferring the ordinary mode, and refusing to accede to the hon. gentleman's very friendly offer.—After a few words from Mr. Hume, the amendment was negatived, the report received, and the bill ordered to be read a third time to-morrow.

Upon the motion for the third reading of the Navigation Laws' Bill, Mr. Robertson rose to oppose it, and strongly condemned the course pursued by the right hon. President of the Board of Trade. The bill was read a third time and passed.

The Customs Regulations bill went through the same stage.

Upon the motion for the third reading of the Partnership Societies in Scotland bill, Mr. J. P. Grant opposed the bill upon the ground that the preamble stated that to be the law of Scotland, which several decisions of the Court of Session denied.—After a few words from Mr. J. P. Grant and Mr. Keith Douglas the bill was read a third time and passed.

The Leith Harbour bill was read a third time and passed.

The Report on the Public Works and Bridges (Ireland) bill was brought up and agreed to.

THURSDAY.

Mr. Wallace moved the second reading of the Combination Laws' Bill.—Mr. Calcraft opposed the motion, on the ground that the House had not seen the evidence on which the Bill was founded.—Mr. Wallace said his only wish was to accelerate the progress of the measure, on account of the advanced period of the session. The Bill was read a second time.

The following Bills were read a third time and passed:—The Edinburgh Commercial Bank Bill, Newspaper Bill, Customs Bounty Bill, Goods Warehousing Bill, House of Commons Taxation of Costs' Bill.

A message from the Lords announced their Lordships' assent to the Buckingham House Bill, and several private Bills.

The Report on the Irish Linen Trade Bill was brought up and agreed to.

Mr. Fowell Buxton rose to make the motion of which he had given notice, relative to the treatment experienced by Mr. Shrewsbury, lately a Missionary from the African Society at Barbadoes, and concluded by moving a resolution to this effect:—That this House, from the papers laid on the table relating to the demolition of the Methodist Chapel at Barbadoes, and the expulsion thence of Mr. Shrewsbury, a licensed teacher of religion, deem it their duty to declare their utmost amazement at so scandalous and daring a violation of law, and express their hope that his Majesty will be pleased to order some steps to be taken to secure the rebuilding of the Chapel, and to afford ample protection and religious toleration to all his Majesty's subjects in that colony.—There were objections to the mode pointed out in the resolution before the House, and he thought the best way to proceed would be to adopt the most conciliatory measures.—Mr. W. Smith said, that the only charge against Mr. Shrewsbury was the obnoxious letter alluded to, and concluded by supporting the motion.—Mr. Butterworth said, that the Wesleyan Methodists had been of infinite service in extending religious instruction amongst the slaves in the West Indies, and that the outrage against Mr. Shrewsbury was wholly unprovoked and inexcusable.—Mr. Secretary Canning began by saying, that from the papers on the table, only one opinion could be formed as to the act in question. It was wholly unjustifiable in itself; it was a transgression of law, and an insolent defiance of Parliament and the country. He differed from the hon. mover only as to the manner in which the case ought to be treated practically. Believing that the original resolution would be greatly improved by his amendment, he would move "that the House having taken into its most serious consideration the papers on the table relating to the demolition of the Methodist Chapel in Barbadoes, deem it their duty to declare their utmost indignation at that scandalous and daring violation of the law; and having seen, with great satisfaction, the instructions sent over by his Majesty's Secretary of State to the Governor of Barbadoes to prevent the recurrence of a similar outrage, humbly express their ready concurrence in any measures his Majesty may deem necessary to secure the most ample protection and religious toleration to all classes of his Majesty's subjects in that colony."—Mr. Brougham said, that he preferred the Amendment of the right hon. gentleman to the Address proposed by his hon. friend, because it abstained from recommending that the parties should be compelled to rebuild the chapel, which might involve a very important and dangerous principle.—Mr. Bernal was surprised to find that, after this discussion had been opened with a speech of great Parliamentary temper, even by the hon. member for Weymouth, and carried on with the same spirit throughout, the hon. and learned gentleman should think it consistent with his duty to adopt such a course of language and attack, against the West India Proprietors, as that in which he had indulged on the present occasion.—Mr. Manning made some observations in so low a tone of voice that nothing connected could be heard in the gallery. We understood the hon. gentleman to complain that the resolution would convey a censure upon the authorities.—Mr. Secretary Canning, in explanation, said that the resolution did not stigmatize the persons who were the actors, but the act done.—Mr. F. Buxton briefly replied, and the amendment was then carried.

Mr. Hume moved for a set of returns relative to the Half Pay and Promotions in the Army, for the years 1822, 1823, and 1824.—Lord Palmerston said he had no objection.

Mr. Huskisson rose to propose the addition of a clause to the Ships' Registry Bill. It was known to the House that, in consequence of certain combinations amongst the journeymen shipwrights, no ships had been repaired in the river Thames for some time.—The House was aware that there were also combinations amongst the seamen navigating the ships between the Port of London and the North, principally the ports of Newcastle and Shields. He was reluctant to interrupt the operation of our navigation laws; but the conduct of these persons demanded that some strong measure should be taken.—Mr. Ellis supported the clause.—Mr. Robertson considered this measure as an acknowledgment that the Government were incapable of governing the country under its present circumstances.—Mr. Hume said, where persons by coercion prevented others from working, protection was necessary.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer read from a document the number of ships built during the last five years, and proved there had been a regular increase in the building of merchant vessels. This statement proved the prosperity of the country.

Mr. Huskisson brought up another clause, to enable ship-masters, in cases of combination among seamen, to proceed to sea with less seamen than the law now requires.—The clause having been read the third time, was also added to the Bill, which then passed.

The House went into Committee on the Spring Guns' Bill, and the report was brought up.

FRIDAY.

The Apothecaries bill was read a third time, and after some observations from Mr. C. Dundas and Mr. Brougham, passed.

Mr. J. Smith presented a petition from Mr. Montague Burgoyne, a gentleman of the highest honour and most undoubted benevolence. The prayer of the petition was, that the 27th Geo. III. might be amended, so that clergymen, might be punished for improper conduct.—Mr. Secretary Peel said he had never heard of the name of Dr. Free before, though he was aware of the respectability of Mr. Burgoyne. Of the facts he knew nothing. If the allegations were true, the person accused was utterly unworthy of his station.—(Hear.)—But considering the general exemplary conduct of the body of the clergy, such an instance of misconduct only appeared the more flagitious. He would inquire into the law, and if it could be amended he had no wish but to have it done. Still, as there were suits pending, he hoped that the petition might not be printed.

Mr. Kenrick.—The order of the day was read on this matter on the motion of Mr. Denman.—Mr. Denman moved that Martin Camfor be called in.—After a remark from Mr. Brougham, the Speaker said he was not aware what course was to be pursued. If it were to be a mere detail of the facts, then he would remain in the chair; but if it were to be an examination by question and answer, the House had better go into a Committee. (Hear.)—Mr. Denman said his object was to examine Camfor as to the facts of his petition, and probably other members might wish to ask questions.—Mr. Secretary Peel said the Counsel for Mr. Kenrick might wish to examine the witness. It would be better to go into a Committee.—The House then resolved itself into a Committee, Mr. R. Gordon in the chair.—Mr. Camfor was ordered to be called in.—Mr. Gurney and Mr. Bolland appeared as counsel for Mr. Kenrick.—Mr. Denman then proceeded to examine the witness Camfor.—Mr. Secretary Canning wished to know what course the hon. and learned gentleman meant to pursue? He must be aware, that although the petition of Mr. Kenrick had been introduced as a statement in the speech of his counsel, yet that no answer to the charge would appear before the House when it resumed.—Mr. Denman said the course he meant to take was that which he conceived to be the usual one, of moving that the Chairman should leave the chair, and the evidence be printed.—Mr. Secretary Canning said he could not consent to that course. The speech of the learned counsel would be perfectly evanescent, as far as regarded any future proceedings, if they went out of Committee in the manner proposed by the hon. and learned gentleman. The effect of it would be to send an accumulation of charges before the House, there being the evidence of Camfor in addition to his petition, and nothing whatever in the shape of a defence.—Mr. Croker said, the understanding had been that the statement of Mr. Kenrick should be presented to the House as a petition, and then printed in that form.—The Chairman was then ordered to report progress, and obtained leave to sit again on Monday.—The House resumed, and the report was received and ordered to be printed.

The Colonies' Trade Bill was reported, and ordered to be read a third time on Monday.

The Smuggling Prevention Bill, after a few words from Mr. Bernal and Mr. Curteis, was read a third time and passed.

Adjourned to Monday.

THE AGE.

LONDON, JUNE 26.

A leading mercantile house in the City received a letter yesterday morning from Liverpool, under date the 23d instaut, which has been shewn to us, and from which we make the following extract :—

"As you are, no doubt, deeply interested in all that relates to Peru, I have the satisfaction to state, that BOLIVAR had entered Callao, and put the garrison to the sword. These accounts I have from CAPTAIN MORTIMER, of the Vulture, arrived by address from Puerto Cabello this morning. She sailed thence on the 9th ult.; the day previous, the accounts had been received (official) from Valentia, via Bogota. I cannot give you the date of BOLIVAR'S entry; but you may rely, I think, on the correctness of Captain M.'s statement."

The JOHN BULL of last Sunday has called in to its aid a letter addressed by MR. SUGDEN (undoubtedly a clever conveyancer) to MR. WILLIAMS, relative to his observations upon the abuses of the Court of Chancery; but MR. SUGDEN and the JOHN BULL together make but a feeble opposition to MR. WILLIAMS'S attacks—for the letter is written in a passion, and the writer has consequently committed himself as people in a passion most frequently do. MR. SUGDEN says in page 2 of his pamphlet—

"I know that there are many defects in the practice of the Court of Chancery, which have crept in with time; and I believe there are not less in the courts of common law."

Would then MR. SUGDEN resolutely oppose the cure of those defects which he says he knows exist in the Court of Chancery, because he believes there are also faults, in the practice of other Courts? He then goes on,

"I, who desire to practice with comfort what you call the trade of the law, but which I fondly believe is a science of a high class and an honourable and a distinguished profession, wish that all abuses in all the courts should be remedied."

Why then is he angry because MR. WILLIAMS, with an energy and learning that do equal credit to his heart and head, has actually set about doing that which MR. SUGDEN admits he wishes to have done? MR. WILLIAMS never doubted the comfort which MR. SUGDEN'S practice afforded to that learned gentleman; but it was the comfort of his clients and of the suitors in the Court of Chancery generally which MR. WILLIAMS did presume to doubt; and, if one fourth part of the statements made by that unhappy class of persons be true, we humbly submit that these doubts are tolerably well founded on fact. In page 3, MR. SUGDEN tells us, that "the law of a Court of Equity is regulated by rules as binding and settled as the most fixed rule of common law." This assertion is one of the lamentable effects of a gentleman sitting down to write before his passion has cooled, for we are quite certain that MR. SUGDEN values his legal reputation too highly, to wish to rest it in calmer moments on a position so notoriously at variance with the truth, and which his own practice, and the discrepancy of his own doctrines with those of others of his brethren will at once refute more decidedly than any thing we can say on the subject. Does not the fact of the decrees made by the VICE-CHANCELLOR being constantly reversed by the LORD CHANCELLOR, prove that nothing is more unsettled than the law of a Court of Equity; for, perhaps, one of the greatest evils of the law of Equity, cluding the law of real property, is, that it is so completely undefined, so obscure and so unintelligible, that at this moment, probably, there are not five men in England sufficiently versed in the black letter law to preside in the Court of Chancery. In page 13 we find the following passage:—

"One man agrees to sell or settle an estate, and another to buy or give a consideration for it. Why should they not perform their agreement? If there were no court of equity, the seller, for example, of an estate, might refuse to convey it to the purchaser, although he was ready to pay for it, and would merely be liable to such damages as a jury might think proper to give."

Now, if a Court of Equity actually could and did remedy such an evil, its jurisdiction would undoubtedly be a blessing to the country; and no man in his senses would arraign either its existence, or its decrees: but, it is precisely because such effects seldom or never occur in the present state of the law of Real estate, that MR. WILLIAMS has been induced to call the attention of the nation at large to this defective system, and for which he is entitled to the thanks of all owners of real Estates in the kingdom. The fact is, the lawyers themselves cannot agree as to what forms a good saleable title, which we asserted in our former notice of MR. WILLIAMS'S motion, and by way of illustration quoted a case that came within our own knowledge, and we will now cite another to the same point. A gentleman offered an Estate for sale, which was agreed for by an individual as remarkable for the brilliancy of his talents, his eloquence and political acquirements, as he was notorious for not being generally furnished with the means of completing the purchase of an Estate. In this unfortunate predicament, the Treasurer of the Navy (for he then held that Office) was when he agreed to purchase the property above mentioned—he had neither the means to pay for it, nor the inclination to relinquish it—what then was to be done? Why, the blessed state of that law which MR. SUGDEN lauds so much at once presented him with an expedient. His Agent objected to the title, and for more than ten years it was the cause of counsel's opinions, consultations, attornies' bills, &c. &c., and still Equity furnished such plausible objections, that the Vendor had not the power during that period, to enforce the execution of the contract.

We, therefore, again assert with confidence that this state of things loudly calls for investigation and correction; and, though we deprecate most strongly rash innovations, we cannot be insensible to the stubborn facts which are daily brought forward against the present law of real estate, and the delays and abominable expense attending a suit in a Court of Equity.

The order of the day for taking into consideration the petition relative to the conduct of MR. KENRICK was moved by MR. DENMAN on Friday, and argued at considerable length, without, however, eliciting in its progress any other position than a proof of the complete imbecility with which the affair has been altogether got up: and, although we are not prepared to enter into a thorough review and scrutiny of the principles that have actuated this proceeding; we have not a doubt, if we did, that they would be found replete with all that shallow policy which has marked the late movements of the Whigs, as the Session of Parliament approximates its termination. It is hardly necessary to expatiate on this impudent, yet futile attempt to impugn the respectability and legislatorial conduct of a very worthy man and judicious Magistrate; but, if any thing were wanting to expose the perfect trickery of the whole business, it would be the attempt of Yesterday's Chronicle to say something, intended to be clever; but which is as far from the purpose as any thing which ever came under our perusal. In the absence of any other means by which MR. KENRICK'S character could well be arraigned, the stupid Journal, with an extra stock of stupidity collected together for the occasion, has cited the particulars of a trial in which MR. KENRICK was defendant, for a libel, from ITS OWN columns, of January 15th, 1822, and in which THE DEFENDANT WAS ACQUITTED! Exclusive of the verdict given on this occasion, which is an additional testimony to this gentleman's uprightness and integrity; it is to be remarked that the evidence of the Chronicle is the only bad evidence the said Chronicle could possibly adduce—but in addition to the discredit for which its usual blunderings have obtained for this paper such a proverbial character, is to be remarked the singular case of a person wishing to weaken the reputation of another, and quoting for the purpose, an instance in which that very person has been honorably acquitted. It is foreign to our purpose to enter into any of the minutes of this business, further than to allude to the very able and excellent defence of MR. KENRICK, by his counsel MR. GURNEY, the general tendency of which may be estimated by the following extract from his speech on the occasion:—

"I therefore humbly but confidently submit, that taking all the facts stated in Canfor's petition to be true, they amount to nothing; he went to a Magistrate on a question of disputed property; the Magistrate, in the exercise of his discretion, refused a search warrant, and the complainant re-possessed himself of all he had lost without it. He did not state to Mr. Kenrick that he could produce a man who saw Beale leading away the ram in a string. Beale asserted that the animal was his own, and that it had strayed from his flock. Taking, therefore, the petition and the whole statement of Canfor this night, there is not the slightest pretence for imputing to Mr. Kenrick a denial of justice, or that he was actuated by any other motives than those which ought to guide a Magistrate in the impartial discharge of his responsible functions. A Magistrate is not to grant a search warrant to invade the dwelling of an individual, or to abridge the liberty of the subject, unless it can be shewn that there is a reasonable ground for suspecting felony. I do not feel that it is at all necessary for me to trouble the House further, for without any statement of mine, I apprehend it would be clear that there is no evidence to warrant the House in imputing even blame to Mr. Kenrick."

The impression created by this very eloquent address, not only on the minds of the Members generally, but even on that of the honorable mover, MR. DENMAN in particular, is in itself quite sufficient proof of the strength of the Magistrate's defence, as also of the flimsy quality of the prisoner's charge. The satisfaction that prevailed throughout the house, on the effect of the Counsel's speech, was universal, and the thing would have been disposed of sans ceremonie, but for the necessity that presented itself of complying with the forms of the House, in consequence of which, the evidence has been ordered to be printed, and the ultimate decision thereon postponed till to-morrow. That we may not in any indirect manner bias the judgments of our Readers, we cannot do better than give them the opinion of MR. CANNING on the subject, than which we presume no better authority, and no sounder judgment in the whole Senate united can be advanced—for in reference to MR. PEEL'S resolution, "that the House having heard the testimony of MR. CANFOR in support of the allegations of the Petition, did not think it necessary to institute any further proceedings," MR. CANNING observed, that he viewed the case of MR. KENRICK in two respects:—

"1st, That in regard to one part of the charge, he had paid the penalty in a civil action; and that as for the remainder of the charge, namely, the refusal to grant a warrant from partiality to the person, there was not one tittle of credible evidence to sustain it."

We have not the least desire to allude to this circumstance any farther, convinced that every well regulated and proper mind will see it precisely in the light that we do—but we must confess, it has amused us excessively, that the whole affair has turned upon the capture of an unfortunate RAM, when, even if it had been RICHARD MARTIN himself, no person could have made a greater BULL than MR. THOMAS DENMAN has done on this memorable occasion.

DIURNALIA.

We had occasion last week, to allude to an extraordinary instance of genius displayed in a discovery made by the Morning Post, and much as we felt bound to admire the peculiar naivete and tact of the article in question, we really must admit that the following display of the talents of our Press is such as to cast any previous competition completely into the shade. We believe it was the Post that originally started the following question:—'Which finger would be selected as the one to wear the wedding ring if the bride had lost her fourth one?" This important subject appeared afterwards in the Morning Herald, and elicited the following reply:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MORNING HERALD.

Pray, Mr. Editor, inform your Correspondent R. S. he need be under no apprehension for his fair friends if they retain the little finger, as that will have become the fourth in case of the loss of its associate.

Yours, &c. W. S.

Somerset House, June 18.

Which brilliant specimen brought forth another piece of controversy in the next day's paper to this effect:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MORNING HERALD.

Mr. Herald,—I could not but smile at the arithmetical solution of your Correspondent W. S., of the query respecting the proper wedding finger where a lady had lost the fourth, or ring-finger of the left hand. After turning over, perhaps, the tables of Cocker, he adopts, by a comical process, the conclusion, which I do not mean to impugn, that in a series of figures, beginning with number one, should number four be accidentally wanting, number five would be number four. Now be pleased, Mr. Herald, to give your readers something like a reason for selecting that favoured finger as the tenant of the matrimonial pledge. Tell them that there either exists, or was formerly supposed to exist, some nerve or connecting leader by which the heart is brought into union with the hand and that particular finger. But, whatever the anatomical case may be, the moral case is clear, and seems to be this:—In contracting marriage, the heart and the hand should invariably go together. No blessing can reasonably be expected where the best affections are not consulted in the union—for this striking reason, among many others, that an inspired Apostle has declared it to be a mystery, figurative of the union between Christ and his Church. A MEMBER OF THE ESTABLISHED CHURCH.

Now to us, who happen to have a thumb on each hand, and whose fourth finger is the little one, this appears the most staggering piece of philosophical research we have for some time met with; but, with all this vast genius in view, it was reserved for the Times on Thursday to submit to the world a trait of City wit that has seldom appeared in the journals of this or any country. It runs thus:—

The following charade is said to be from the pen of a worthy Alderman of the city of London:—

My first's a little thing what hops,
My second gives us good hay crops,
My whole, I eats with mutton chops.

Solution—Sparrowgrass.

Of course all London has been in arms to discover that man in her Common Council whose intellect could furnish such a display of humour; and although the "worthy Alderman" is no other person than one of the cockney wags in Printing-House-square, we hear it is impossible to make any believe but what it is a bantling of WAITHMAN'S.

We should have felt quite ashamed had we suffered these literary visitations to have appeared without giving them that notice to which they are so eminently entitled—more particularly as while, in compliment to an occasional supplement of advertizements from these very papers, "the calculating youth," Mr. JOSEPH HUME, has obtained a remission of nearly half their duty, it is a matter of justice to them, and respect to the nation, to point out the intellectual qualifications by which they are distinguished.

The papers have, during the last week, been endeavouring to excite in the public mind a very unnatural sympathy for the fate of PROBERT, of whom on Monday morning the country was rid. We trust that our feelings are as sensitive on any point demanding the best impulses of the heart as any person's can be—but it will require more logic than has yet been advanced by any article we have read on the subject, to convince us that this man was any thing else than a worthless villain, who had just hardihood enough to make one of a triumvirate of murderers, where he had nothing to execute; and meanness enough in the worst degree to betray the machinations of this deed of blood, to save a neck which his indigenous villainy and natural propensities to crime brought a second time within the compass of a halter. If there was one man who had drawn town on his head the vengeance of the law more deservedly than another, WILLIAM PROBERT was that man—and to save such a wretch, would have been to insult the common understandings of the People, to compromise the justice of the Land, and invoke on its lawgivers the curses of every surviving relative of thousands of departed malefactors who may then fairly be considered—MURDERED.

SONG.

HOME TRUTHS.

While some, for shameful ends,
Abuse full half the town,
Cry up their worst of friends,
And yet their best cry down:
We beg to name a few,
Whom none dare vilify;
" Upon my soul it's true—
" What d'ye lay it's a lie?"

They swear that GLENGALL told
The truth the other night;
That LIMERICK's grown so bold,
He don't object to fight:
Lord BURFORD goes to woo,
For love—not gold—to sigh;
" Upon my soul its true—
" What d'ye lay it's a lie?"

IRBY wash'd his face
A week or two ago—
The wife of BEDFORD's GRACE
For virtue's fam'd, we know.
There's BRUMMELL's sister, too,
Is not " with YOUNG" they cry,
" Upon my soul it's true—
" What d'ye lay it's a lie?"

MRS. COUTTS, they swear,
Never drinks a drop!!
And LUCAN's learned heir
Is not THE LEAST a fop!
Lord BELGRAVE gave a sous
To stop a beggar's cry,
" Upon my soul it's true—
" What d'ye lay it's a lie?"

TWISS's head's not thick
In any cause he mounts,
And HUME ne'er makes you sick,
In casting up accounts.
ROBINS, entre nous,
Is modest grown and shy;
" Upon my soul it's true—
" What d'ye lay it's a lie?"

BILLY LENNOX looks
Straight, when dinner's near,
So said BALL HUGHES' cooks,
SIX TIMES a-week last yeur!!!
WARRENDER eats but two Young ducks at once, or nigh—
" Upon my soul it's true—
" What d'ye lay it's a lie!"

Lord HOLLAND play'd a part
In " How a Wife to rule;"
Miss LOVE thinks, in her heart,
HARBOROUGH's not A FOOL!
DEERHURST never knew
His wife was " on the sly,"
" Upon my soul it's true—
" What d'ye lay it's a lie?

Old RAVENSWORTH did not Force BARRINGTON to fight,
In case he had forgot
My lady JANE to right:
COPLEY's joke is new—
D'ye know the reason why?
" Upon my soul it's true—
" What d'ye lay it's A LIE?"

SUSSEX, they say, declined
An invitation out;
And COBURG really dined
The day he gave a rout.
A better Hussar not you
Than GRANTHAM know—nor I;
" Upon my soul it's true—
" What d'ye lay it's a lie?"

VERNON's wife's no flirt,
Whatever she may seem;
Nor do they get the dirt
From PETRE's clothes by steam!
TULLAMORE's wife's a prue—
SEFTON has cut the " die"
" Upon my soul it's true—
" What d'ye lay it's a lie?"

The " DURHAM Pig!" they shew,
In Whitehall-yard by day,
Is not call'd ANGELO,
In spite of all they say.
And JERSEY's great virtue
Is thought not " all my eye;"
" Upon my soul it's true—
" What d'ye lay it's a lie?"

ALVANLEY did not " throw
A Somerset" in the Park;
Nor LADY FITZROY shew
Any thing in the dark!
BERKELEY's acting few
Can surely think is " shy:"
" Upon my soul it's true—
" What d'ye lay it's a lie?"

PETERSHAM, rather big,
Swears he was never lick'd,
ANTONIO's thought a WHIG,
Because a TORRI he kick'd.
So all we've brought to view,
Among the great and high,
" Upon my soul is true—
" What d'ye lay it's A LIE?"

The EQUITABLE LOAN BILL has been thrown out, for the present Session by a majority of 13, a decision which, we need hardly inform our Readers, has created very considerable astonishment among the numerous friends and supporters of this laudable Institution. The majority is very easily accounted for, when we take into consideration the unusual interest that has been created by its opponents, and more particularly, when we bear in mind the very neat ruse de guerre practised by my LORD LAUDERDALE, who, on seeing several members who had come there to vote in favor of the Bill, retire pro momento during the speech of LORD DACRE, because there was the strongest reason imaginable to suppose that LORD LAUDERDALE would answer him, availed himself of their absence, and, instead of a reply, moved for a division. On the score of ingenuity, we give LORD LAUDERDALE more credit than we feel disposed to give him on any other count—but all the opposition he has been the organ of raising, and the trumpery majority he has so cunningly obtained, cannot in any one respect lessen the influence, or retard the progress of the Company's operations. It will be for the noble and able Directors of the affairs of this Establishment to decide upon what mode they may deem advisable to adopt—but in the mean time, their operations will proceed uninterrupted, with the satisfaction that they have already been the means of checking the infamous peculations and chicanery of the pawnbrokers; and with the assurance that the objects of the Company may be rendered available to the public, without the assistance of an Act of Parliament, which may be hereafter moved for, when the benefit of the affair is in full operation. It is perfectly absurd to suppose that this temporary defeat of ONE PART of the Company's intentions can in the least degree operate upon their general proceedings, for the fact is so decidedly the contrary, that it will only serve as an impetus to their future exertions, and go to convince those of its friends who, too confident in security in this instance, have been comparatively dormant, when they should have been active, that a very trifling renewal of energy will eventually consummate their best wishes, and that energy they must be prepared to bestow.

Throughout the progress of this bill through the House, we have been occasionally amused by the strenuous opposition manifested by my LORD LAUDERDALE—but now that its present fate is decided, that merriment has subsided into astonishment that any bill whose main object is to reduce the rate of interest on Money LENT, should meet with an enemy in one who must be aware of the great advantage a BORROWER derives from the principles it is the specific objects of this Company to inculcate—if nothing else had convinced His Lordship, EXPERIENCE ought at least to have produced the effect.

In consequence of the great excitement created by the various announcements of the Chester race-ball fracas, we have made a point of enquiring into the subject, with a view to place the respective parties in their true light before the public; and more particularly to ascertain the precise line of conduct adopted by LORDS MOLYNEUX and WILTON, from whose exalted rank, did no other qualifications present themselves, we should expect and require the nicest distinction of honour and etiquette. It affords us considerable satisfaction to be enabled to state, that the conduct of these noblemen throughout has been marked by the strictest propriety and delicacy; and while we bear every possible testimony to their forbearance, yet at the same time decision, we cannot but regret that they have been subjected to the calumnies and vulgarities of the perfect blackguards with whom they have had to contend. Of the persons who have instigated the whole transaction, we know quite enough to satisfy us that they well deserved the " turn out" with which the stewards visited them; and in the case of Mr. RAWLINS more particularly we are exceedingly rejoiced—he is a needy Irish fortune-hunter, who has made himself, in more instances than one, exceedingly and ridiculously conspicuous; and although we refrain at present from mentioning the particular family cases that have come within our knowledge, we venture to assure all persons anxious to be informed upon the subject, that the NOBLEMEN in question have acted, with reference to the parties, in the only way SUCH persons could possibly be treated.

The following sample of the delicacy of INJURED HONOUR has been submitted to the public:—

Friday, June 24, No. 13 Quality-court, Chancery-lane.

POOLE v. ELLISTON.—An insinuation derogatory to the character of a man of honour has appeared in a Sunday Paper, with regard to the 80*l.* awarded to Mr. Poole (Author of Simpson and Co., &c.), in the above action; he will feel himself greatly obliged to the editor, if he will find room for the following statement of the appropriation of the said 80*l.*, which has this day been made, viz.:

Drury-Lane Theatrical Fund	£20
Covent-Garden ditto	20
Literary ditto	20
Mendicity Society	10
Society for the Relief of Small Debtors	10
Total	£80

There is no person in this business we feel for as much as we do for poor Mr. POOLE; for in his laudable desire to aid several deserving charities, he not only presents them with the sum of 80*l.*, but goes and gets " very particularly well" kicked to enable him to do it. The selection of the funds to whose advantage the sum is appropriated is undoubtedly a little waggery on the part of POOLE, in his determination not to get kicked for nothing; for, after giving a certain amount to theatrical and literary funds, he gives the rest to the MENDICITY SOCIETY, and for the relief of SMALL DEBTORS!! The chances consequently are, that nearly the WHOLE of it will return to the theatre from whence it came! This is not a bad joke of POOLE's; though, under all circumstances, he should have kept it for his next farce.

FASHIONABLE MISCELLANY.

His MAJESTY will hold a Levee at Carlton Palace, on Wednesday next, on which occasion the Knights of the several orders will wear their Collars.

ROYAL DEJEUNER A LA FOURCHETTE AT THE COTTAGE IN WINDSOR GREAT PARK.—His MAJESTY's visit to Windsor, on Wednesday, was for the sole purpose of giving final directions, respecting the intended splendid fete, which will be given in a few days, within the inclosure that surrounds the cottage, upon a more extensive scale than any entertainment since the King came to the Crown. Between four and five hundred persons, including nearly all the Princes, Princesses, and Nobility of the land, now in England (with the solitary exception of one Royal and Constitutional Duke,) are invited to the banquet. The pleasures of the morning are to be diversified. They will consist of aquatic excursions on Virginia water, in the new yacht, just launched; rides, in every variety of vehicle, provided by his MAJESTY; temporary booths, erected in the grounds, where fun and drollery of every description will be exhibited, all the public performers, especially vocal performers, both native, Italian and French, will occasionally entertain the Royal guests, and the breakfast will consist of every delicacy which our improved system of cookery, and the early produce of the earth, in choice fruits, aided by our neighbours, can supply. The decorations, water excursions, fire works, and arrangement of the whole fete have been confided to Sir CHARLES LONG, Sir WILLIAM CONGREVE, and his MAJESTY himself. The fetes given by the Duke of DEVONSHIRE, at Chiswick, first suggested to the KING this magnificent entertainment. We hope the public will not be rigorously excluded from the sight of this display of magnificence.

The DUKE OF NORTHUMBERLAND having expressed an anxious desire for the KING to visit his splendid domain at Charing-Cross, since the late improvements have taken place, his MAJESTY, accompanied by SIR C. LONG and MR. NASH, on Friday went over the suite of rooms. His MAJESTY, without form or ceremony, made the visit in the DUKE's absence, and the only person to receive him was the Housekeeper. His MAJESTY ascended the paved stair-case, composed of solid marble, and after taking a full view of the apartments, returned to Carlton Palace.

An interesting scene took place between two Royal Brothers, at a Masonic dinner, given at the Thatched House Tavern on Friday last. The DUKE OF SUSSEX, in returning thanks for his health having been drunk by the company, alluded to the DUKE OF YORK, who happened to be present, with so much warmth, affection, and brotherly love, that the Noble Duke absolutely shed tears. It is delightful to witness the extreme cordiality that seems to subsist between the two Royal Dukes in private, notwithstanding they are directly opposed to each other on all great political questions.

In the course of the last week His ROYAL HIGHNESS, the DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE, attended by COLONEL COOKE and PRINCE GEORGE, accompanied by COLONEL JONES, visited SAMS's Reading Rooms in Pall-Mall, to view the splendid Picture of His MAJESTY on Horseback, recently painted by JAMES NORTHCOTE, ESQ. R.A.—His ROYAL HIGHNESS was pleased to express his admiration of the Picture in the most unqualified terms—giving as his decided opinion, that in point of likeness it far surpassed every other representative of His MAJESTY.

VAUXHALL GARDENS.—We have been twice to this favourite place of amusement during the last week; and while we are enabled to bear testimony to the long list of fashionables that on these particular occasions made their appearance, we should omit a paramount duty if we did not also observe that the unbounded liberality, and general taste of the spirited conductors of this enchanting scene, fully entitle them to every success they receive. Indeed, the appearance of the gardens on Wednesday last, was one of the most imposing sights it has fallen to our lot to be witness to " for many a long day."

We have amused ourselves, and some young holiday friends, by touring round the town and visiting many of the various places of public curiosity and amusement that are now open; and foremost among the innumerable lot, we beg particularly to call attention to the EGYPTIAN TOMB, which is really deserving of the highest degree of patronage; indeed there was a considerable assemblage of fashionable visitors, and the appearance of MAJOR DENHAM and LIEUTENANT CLAPPERTON, who expressed themselves in terms of great admiration of the exhibition, excited much attention. We next visited that enchanting little sprite, the INFANT LYRA, and are free to confess that any sight more realy interesting we have not for a long time been spectators of; her appearance is aeriel, and her tones are almost as light, and a half hour cannot be more interestingly passed than in the company of this charming prodigy. The AUTOMATONS, as an instance of the ingenuity of man, are quite unrivalled; and, whether with reference to the intense curiority their operations excite, or to the wonderful powers of mechanism by which they move, we feel equally bound to " applaud them to the very echo." We next visited the HOLY SEPULCHRE, when our attention was equally attracted by the imposing solemnity of the scene, and proceeded on to the DIORAMA, which, without hesitation or exception, we pronounce the grandest exhibition of the scenic art ever submitted to the inspection of our countrymen. The ruins of Holyrood Chapel arouse a variety of feelings, that crowd without control on the imagination of the historic reader, and confirm, while they excite a lamentation over, the decay of its pristine grandeur. We shall take an opportunity of again introducing a notice of this exhibition, on which the eye can never linger too long, or the mind remember too forcibly.

THEATRES.

It is now a fortnight since we took any notice of theatrical amusements, because things of so much more consequence presented themselves to our observation: but having been assailed by numerous correspondents for the great neglect we have been guilty of, we feel bound to say a word or two in our defence, which can be best done by submitting to their digestion the following remarks. We shall doubtlessly be set down as heretics, unless we say that the most important event in dramatic, or perhaps NATIONAL affairs, is the return of MR. KEAN, who represented the Duke of Gloster on Monday last. We shall not take up the time of our readers by entering into any detail of his performance, as it is a matter of much more consequence to submit to them his SPEECH, on taking leave of the Dublin audience, on which occasion a WREATH OF LAUREL (!) was thrown on the stage—viola:—

"LADIES AND GENTLEMEN.—I must confess, that, although I did anticipate the warm ebullition of feeling from the known generosity of an Irish audience, I cannot vainly attribute the whole to their long experienced feelings towards me but as a proof of their determination to protect the profession to which I belong. This wreath I shall place on the bust of the first of all dramatic poets, and they shall both descend as an HEIR-LOOM to my POSTERITY!! In addressing this audience, I do not wish to advert to peculiar circumstances attached to myself, but I hope I may be permitted to indulge in a retrospect, and when I reflect that in this country any talent I possess was originally fostered, I feel proud in finding that the same country, which lit up that talent has set a noble example in coming forward to resuscitate it, at a period when a combination is in existence against me!!! I now beg leave to bid you a most respectful farewell."

Now, whether the modesty, genius, or intelligibility of this harangue is most predominant, we are really quite at a loss to determine. We suppose that performers take about with them a stock speech suitable to any audience, just as they do a stock dress, for we find that MR. KEAN, who here says that Ireland was the COUNTRY which originally fostered his TALENT (for which Ireland can evidently never be sufficiently grateful) told the London people in Drury Lane, on the 17th of September, 1822, "he could not but remember with gratitude, that on this spot he first enjoyed the welcome of public favor"—well, wretched England, we suppose must give way on this occasion, since the Catholic question was lost—and so be it. MR. KEAN, in his former speech, told us that "his epitaph should record our favor when he was no more;" but God bless you, that was nothing to what he told our Irish brethren, for it will be seen he informed them that their WREATH OF LAUREL, and SHAKSPEARE'S bust should descend as an HEIR LOOM to his POSTERITY!! Although it appears that KEAN'S ancestry is quite a matter of doubt, as very little trace of it is to be found at the Herald's College, in spite of all the urbane assistance of SIR G. NAYLER, we will answer for it that, for SUCH a legacy, half the kingdom will vie for the distinction of being among his posterity! for to make the thing complete, HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY, (though he cannot, like his Irish subjects, resuscitate TALENT, yet, he always patronizes it) must raise this great man to the Peerage!

It would be injustice to pass over the great benefit Miss GRADDON had at Drury-Lane on Thursday last, which is the best proof to be advanced, in evidence of the favouritism into which this interesting lady, and excellent singer, has this year risen. The appearance of the house, considering also it was her first benefit, surprised us, for without the least exaggeration, it appeared to us a BUMPER.

We were induced to attend Miss LOVE'S benefit, by the modest announcement of Miss FOOTE'S name for the part of Clari, a day or two after Miss TREE'S retirement, and, although, from Miss FOOTE'S never having been under noble protection, and from the spotless nature of her character, there can be no indelicacy in her appearance in this; yet the propriety of following so charming an actress as Miss M. TREE, unless she could undertake to act the part at least AS WELL, is rather questionable. The only remarkable circumstance in the exhibition was, that when she sung "Home, sweet home, there's no place like home," the audience seemed to feel the truth of what she was singing, and evidently wished she would go there. We perceive by those, "whoreson lying knaves," the play bills, that she is to appear in Clari again, next week, and if it should occur, we beg to suggest the following cast, (as the actors call it) Duke Vivaldi, COLONEL BERKELEY; Rolamo, (Clari's Father) OLD FOOTE; Jocoso, JOE COPLEY; Clari, Miss FOOTE, with the song of "HAYNE, sweet HAYNE;" Fidalma, MRS. FOOTE; Ninnetta, GEORGE ROBINS—and then we shall have some fun. We are sorry that Miss LOVE, whom we really like, and who is, moreover, a very pretty and clever girl, had not a better benefit—but we are happy to say, it was no fault of her's, and entirely owing to LORD HARBOROUGH'S being in the WATER HOUSE on the very evening.

The Tempest was revived at Covent Garden Theatre on Wednesday, for the purpose of introducing Miss CAWSE in Ariel, and really, all things considered, it would have been quite as well, let alone. YOUNG in Prospero, seemed to be playing more for 20*l.* a night, than playing SHAKSPEARE, for he positively did nothing more than what is, we believe, technically termed walk through the part, thereby, making Prospero a WALKING Gentleman. FARREN'S Stephano, however, was a capital piece of acting—an inexhaustible drollery, and rich marine humour about it, that we do not remember ever to have seen so fully and forcibly exhibited in the part before—but he is quite a first rate comedian; nor was BLANCHARD'S Trinculo less conspicuous; but RAYNER'S Caliban was quite a misconception. Ariel is quite out of the reach of Miss CAWSE, for whatever old blustering SMART may say, she cannot sing the beautiful music belonging to it—and as for acting this divine creation of the Shakspearian mind, she can do nothing of the sort. It is a waste of time to say a word of Miss HAMMERSLEY'S Miranda, more particularly, as anything we could say must be unfavorable, but it would be a want of justice to omit a most favorable mention of Miss PATON'S Dorinda, inasmuch as her personation of this character was clothed in all that innocence and naiveté which is its peculiar prerogative, and which we have never seen pourtrayed with greater fidelity. It is superfluous to add, that her singing was in the first style of excellence, for it is never otherwise—but, however advantageous it may be to have a foil occasionally, having such a one as Miss HAMMERSLEY, in this instance, totally destroyed the effect of the beautiful Echo duet, but Miss PATON nevertheless, proved herself, throughout her execution of the different pieces of music allotted to her, superior to almost every one of her cotemporaries, and quite on a level with any singer that ever trod the English stage.

We have really been so much occupied lately, as to have been prevented attending the Haymarket, and shall therefore reserve our remarks on LISTON'S return, and the consequent setting to rights of this place of amusement.

We cannot conclude our dramatic article without giving the public a piece of information that must, beyond a doubt, be vastly edifying to them; and although in so doing, we are compelled to speak of ourselves, which we have a horrible objection to, and are also obliged to bring a very insignificant personage into more notice than he was ever introduced to in his life before, still we must do it. In a former number an advertisement appeared from the office, in which a Mr. GEORGE FARREN, brother to the two performers of that name, holds some situation, and at the time he gave it to our clerk, he slipped in his hand a critique of his own on the performance of PERCY FARREN, the new Stage Manager at the Haymarket, which happening to differ materially with our opinion, we inserted our own remarks, instead of his. This obstreperous clerk became so indignant, that he gave us to understand we had lost entirely HIS countenance, and 100*l.* per annum of his advertisements, upon which we had determined to mention the thing publicly; but a very pretty letter, written by his wife, stayed our pen during his absence from town, and we should have been silent altogether, had not his conduct since his return been of a piece with all his preceding behaviour. We beg to apprize all persons interested in such a contemptible subject or object, that as neither bribes nor threats can influence us in the fulfilment of our duty, we shall always make our remarks without the slightest apprehension; but if we had intended to have been scurrilous, of which the said GEORGE FARREN accuses us, we might, in addition to our critical remarks, have mentioned the fact of his brother leaving his wife, to live with Mrs. FAUCIT (a married woman, mother of a large family, and likely to increase it by all appearances); of himself having, in addition to his ASSURANCE, for which he has lately opened an office, written a quantity of trash on the madness of Lear and Hamlet, which only strongly indicated his own, for which his brother WILLIAM made him a consideration, for the purpose of having his own name at the bottom of it; and in addition to all his other vast attainments, his attempting once the editorship, as they say, of a paper called the Mirror, which, however, from giving him so perfect a view of himself, was soon given up. We have to apologize to our readers for taking up so much of their time upon so ridiculous a point, but we do it to convince them of the inflexibility of our principles, and to point out to such impudent specimens of city conceit, as the said GEORGE FARREN, that their only place is the COUNTER where they transact their business, and they should never presume to extend its precincts, but, above all, not as far as the walls of a theatre.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

Madrid, June 8.—The Gazette states that their Majesties are still at Aranjuez, and continue to enjoy good health. It contains numerous promotions in the church, among which is that of D. Jacinto Rodriguez Reio, Dean of the Cathedral of Zamora, to the Archbishoprick of Teruel, in the room of D. Felepe Montaya Diez, deceased.

A report is spread, though the Gazette does not mention it, that General Olaneta has already gained a signal victory over the troops of Bolivar, destroying a corps of six or seven thousand men, that was sent against him. If this victory has really been gained, the affairs of Peru will soon take a different turn, especially if fresh reinforcements should arrive in time from the Peninsula.—Echo du Midi.

The King will leave Aranjuez on the 25th, to return to Madrid. His Majesty will not go this year to Sacedon, having found the waters injurious to his health. It is announced at this moment, that the ambassador of Portugal has had a warm altercation with an illustrious personage, and that he has even been arrested. We can scarcely credit this news, however general the report may be.

Cadiz, June 4.—A letter from Mexico of the 24th of March last, has the following particulars:—The bitterness with which the Spaniards were long pursued has entirely ceased, it falls now upon foreigners, especially the English, who are engaged in working the mines. The Mexicans allow that their situation was much more happy with the Spaniards than with the English, who carry away all the gold and silver; not a single piece of money is now coined in this country. The loans are also considered as ruinous, because the English give us with one hand the money they take away soon after with the other in exchange for their goods, thus hindering all circulation of specie. The state of distress in which the country now is, is extreme; the hatred borne towards foreigners will terminate badly for them, and it will be very difficult to prevent the effusion of blood when the day for the explosion shall come. The Government which protects them will itself find it difficult to resist this shock. Cries of "Death to the Gringos who plunder us, and luck to the Gachupines (Spaniards) who have always treated us like brethren," were lately heard in several quarters of the capital, and excited disorders which were not appeased without much difficulty. It is not in Mexico only that this hatred of the English has manifested itself, it is the same in all America.

New York, May 25.—The prices at which the speculators of Cotton came into the market, on the receipt of the advices per the Amethyst, have not been sustained by subsequent transactions. The market on Friday and Saturday was very inactive, and some of the purchasers manifested a disposition to retire from their contracts, by submitting to a loss. Late on Monday there was a revival of demand, and a prime lot of about 90 bls. of New Orleans was sold at 30 cts. (as cash), and a parcel of about 240 bls. superior Georgian Upland at 28 cts. On Tuesday further sales were made of Georgia and Alabama, at 23¾, 24, and 25; N. Carolina at 26, and some superior Petersburgh at 27¼. The total sales since our last report to you amount to about 2,000 bls. The import has been, from New Orleans, 941 bls.; Alabama, 415; N. Carolina, 346; Virginia, 186.—Total, 1888. Total Import since 1st May, 13,352; Export, from 1st to 18th, 6,924.

Copenhagen, June 11.—The Baltic Company has obtained a Royal Charter for 20 years. The Company is allowed to take 5 per cent. interest instead of 4, and it has received his Majesty's assurance that in case of war, the property of foreigners confided to the Company, and the ships addressed to it, shall be exempt from confiscation and condemnation; and the sums to be paid to the shareholders shall be free from sequestration or discount.

Paris, June 22.—Five per cents., 102f. 80c.—Three per Cents., 75f. 80c.—Bank Stock, 2200f.—Neapolitan 5 per Cents. Certif. Falconnet, 88. 95.—Rente d'Esp. 18¾.—Royal Spanish Loan, 58—Exchange on London: One Month, 25.; 3 ditto, 24. 85.—Cours Authentique, 22d June.

An elephant, which has been kept for some time in a shed near Chitpore, got loose on Wednesday, and being pursued by several strangers, as well as his keeper, he took flight, and, after running for a mile or two, seized two men with his trunk, whom, after dashing them on the ground, he trampled them to death. After that he was fortunately secured, but not without some difficulty.—Bengal Hurkaru, June 11.

FLORENCE, JUNE 11.—Princess Pauline Borghese (sister of Bonaparte) died the day before yesterday of a lingering consumption, which baffled the skill of the most distinguished physicians of this city. Prince Camille Borghese remained with his wife, to the last moment. Her remains will be conveyed to Rome, and interred in the Borghese Chapel at St. Maria Magiore.

Extract of a letter from Trieste, June 5, 1825:—"Yesterday, at noon, there arrived here the packet boat in ten days from Corfu. Many of us ran eagerly to learn intelligence of our country. The Captain informed us, that Navarino, from want of provisions, had been obliged to enter into a treaty of capitulation; but the Greek forces arrived in time both by sea and land, they burnt the hostile fleet, and freed Navarino. Many of us would not attach credit to this information, until we received letters from our friends at Corfu. They reached us to day rather late, and are to the same effect. Letters, which we received this evening from Ancona, state, that a vessel had arrived there from Zante, which gave them intelligence confirmatory of the burning of the Egyptian fleet, and of the liberation of Navarino. The above news are universally believed here, and I give them you as fully confirmed.

MISCELLANEOUS.

VOTES AT COUNTY ELECTIONS.—As this is the period for making the new Land Tax Rates, it behoves every Freeholder to call on the Assessor of his parish, and see that his own name or that of his tenant, is inserted in the Rate, as the law requires that every person voting in respect of a Freehold Estate must be rated in the Land Tax either in his own name or in the name of his tenant.

PROBERT'S FUNERAL.—The corpse of this wretched man was on Monday night conveyed in a shell to an undertaker's in Long-acre, from whence it was on Wednesday taken for burial to St. Martin's church-yard, about three o'clock: by mistake some ground had been opened which belonged to another family, which being discovered, the grave was filled up, and another dug. During the delay occasioned by this operation, it became known that Probert was to be buried, and an immense crowd was collected; and so great was the noise, that the voice of the clergyman was scarcely audible, and the rev. gentleman appeared considerably agitated by the painful service which he had to perform. The corpse was followed by some persons belonging to the undertaker, and the turnkey at Newgate who has the custody of the prisoners under sentence of death. None of the relations attended as mourners: but the aged and afflicted mother of the deceased was observed in the church-yard, witnessing the mournful spectacle.

DUEL.—A meeting took place on Thursday on Hounslow-heath. The quarrel originated at a house of intrigue. The parties met at day-break, and proceeded to a third fire, when Capt. Ra—ls received the fire of B. B—s—d, and was seriously wounded in the shoulder.

There is at present residing at Brussels a Brazilian Royal Family. His Majesty's name is Acdola, King of a tribe called the Puris. His consort was wife to the King of another tribe, whom he slew, and thus became possessed of the widow. They are accompanied by their son.

THE ARMY.

His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief, it is understood, will review the undermentioned Regiments, in three Brigades, on the 28th inst. (the day at present fixed) on Hounslow Heath, viz:—Brigade of Household Cavalry, 1st and 2d Life Guards, and Royal Horse Guards—Brigade of Dragoons, 1st and 2d Dragoon Guards and 2d Dragoons; Light Cavalry, 7th Hussars and 12th Lancers, Royal Horse Artillery (three troops); the 8th Hussars will keep the ground.

GRAND REVIEW OF THE GUARDS.—His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief will review four Battalions of the Guards, in Hyde Park, on the 27th instant.

Detachments belonging to the 3d Dragoon Guards, the 7th Dragoon Guards, and the 22d regiment of Foot, marched on Monday, from Westminster for Bristol, on route to Ireland—from the 24th, 43d, 94th, and 12th regiments of Infantry, on route to Plymouth—from the 40th, 53d, and 58th regiments of Foot, for Chatham—from the 33d and 77th regiments of Infantry, for Edinburgh and Glasgow—from the Royal Staff Corps, for Hythe—and from the 4th Light Dragoons, for Maidstone.

After the review of the Regular Troops has taken place, it is the intention of his Royal Highness the Duke of York to review on Wimbledon Common the Light Horse Volunteers, the Surrey Yeomanry, Hon. Artillery Company, and East India Volunteers. They will consist of about 1400 men, viz.—Surrey Yeomanry, 300; Light Horse, 200; Artillery Company, 200; East India Volunteers, 700.

The 85th (Connaught Rangers) Regiment, stationed at pre-

DIORAMA, REGENT'S PARK.—The present views are the Ruins of Holywood Chapel; a Moonlight Scene; and the Interior of Chartres Cathedral.—Open daily from ten till four o'clock.—N. B. Between eleven and three o'clock is the best time to view the Diorama.

THE HOLY SEPULCHRE at JERUSALEM.—Now Open, in the Great Room, No. 26, St. James's-street, a Grand Model of the Interior of that most interesting antiquity, the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, with the Tomb of Our Saviour, as it at present appears at Jerusalem, executed from drawings recently taken on the spot, on a scale 90 feet in circumference, being the exact dimensions of the original building.—Open from 11 till 6.—Admittance 1s.

THE APOLLONICON.

A GRAND MUSICAL INSTRUMENT, (under the immediate Patronage of His Majesty,) invented and constructed by FLIGHT and ROBSON, Organ Builders, is now open to Exhibition.—The magnificent Instrument has been honoured with the sanction of the most eminent mechanical and musical men of the age; and in the performance of some of the celebrated works of Haydn, Beethoven, Mozart, Cherubini, &c. is allowed to possess a grandeur and variety of effect, with a precision and delicacy of expression superior to any other instrument in Europe.—The Rooms are open daily, from 1 to 4 o'clock, No. 101, St. Martin's lane.—Admittance 1s.

THE AUTOMATONS.—The Musical Lady and Ten other Automatons, including the Walking Figure now exhibiting in the Gothic Hall, 7, Haymarket, (next the Little Theatre, which by the power of mechanism, at a cost of more than 16,000*l.* display, by their perfect imitation of animated nature, the highest achievements of human skill and ingenuity. The spacious and richly decorated Hall is surrounded by a noble collection of Ancient Armour, the whole forming the most magnificent and gratifying exhibition ever opened to the Nobility and Public.—Admittance 2s. Children 1s.—Open from Ten till Six.

ATHENS.—A view of this interesting City, comprising the Acropolis, the Parthenon, the Grove of Academus, and several other objects equally fraught with classic associations, is now exhibiting at the Cosmorama—this view and the Panorama of Edinburgh, at Leicester square, will enable the public to judge of the resemblance said to be observable between those two Cities—the Cosmorama having undergone a total change, contains also Views of Grand Cairo, the Pyramids, the Sphinx, and other magnificent antiquities of Egypt, and some very extraordinary objects in Italy, Spain, and India, 209, Regent street, Oxford street.

THE EGYPTIAN TOMB, discovered by the late Mr. BELZONI.—The Exhibition of the Egyptian Tomb, with a variety of Models of Temples and Pyramids explored by the late Traveller, is now open at 28, Leicester-Square. Admittance, 2s.; Children, 1s.

PERRING'S PATENT DOUBLE EDGED SILK HATS.—PERRING (original inventor of this justly celebrated Hat,) invites the members of fashion, taste, and fancy, to his establishment, 413, Strand, and at Hammersmith. The Peer, the Gentleman, the Man of Fashion, the Tradesman, and the Sportsman, here find a Hat suited to their wants, and worthy their peculiar notice. Little need be said respecting the qualities or advantages of the Hats in question; suffice it to say, they possess what every good manufactured Hat ought to do. Public estimation is the best criterion to preference, and it is fully borne out in the universal satisfaction and esteem in which these inimitable Hats are held. The double-edged Silk Hat differs from all others in possessing an extra quantity of napping on that part of the crown most exposed to wear, thereby removing that long existing prejudice against them. Price 17s.—Best Superfine light Beaver Hats, in a variety of modern shapes, warranted to retain their shape and colour in any climate, 23s.—Youth's Silk Hats, Gentleman's and Youth's Seal and Fur Forage Caps, Young Ladies Hats and Bonnets. Hats covered with Silk and double edged, 12s.

Gentlemen residing in the country may meet with early attention to their orders by stating the number of inches round the band of the Hat, and inclosing a remittance.

NEW MUSIC.—Published by C. CHAPPLE, Bookseller to his Majesty, and their Royal Highnesses the Dukes of York and Cambridge, Royal Library, 59, Pall-mall, where may be had all new Music as soon as it appears.—Nos. 1 and 2, of SIX FANTASIAS, on favourite Airs, for the Pianoforte and Violoncello, composed and dedicated to the Amateurs of Port Louis, By GEORGE HENRY CAUNTER, Esq. late of his Majesty's Civil Service at the Mauritius; and late Judge of the Vice Admiralty Court in that Colony.

The above Fantasias are on favourite airs, selected from the works of the best authors, and each consists of an introduction, twelve variations, and a enda. They were not written for publication. The scarcity of music for the Pianoforte and Violoncello, or at least, of such music as, without being too easy, would come within the scope of amateur talent, induced the author to endeavour to compose something that might answer his own purpose. But it never entered his views to offer his productions to the public; for independently of their want of merit, he feared to encounter that opposition with which amateur compositions have always to contend. The continued demand, however, for this kind of music, and the reiterated wish of several eminent Professors, who have promised him their support, have determined him to publish these trifles. As he aims at no display of science—as he sets up no pretension to merit—as he offers his humble endeavours to the musical world only from the general want of compositions for the Pianoforte and Violoncello, he ventures to claim the indulgence and encouragement of the profession.

The BOAT SONG; or Gallant and Gaily on the Waves riding. The melody by an Amateur, arranged for three voices, with an accompaniment for the Pianoforte. By William Hawes, gentleman of his Majesty's Chapels Royal, and sung by Messrs. Gross, Nield, and Leete, with the utmost approbation. Price 2s. 6d.

BRADBERRY'S PATENT SPECTACLES, upon unerring principles to preserve the sight to extreme old age. It is necessary to caution the public against the use of improper Spectacles, as their effects prove injurious, instead of beneficial to the eye. The unremitted and anxious study Mr. BRADBURY has paid to his glasses for upwards of 30 years, has called forth the most distinguished approbation of their merit from the medical profession, and from many thousands of persons of the highest rank and respectability.—To be had only at 28, Holles-street, the first door out of Oxford-street, next to the large Fruiterer's at the corner, facing Hanover-square, and at no other place in the United Kingdom. Orders from the country immediately attended to. Removed from 332, Oxford-street.

LADIES and GENTLEMEN may rely on it, although there are Articles daily puffed in the newspapers for the Hair, but it is ackoowledged as a fact, whoever makes a fair trial of the Original Thick RUSSIA OIL, has found it, through the Aromatic Oils it is prepared with, the wholesomest and best Oil for preserving and promoting the hair of ladies, gentlemen, and children, and if used constantly not a hair will fall off or turn grey, and is such a nourisher to the Hair, that if it has began to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour; will restore the hair on the bald part, if the least signs of roots are remaining, has been proved by hundreds.

A. PRINCE is proud to acknowledge the favour of his Gracious Majesty of Great Britain, in sending for six bottles of his celebrated Russia Oil. It ought really to be generally known—the principal Physicians have recommended those who wear false hair to rub their heads often with the Russia Oil, as, through the aromatic ingredient it is prepared with is wholesome and refreshing to the head. Observe, Mr. Marshal and other respectable Court hair-dressers, will not recommend any other article for the hair but the Prince's Original Thick Russia Oil, as they have experienced it is the best for dressing, preserving, and promoting the hair; but there are several hair-dressers, when Ladies and Gentlemen have their Hair dressed by them, they recommend Bears' Grease, or other Oils for the Hair, though they know it is a humbug.

Ask for Prince's Russia Oil—the Ounce Bottle 5s.; a large bottle containing Five Ounces, 1*l.* which is a saving. Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. PRINCE, No. 9, Poland street, Oxford street; Mr. Smith, Perfumer to His Majesty, 117, New Bond street; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders. Be particular, and observe his address, "A. Prince, No 9, Poland Street, Oxford Street, London," on the envel of each bottle; without, it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose.—Purchasers ought to be particular, as counterfeits are in circulation.—Also, Prince's RUSSIA DYE is so improved, as there is no doubt that it will change Red or Grey Hair on the Head, Whiskers, or any part to Brown or Black in a few minutes.—Directions sealed up with each bottle, at half a guinea, or two bottles for One Pound.

BY THE KING'S ROYAL LETTERS PATENT, granted May, 1825.—PAYNTER and HAWKE respectfully solicit the Nobility, Gentry, and Public, to inspect their new-invented PATENT FIRE FEEDER, the novelty and utility of which will be found to exceed that of any other invention of late years. It supplies fires with coal or any other fuel for the whole of the day without the use of the coal-scoop, or the attendance of domestics; prevents dirt and dust, and also materially lessens the quantity of fuel which is required in the ordinary method. It is used with the greatest ease, and can be attached to any stove in common use without being exposed to view.—To be seen at their Manufactories, Nos. 178, and 232, Strand, near Norfolk-street, also at No. 7, Cheapside, corner of St. Paul's Church-yard, where it is kept in daily use.—N.B. Shower, vapour, warm, and cold baths, on entire new principles.

BURGESS' ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES Warehouse, 107, STRAND, corner of Savoy Steps, London.—JOHN BURGESS and SON, being apprised of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the ORIGINAL, to observe the Name and Address correspond with the above;—the general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection, J. B. and Son submit the following caution:—Some are in appearance at first sight "Burgess' Essence of Anchovies;"—others "Burgis's," and many more without address.—JOHN BURGESS and SON having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the labels previous to purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.—Burgess' New Sauce for general purposes, having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient sauce—will keep good in all climates.—Warehouse No. 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy Steps.—(The Original Fish Sauce Warehouse.)

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY.

THE GARDNER PEERAGE.—Mr. TYNDAL, on the part of Henry Fenton Gardner (Jadis), commented on the evidence adduced against his claim.—The only question was, whether he was the son of Allan Hyde, Baron Gardner, and that depended on the single inquiry, whether he was born within the time limited by the laws of nature. He was born in marriage. Lord Gardner was born in 1796, and lived with his wife down to the 30th Jan. 1802. On that day Captain Gardner was on board his Majesty's ship the Resolution, preparing for a cruise, and on that day Mrs. Gardner left the ship and returned to London. In July following, Captain Gardner returned from his cruise, and on the 8th of December following, Mrs. Gardner was borne of the present claimant to the titles and the honours of his father. Capt. Gardner continued to live with Mrs. Gardner till June, 1803. By the evidence of Susannah Baker, it appeared that Captain Gardner was acquainted with his wife's pregnancy, for he had expressed anxiety for her health, and it was therefore unfair to insinuate that the pregnancy and birth of the child were concealed. Captain Gardner knew who Dr. Clarke was, and he had seen him in general attendance on Mrs. Gardner, and must have known the object of his visits. This perfectly rebutted the charge of concealment. He would be bold to say that this was not a question of probability or impossibility, and he would shew that by various cases in point, and particularly that of the Banbury Peerage. The learned counsel went on citing several cases, and contending that the only question under which the claim could be tried was, the possibility or impossibility of the child being born in the time stated. He would call several eminent medical gentlemen who would give evidence to that effect. The opinion of Dr. Hamilton, of Edinburgh (who had not been able to attend), was, that the birth of this child might be legitimate. The result of his experience was, that a lady had exceeded her tenth revolution by twelve days, and another by sixteen days. The opinion of Dr. Harvey, the discoverer of the circulation of the blood, was, that ladies had exceeded the eleventh month. There was a case on record of 43 weeks except one day, named Edward Cooke, born after the death of the father, and a jury gave a verdict that he was legitimate.—Dr. Grenville—I am a physician, and a member of the Royal College; I have practised as a physician since 1803, and in midwifery for ten years; I have published some papers in the "Philosophical Transactions" on the Physiology of Generation; I have examined the registers of 9000 pregnant women in two lying-in hospitals which I attend, and my experience enables me to state, that the usual time for delivery is from the 256th to the 280th day since impregnation. (Here he referred to the register of the 9000 cases.)—Are there any cases of protracted delivery?—Dr. Grenville—It is impossible to wade through a mass of 9000 women.—In answer to other questions, the Doctor said that he could not state particularly without referring to his notes of private practice.—Not having these notes at hand, he said that he would state a case in his own private practice, namely, his own lady.—The LORD CHANCELLOR—His own what?—The Earl of LAUDERDALE—His own lady—why that is certainly a case in his private practice.—The Doctor then stated, that Mrs. Grenville was delivered of a ten months' child, being in his opinion 306 days; but he knew of a case of 318 days; but doubting the woman, he examined her rigourously, and he would say, it was only a case of 310 days. This was in 1821. There is no other way of ascertaining the fact of gestation but from the woman's own account, although many circumstances may occur by which a medical man may judge. I am aware of no circumstances that may render a period of 311 days' gestation impossible.—Cross-examined; I am a native of Milan—I studied at Pavia, acknowledged to be one of the first medical institutions in Europe—I practised medicine since 1803—I practised at the Westminster Lying-in Hospital—I have been a surgeon in the Navy, and am so still—I travelled with Mr. Hamilton, the late Under Secretary of State, through Greece and Turkey, and was consulted in almost all the towns through which we passed—Mr. Hamilton had no lady with him.—By the ATTORNEY-GENERAL; in 1817 I returned to this country, and practised in Grosvenor-square.—By the Earl of LAUDERDALE; I took my degree in medicine at Pavia, in 1801; I was then 20 years of age.—Dr. Conquest—The usual time of delivery is nine months, but I have met with several cases protracted beyond that period. One woman was pregnant for at least ten months. She had borne six children, and it was not till the expiration of five weeks after the expected time that she was delivered of a very large and healthy child. She had exceeded at her next labour by four weeks and with her four other children she went only nine months. I had formerly laughed at the idea of a woman going more than nine months, even in my public lectures. The Doctor then stated other cases, and his own opinion now was, that women frequently went beyond the regular time. If he were to credit such men as Livy, Pliny, Hippocrates, La Motte, and others, he believed the period of eleven months had been exceeded.—Suppose that an intercourse had taken place between Lord and Lady Gardner on the 30th January, and a child were born on the 8th December, do you believe it could be the issue of the parties?—Dr. Conquest; I am bound to admit the possibility, and its probability too, because I have met with a case of longer duration than 311 days, but I consider these cases as a departure from the ordinary course of nature.—By the ATTORNEY-GENERAL; I have read the authors alluded to—though I laughed at the idea of women going more than nine months; my conviction to the contrary has not been produced by the circumstances alluded to, but by my general practice since.—Mr. John Sabine, accoucheur, in Fenchurch-street, instanced the case of his own wife as having gone from the 14th October till the 14th of August, and from this case he believed it possible that a child might be borne from the 30th of January to the 8th of December, being 310 or 311 days. Quickening varies from the 12th to the 25th week. The child in question might be born at the time stated.—Dr. Merriman had 30 years practice. The usual period of gestation was 40 weeks, or 280 days; but he had known instances of 290, 300, 303, and 309 days. One lady had conceived on the 8th of March, and expected to be delivered in December, but was delivered on the 11th of January following, making 209 days.—The further consideration was then adjourned.

The following bills received the Royal Assent (the Marquis of Winchester, the Earl of Shaftesbury, and the Lord Chancellor being Commissioners): the Buckingham House, the Excise Licences, the Quarantine Laws, the St. Mauritius Trade, the Colonial Intercourse, the Lunatic Trustees, the Distillery Regulation, the Canadian Trade, and several private bills.

The Irish Bank bill, and the Flint Glass bill, were then read a third time and passed.

On the third reading of the University Police bill, the Earl of LAUDERDALE moved an amendment, that the word "wandering," used in the clause, be omitted, and that the words "acting in a disorderly manner," be substituted in its stead. The house divided—For the amendment, 11; Against it, 9.—The bill was then read a third time and passed.

On the third reading of the Judges' Salaries bill, the LORD CHANCELLOR observed, that although the emoluments of the Chancellor were known to every one, yet it was impossible to go into any company without hearing various ridiculous accounts relating to them. Said his lordship, "I can go nowhere without hearing it asserted to be four times its actual amount, and I believe that no man would be considered as adhering to truth who described it to be three-fourths less than what it is generally affirmed to be. I was, myself, in company a short time since, and I heard a gentleman assert that the salary of the Lord Chancellor was 40,000*l.* per annum.; another gentleman got up, and said, that this statement was not exactly correct, for he knew it to be 35,000*l.* and no more—and that that was, in truth, the whole amount. Now this variation amounts to very little, as to the emolument of the situation I have too long held—I say too long, because if I had been but common justice to, I should not have been Lord Chancellor of England this day. I say to those who have endeavoured to turn me out that they have not hit upon the right method, and I add, treat me with common justice, and you will find that you can dispose of me as you wish by fair means." As to the salary the Chancellor received, he would now declare that the 10,000*l.* to be received by the Chief Justice of the King's Bench would be, small as it was, as much as the Lord Chancellor had received for three years. He did not mean to say that this was a fair average of the emoluments during the 23 years he had been in office; nor did he include in this calculation the fees he received as Speaker of the House of Lords, but in no year had he received the same emoluments as when he was counsel at the bar. The emoluments of the two offices he held he should imagine fluctuated somewhere between 14,500*l.* and 15,000*l.* a-year. With respect to the abuses of the Court of Chancery, he would declare that he had no offices to sell, nor would he sell them had he any to dispose of. The commission which had been established would remedy all these abuses. His lordship added, in a low tone, and with much pathos, that he had discharged his duty to the best of his power—he prayed to God that those who would have to succeed him would execute it more satisfactorily—more sedulously, or anxiously, he could say, they would not attempt to execute them. They might make sacrifices to popular clamour, for insults daily received; but if the temper of the times was to pull down the character and honour of men in high judicial situations, and render them objects of scandal and calumny, the Peers of the country could not long exist after such characters had been sacrificed.—The bill was then passed.

The Judges this day attended, to give their opinion upon the measure introduced by the Marquis of Hastings, relating to the rate of interest in India at 12 per cent. and explaining the meaning of 13th Geo. III. The Chief Justice of the Common Pleas now declared, that the penalties of the Usury Laws did not extend to the territories of independent Princes in India, and not, by the terms of the Act of Parliament, even to all places under the British power in India. It was impossible the legislature here could know what rate of interest would be sufficient for India, since there were different opinions of what the rate should be in England.

The Earl of WESTMORELAND presented a petition from Mr. Stafford Cooke, relative to the Stafford Peerage, which was referred to the Committee of Privileges.

TUESDAY.

Lord LYNEDOCH adverting to the state of Windsor Castle, suggested the propriety of improving the residence of our monarch. He had mentioned the circumstance to one of His Majesty's Ministers, who had answered that it could not be done without causing great unpopularity. Now he was of opinion, that as private property was daily trenched upon by canals, iron rail-ways and road bills, an act of parliament might be passed compelling the holders of the property in question to give up for a liberal remuneration such parts of it as were a nuisance to that ancient royal residence. He had thought it right to mention this, though it was not his intention to make any motion upon the subject.

Mr. BROGDEN and others from the Commons, brought up the Passage Vessels, the Irish Linen Bounties, the Newpapers Act Amendment, the Smuggling Prevention, Customs Consolidation, Exchange of Church Lands Bills, and several Private Bills which were read a first time.

The EARL of LIVERPOOL moved the second reading of the Writs of Error Bill. The present state of the law tended materially to defeat the ends of justice, and was only calculated to produce delay in case of the lawful creditor. Out of 1195 writs that had been issued out, 11 only had been acted upon.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said, by doing away the writs of error, the general issue would be pleaded, and a greater delay be caused. The bill was read.

On the second reading of the Bubble Act Bill, the EARL of LAUDERDALE stated the object of the bill to be to favour Joint Stock Companies, which Companies were always unfavourable to the free spirit of commerce.—The EARL of LIVERPOOL apprehended no fear from Joint Stock Companies, if the individuals were made liable, not only for their respective subscriptions, but for the whole of their property. The object of the bill, together with the repeal of the Bubble Act, was to enable the Crown to grant qualified charters.—The LORD CHANCELLOR agreed in what had fallen from his noble friend. It would be useful to insert in the body of the bill a clause that the present Act should not affect the common law.—The EARL of LIVERPOOL gave notice, that on Friday he should call the attention of the House to Jurisdiction in Appeals to shew how the machinery operated.

WEDNESDAY.

GARDNER PEERAGE.—The cross-examination of Dr. Grenville was this morning.—Dr. Elliotson was also called, but nothing material resulted from his examination, and the further proceedings were adjourned.

Mr. BROGDEN and others returned from the Commons the merchant and factor's law, the Rolls Court bills, and several other bills agreed to, and brought up a private bill which was read a first time.

The Earl of LIVERPOOL postponed the committee on the Judges Salaries' bill till to-morrow.

The Bubble Act Repeal bill was read a third time and passed, after a few words had been inserted into it on the motion of the LORD CHANCELLOR, declaring that the common law stood unrepealed.

On the motion of the Earl of LIVERPOOL, the Writs of Error Abolition bill went through a committee and was reported, with the addition of the clause of which Lord Ellenborough gave notice yesterday, in amendment of the compensation clause.

The Apothecaries' bill and the Isle of Man Trade bill were read a second time, and ordered to be committed to-morrow.

The Custom Laws' Repeal, the Irish Linen Bounties, and the Irish Roads' bills, went respectively through committees and were reported.—Adjourned.

THURSDAY.

Mr. BROGDEN and others returned from the Commons the Gardens Protection bill, and brought up the Grants in Aids bill, and the Marylebone Vestries bill, which were read a first time.

Mr. GAITSKELL from the Council office, presented a copy of an order in council relative to the importation of goods in Colonial ships.

The Earl of LIVERPOOL had mentioned his intention some time since to introduce a measure for reversing certain attainders in addition to those which had been reversed on a former occasion. As some objections had been made by a noble lord to the proposal at so advanced a period, he should postpone it for the present, but should certainly make a motion to that effect early next session.

A person from the commissioners for building new churches, presented an account of the expences incurred for that object, to the 5th March, 1825.—Laid on the table.

The Earl of Liverpool moved the second reading of the Custom Duties Consolidation bill, which after a few words from Lord LANSDOWNE was carried.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE said, that if he had been in the house when the bill for increasing the salaries of the Judges had been read a third time, he would have moved that the salary of the Vice Chancellor be raised from 6000*l.* to 7000*l.* as he conceived that he should be maintained on a footing of emoluments and dignity not inferior in the least to the Master of the Rolls.

On the order of the day for the third reading of the India Judges Salaries' Augmentation bill, the Marquis of LANSDOWNE said, that he wished some reasons had been given why the salaries of the Judges in India should be raised. For those which operated in favour of the measure here, could have no influence in our eastern dominions with a totally different state of things. He should, however, not make that a ground of objection to the bill, but should take this opportunity of stating that there were many clauses which it would be very desirable to introduce into the bill, to regulate and improve the state of Judicature in India.—The Earl of LIVERPOOL contended, that the changes suggested by the noble marquis had no connection whatever with the present bill.—The bill was then read a third time and passed.

On the order of the day for the third reading of the Cutting and Maiming (Scotland) bill, the Earl of LAUDERDALE moved that the clause relating to the vitriolic acid, be left out.—The amendment was opposed by Viscount MELVILLE, and negatived, after which the bill was read a third time and passed.

The house having resolved into a committee on the Apothecaries bill, Viscount MELVILLE moved its duration be limited to one year, in order the subject might again come before the consideration of Parliament next Session, when the necessary alterations could be made.—After a few words from the Earl of LAUDERDALE, Lord SUFFIELD, and Earl ROSLYN, the amendment was agreed to.—The house then resumed, and the report was ordered to be received to-morrow.

The Isle of Man Trade, the Smuggling Prevention, the Warehousing of Goods, the Dublin Corn Exchange, and the Scotch Partnerships bills, went respectively through committees, and were reported.

Mr. BROGDEN and others from the Commons, brought up the Combination Laws bill, which was read a first time, and ordered to be printed.—The same gentlemen then presented a copy of the report of the committee appointed by the Commons, to inquire into the state of the Combination Laws.—Laid on the table.

The Earl of SHAFTESBURY gave notice, in the absence of his noble friend, the Earl of Liverpool, that if the printing of the bill should be finished to-morrow, he should move its second reading.—Adj.

FRIDAY.

Earl FITZWILLIAM presented a petition from the inhabitants of Sheffield against the Combination Laws Amendment Bill.

The EARL of LAUDERDALE presented a petition to the same effect, from a Workman of the town of Birmingham.

The Combination Laws Amendment Bill was read a second time.

Earl GROSVENOR moved for Returns relative to the Office of Clerk of the Pells.

The West India Company Bill was read a third time and passed.

The EARL of LIVERPOOL, pursuant to his notice, rose to call the attention of the House to the present state of its appellant jurisdiction. Their Lordships were aware that a Committee had been appointed two years ago in consequence of the immense number of appeals, to consider the means of getting rid of the accumulating mass. It might be a matter of curiosity to know how the judgments of the House stood as to Affirmers and Reversals. With the assistance of the Clerk he had procured a Return, from which it appeared that of 86 Appeals this year, there had been 63 Affirmers, 17 Reversals, and 6 Remittals. It reflected the highest credit on the Committee, on the House, on the Noble and Learned Earl on the Woolsack, and on the other Learned Lord, who was not now present, and who had afforded such useful and beneficial assistance. This justice was the more due to him, as he had lately been made the object of a most wanton and unprovoked attack.

Earl ROSSLYN expressed his high satisfaction at the benefits which had resulted from the measure adopted, and the skill and attention displayed in carrying it into effect. He anticipated a great diminution in the number of appeals from the late changes in the administration of the law in Scotland, and highly approved of the suggestion of the Noble Earl that one day out of five should be dedicated next year to the hearing of Appeals received during the course of the Session.

The Scotch Copartnership's Bill, the Isle of Man Trade Bill, the Scotch Cutting and Maiming, the Smuggling Prevention, the Warehousing of Goods, the Newspapers and the Writs of Error Bill were read a third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY.

The House went to the House of Peers to hear the royal Assent.

The St. Thomas's Hospital Bill was passed.

Mr. HUME adverted to the petition he had presented in the last week. He had made inquiry, and he learned that gold had been refused by a bank in Bristol, in payment of their notes. That he believed had proceeded from a mistake on the part of some person connected with the bank. Bank of England notes had been offered, and refused by the petitioner, who, since the petition had been presented, had been offered gold for his notes; but he wished to have a legislative declaration on the subject.—Mr. H. DAVIS bore testimony to the respectability of the banking-house alluded to. The petitioner had no right to appeal to the House as he had applied to a court of law, though he had been subsequently offered gold. It was now understood that all country banks were bound to pay in gold, and no good could arise from the presentation of the petition.—Some conversation arose, in which Mr. H. GURNEY, Mr. ELLICE, Lord FOLKSTONE, Mr. ABERCROMBY, Mr. J. SMITH, and several other members took part.—Mr. Secretary PEEL said, that the House had been drawn into a debate on a most delicate subject, without any previous notice, and for which he saw no necessity. The Bristol banker himself now admitted he was in the wrong, and would do so no more. As that was the case, he saw no need for the interference of the House.—Mr. Secretary CANNING said, that the country banker was equally bound as the Bank of England to pay his notes in gold. He was bound to do so by the law of the land; and any particular enactment would rather weaken than add to the existing security. The non-circulation of the small notes was necessary to be protected by new enactments. But that necessity had ceased by the return to a metallic currency, when all the machinery of the Suspension Act had been done with.—Mr. MABERLY said, that the House ought not to receive the petition, which was dishonest in its prayer. It stated that the facts complained of were growing evils, whereas in truth it was an isolated case, and had never been heard of until the petition itself was brought before the House.

Mr. HUSKISSON (in answer to a question from Mr. DENISON,) said, that European produce was, by the Navigation Laws, since the time of Charles the Second, allowed to be imported from any European port, whether the ships bringing it belonged to the country or not, with certain exceptions therein specified. Since then a clause had been introduced, which authorised the bringing of goods from any country, in ships belonging to that country, or in British ships, although the goods might not be the produce of the country from which they were thus imported. This alteration of it was found necessary to introduce, in consequence of the American Navigation laws. Mr. WALLACE said, that in consequence of the state of the country, as regarded the combination laws, it was evident that some steps should be taken for the purpose of checking the evils which had recently become matter of notoriety. Those combinations were generally constituted in the usual form, with a Secretary and a Committee, and the objects of all seemed to be pretty much alike—those of restricting the time of labour, and enhancing its price. The hon. gentleman then concluded by moving that the House should resolve itself into a Committee on the combination amongst workmen.—Mr. ROBERTSON was proceeding to state to the House the gradual progress of commerce throughout all the nations of Europe from the earliest periods, when he was called to order by Mr. HUSKISSON; and the SPEAKER said, that he could not perceive how the commerce of the whole world was connected with the question before the House.—Mr. ROBERTSON again proceeded, and was about stating the alterations which had taken place in the Navigation Laws; when Mr. PEEL rose to order. A gentleman had once commenced with the history of the Phœnicians, which he made to bear upon the American war; but he could not even conjecture how the hon. gentleman meant to connect the Navigation Laws with the combination amongst workmen.—Mr. ROBERTSON then advocated the necessity of some restrictive enactment against combination amongst workmen. Mr. HUME contended, that the statement of the right honourable gentleman (Mr. Wallace) was somewhat overcharged, and he hoped therefore, the House would receive his observations with certain restrictions. The House then went into committee.

Mr. MANSFIELD objected to the clause authorising Magistrates summarily to punish persons who should insult or obstruct others, in order to compel them to join any association.—Mr. HOBHOUSE deprecated giving discretionary power to justices, which was so susceptible of abuse. What, for instance, would be considered as Insult? Some Country Justice might consider a particular tone of voice an insult, and might lock a man up, and send for a constable to search his person for it. This was not an imaginary case, but was one which the House was occupied in examining lately.—Mr. HUSKISSON disclaimed any intention of harshness. The whole object of the bill was to secure the free competition of labour and capital; and this clause was only for securing the utmost freedom to individuals, and to prevent their being ridden over, and over-ruled, by Unions and Combinations. It was, in fact, to protect the weak against the strong.—Mr. HOBHOUSE did not object to the Bill, but to the introduction of the word "insult,"

Sir Robert Wilson objected also strongly to the word "insult." The Committee divided, for the clause, 90—against it, 18—majority in favour of the clause, 72.—Mr. Hume said, that the House, in agreeing to that clause, were virtually opposing the people.—Lord A. Hamilton, Mr. W. Smith and Mr. Calcraft, condemned the language used by the hou. member for Aberdeen.—Sir F. Burnett regretted that a little more time had not been given to see the operation of the bill of last year. He defended the hon. member for Aberdeen, whose warmth on the subject was very natural, considering that he had in the committee been obliged to stand single-handed for what he considered his duty. Mr. Denman proposed, instead of a summary conviction before two Magistrates, to substitute "by the Verdict of a Jury."—The Attorney-General said, that the cases selected were those of force and violence, and called for a summary conviction.—The committee divided. For the amendment 53; against it, 78.—Mr. Hume said, he should move an amendment, that no master-manufacturer, or the son of a master-manfacturer, should act as a magistrate under this act.—The committee divided. For the amendment, 15; against it, 60.

Mr. Denman stated, that at that late hour (one o'clock in the morning) he should move to postpone the consideration of the petition against Mr. Kendrick to Tuesday. He should also move for the attendance of John Franks, Esther his wife, Mr. Peters, and Mr. Drakard. This motion gave rise to a conversation of some length, in which Mr. Secretary Peel, Mr. Denman, Mr. Abercromby, Dr. Phillimore, Mr. C. W. Wynn, the Attorney-General and Mr. Baring participated. After which, Mr. Denman gave notice, that he would to-morrow (Tuesday) bring his charge under the consideration of the House.

The Customs Consolidation Bill was read a third time, and passed, with a clause, by way of rider, that the bonds given by owners of British ships, relative to the registry of the same should be upon the same stamps as other bonds.

The Colonies Trade Bill was read a third time and passed.

TUESDAY.

Mr. Hume presented a petition from Lieut.-Colonel Fitzsimon and others, complaining of the delay in distributing the Deccan Prize Money.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, the Trustees had now agreed on the amount of the claims, and there was only wanting a list of distribution, and it was not till the 1st of June that the Trustees got the list of names from the captors, in order to frame the lists for distribution.—Mr. Secretary Canning (in answer to a question from Lord John Russell) said, the amount of the claims made by the British creditors on Spain to the Commissioners, were about 2,000,000*l.* and no exertion should be wanting to produce a settlement.—Mr. Tremaine presented a petition from Mr. Kenrick, stating that he was taken by surprise, in the order made by the House last night to examine witnesses in the case of Franks, and that he had not had time to instruct counsel. He therefore prayed for time before witnesses were examined.—Mr. Denman had no wish to hurry the case on, and would suggest Thursday for the examination.—Mr. Secretary Peel said, it might be essential for Mr. Kenrick to produce evidence, to shew the previous character of Franks; and he suggested to the hon. member to withdraw his motion for this Session.—The House then went into a Committee on the petition of Camfor.—Mr. Denman protested against any inference being drawn from any supposed flippancy of manner in Mr. Camfor's mode of giving his evidence, or of his supposed motives for instituting this proceeding. The hon. and learned member recapitulated the circumstances of the case, and animadverted on the neglect of Mr. Kenrick in not taking the testimony of Camfor on oath. He knew that it would be said Mr. Kenrick had paid the penalty for this impropriety of conduct; but was it any answer, that because the individual had been punished in a court of justice, he was therefore to be continued in a high office, and continue to deny justice to the end of time? He then proposed three resolutions, to the effect that the statements of Mr. Camfor were substantially proved by the evidence which had been presented at the bar of the House, and that the detention of Mr. Camfor by Mr. Kenrick was a gross abuse of his authority as a magistrate.—Mr. Secretary Peel contended, that the conduct of Mr. Kenrick in refusing the search-warrant, was not only justifiable from the circumstances stated by Camfor at the time, and knowing, as he did, the respectable character of Beal, but deserving of praise instead of censure. The right hon. gentleman moved, that the Committee having heard counsel and evidence in the case of Mr. Kenrick, were of opinion that it was not expedient to proceed further upon the petition of Martin Camfor.—Mr. Tierney did not mean to impute corrupt motives to Mr. Kenrick, nor did he think it necessary to do so to justify the interference of the House. His want of temper, or of capacity, were reasons quite sufficient, and therefore the amendment was not one which he could agree to. Mr. Kenrick, he contended, had acted with the grossest impropriety.—Mr. Secretary Canning repeated his opinions, that the case was not one which called for the high interference of Parliament.—Mr. H. Sumner supported the motion of Mr. Denman.—Sir F. Burdett said, upon the whole, he would rather have the motion withdrawn, and leave the matter in the hands of the Government until the next session of Parliament, when it would be competent for the House to enquire as to the measures which had been adopted.—Mr. C. W. Wynn condemned the proposition of the hon. Baronet (Sir F. Burdett) which, while it left it to his Majesty's Ministers to remove Mr. Kenrick from the magisterial bench, yet permitted him to retain the higher office of Judge of the Principality of Wales.—After a few words from Mr. Maberly and Mr. Denman, the original motion was negatived.

On the third reading of the bill for regulating the law between Merchant and Factor,—Mr. Scarlett disapproved of the power given by the bill to the factor to pledge the goods of his principal for his own benefit. At the same time he did not object to the power given to the factor to pledge the goods of his principal, as far as he had a lieu on them himself.—Mr. Huskisson thought his hon. and learned friend had throughout the whole of his argument forgotten how easy it was for the consignor of goods to limit the power of the consignee on the face of the bill of lading, so as utterly to prevent these instruments of commerce being negociable.—The bill was supported by Mr. J. Smith, Mr. Baring, Mr. J. Martin, and opposed by Mr. J. P. Grant, after which it was read a third time and passed.

WEDNESDAY.

Sullivan's Divorce Bill was read a third time and passed.

Mr. Hobhouse presented a petition from certain individuals delegated to watch the progress of the Combination Laws Bill.—Mr. Wallace said, that the committee had examined all the witnesses who were considered as calculated to give an account of the character of the several associations.—Mr. Hume said, he was compelled to deny the accuracy of the right hon. gentleman's (Mr. Wallace) statements regarding the calling of all the witnesses who could give testimony as to the character of the combinations; that had not been the case. The petitioners prayed to be heard by their Counsel.—Mr. Hobhouse repeated, that in consequence of the great injustice of the bill, he should throw every obstacle in its way.—Mr. Secretary Peel said that, as in other instances, the hon. member would probably, in cooler moments, withdraw such opposition. The hon. member for Montrose had, at the beginning of the Session, said that Government ought to be armed with a power, like that given by the Insurrection Act, to repress combinations.—Mr. Hume said he had merely observed, that if the statements of the gentlemen opposite were true, and if the civil power was insufficient, then indeed the Government ought to have additional power; but those statements were not true. The bill would be fatal to the liberties of the operatives.—(Hear, from the Ministerial Benches.)—He repeated that it was fatal to the liberties of the operatives. He would oppose it to the utmost pitch that the forms of the House would allow.—Mr. Secretary Peel explained. He denied that the bill was fatal to the liberties of the people. (Hear.) If so, why did the hon. member consent to the second reading? (Cheers.) But the bill was founded on the hon. gentleman's own resolutions. (Cheers.) Even on the last discussion the hon. gentleman acquiesced in the principle of the bill. (Hear.) He (Mr. Peel) had called in the military power at Stroud, in consequence of the extreme violence of the operatives.—Mr. Jones expressed his surprise at hearing the hon. member for Montrose say, that there had been no combinations and violence among the operatives. If any thing could excite to combination, it would be the language of the hon. member.—Mr. W. Whitmore gave notice of his intention to move a clause, authorizing persons to appeal from the decision of the magistrate.—Mr. W. Smith said, he should support the clause to be moved by his hon. friend (Mr. Whitmore.)—Sir F. Burnett was strongly against the Bill. He would rather have seen all the old statutes against combinations repealed, and the common law left in force.—Mr. Huskisson doubted whether the hon. Baronet had read either the Bill of last session or of the present session. He was surprized at the inflammatory language of the hon. member for Montrose. But the hon. member had not even the poor merit of originating his own inflammatory language, as it was copied from the resolutions and papers of the workmen. (Hear, and laughter.) Mr. E. Ellice thought there were objectionable parts in the Bill, but still he preferred it to the old common law of conspiracy.—Mr. Secretary Peel said that the person who had in the Committee opposed the re-enactment of the old Common Law was the hon. member for Montrose. He would read the hon. member's own resolutions for repealing the existing statutes and altering the Common Law. The eleventh resolution was "to enact a law, which, by summary process (loud cheers) might punish every man who, by threats, intimidation, or violence, should interfere with the perfect freedom of labour." (Cheers.) He begged members to read the evidence taken before the Committee before they voted this night.—Mr. C. Grant said, that the identical clause was contained in the Bill brought in last year by the hon. member for Montrose. (Cheers.) In justice, however, to the hon. member, he must say, that the evils which existed, were not to be traced to the hon. member's Bill.—Mr. Denman thought the present laws quite sufficient to punish any, and all the outrages which had been alluded to; but he did not object to the principle of the Bill.—Upon the motion that the petition be printed, Mr. Hobhouse repeated his objection to the measure, and to the course which had been taken by the Committee. The petition asked for a fair hearing for the men, and unless they had it, disturbance and dissatisfaction must naturally be expected.—Mr. Hume denied that he had used inflammatory language. (Hear, hear.) He had only spoken the truth, and truth could never be inflammatory. The hon. member defended his conduct in the Committee, and stated that the Bill gave no protection to the men whatever. If the summary process had been given up, the men would have been satisfied with the measure as it first stood, but they were not satisfied with the alterations and additions which had since entirely changed its character. The right hon. gentleman opposite attributed these combinations to the Act of last year.—Mr. Secretary Peel could no longer sit to hear the gross misrepresentations of the hon. member. He had repeated, until he was tired of repeating, that he did not attribute combinations to the Act of the honourable member. He did not wish to strengthen the power of the Government; he cared not for the master; but he thought it the duty of that House to protect the poor men who became the victims of others misconduct, and who were entitled to such protection in return for their allegiance to the Government.—Mr. Hume then went into some further remarks upon the evidence, and concluded by declaring his intention to oppose the progress of the Bill.—The Attorney-General said, that the conduct of the hon. member for Aberdeen very much surprised him, because when the Bill was first brought in, a conversation occurred between them, in which the hon. member approved the principle of the Bill. He could not conceive what could have made such a change in the hon. member's opinion in the course of three or four days.—The petition was then ordered to be printed.

Mr. Maxwell presented a petition from certain Weavers of Renfrew, praying that there might be no re-enactment of the Combination Laws, and for a reduction of the duty on Indentures of Apprenticeship.

Mr. Wallace moved the bringing up of the Report upon the Combination Laws' Amendment Bill, when the House divided—For receiving the Report, 56; against it, 2; majority in favour of the Bill, 54.

Mr. Hume moved as an amendment, the omission of the words "molestation and obstruction."—Mr. Denman supported the amendment.—The Attorney-General said these words were to be found in twenty Acts of Parliament before his hon. and learned friend. It was a definite offence "to molest, oppose, or obstruct" an officer in the execution of his duty; and this provision was directed against the obstructing or molesting a man in the exercise of his bodily labour. A case had come before a magistrate of this metropolis, that day, he believed, in which it appeared that every man who went to work in the shop of a certain shoemaker was watched out, and hooted through the streets to his house. Surely molestation of this kind could never be permitted in a country like this. (Hear.) It was necessary to put down conduct of this kind, because it had a tendency to outrage and murder. (Hear.)—The Amendment was then negatived without a division.—The Report was then received, and the Bill ordered to be read a third time to-morrow.

Spring-Gun Bill.—On the Order for the third reading of the Spring Gun Bill, Lord Binning objected to the words, garden, or any place whatever, and moved to leave out the same.—The House divided, when the numbers were, for the Amendment, 26; against it, 35; majority against the Amendment, 9.—While strangers were excluded, we understand an Amendment was carried allowing spring guns to be set in any walled orchard or garden.—On the question that the Bill do now pass, the House again divided. The numbers were, ayes, 31; noes, 32; majority against the Bill, 1. It was consequently lost.

THURSDAY.

Mr. Alderman Thompson presented a petition from Messrs. Curling and Young, complaining of certain allegations of an individual named Neale, who had attributed to them the having promoted a petition from their workmen against the combination of their fellow workmen.—The honourable member also presented petitions from the Sawyers and Shipwrights in the employ of Messrs. Curling and Young, declaring that their petitions were the spontaneous effusions of their own minds, repeating their complaints against their fellow workmen, who molested and insulted them in their work.—Mr. Hume asked if the honourable member was acquainted with the signatures of the parties.—Mr. Alderman Thompson said he had never been asked such a question since he had the honour of a seat in that House.—(Hear, hear.) He had received the petition from the most respectable persons, and had no hesitation in presenting them to the House as genuine. Sir J. Wrottesley took that opportunity of defending the conduct of the Committee on the Combination Laws, which had been aspersed by the honourable member for Aberdeen. If there was anything done unfair in that Committee it was by the hon. gentleman and by him alone.—(Hear, hear.) The hon. gentleman required only a wig and gown to have made him in every respect a fee'd Counsel against the investigation which the Committee were met to prosecute.—The petitions were then read and ordered to be printed.

Lord Palmerston brought up the Report of the Committee appointed to inquire into the causes of the disturbances in Ireland.—Mr. Abercromby explained that the Report contained no detailed consideration of the subject referred to the investigation of the Committee.—The Report was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. Secretary Peel stated, with reference to a petition lately presented to the House from Mr. Montagu Burgoyne, complaining of the conduct of a clergyman in his parish, he had made inquiry into the matter, and found that the delay in the Ecclesiastical Court arose from their being obliged to wait the issue of proceedings in the Court of King's Bench, Next year they would be able to proceed; and he had ascertained that nothing he could do would hasten the suit now pending. But he had no hesitation in saying, from what he had learned, that if no one else had prosecuted this individual, he should certainly have advised the Crown to do so.

Combination of workmen bill.—Mr. Wallace moved the third reading of this bill—On the motion that the bill do pass, Mr. Hume expressed a wish that the opposition he had throughout made to this measure would be viewed as proceeding from a sincere desire to promote the interests of both masters and men. At the same time, he trusted that feeling of partiality for the interests of the masters, which had been so often shown in this bill, as well as upon other occasions, would not appear for the future.—Mr. Secretary Peel—As we are about, sir, to close the business of the Session with so much apparent good humour, it is far from my wish to say any thing likely to prolong the present discussion. At the same time I cannot hear any insinuation thrown out against either the committee or his Majesty's Government, of a feeling hostile to that great body of men, the operative weavers and artizans of the kingdom, without rising to repel it. With respect to this body, sir, which after all we must regard as as the main strength of the community, I must declare in justice to all parties, that I have no where witnessed the slightest partiality towards the interests of their masters, in opposition to them. (Hear, hear.) In this House, or in the Committee, I declare that I never heard words used against them one half so strong as those which have been used by the hon. Gentleman (Mr. Hume) himself; words, which at the time they were used, did him great credit, and which even now upon reflection, I am sure he would repeat, although they might be somewhat at variance with the language he has lately held. I have evidence of the language formerly employed by the hon. Gentleman upon this subject, in a letter which I hold in my hand. This letter is addressed to "John Allen, Shipwright, Dundee;" is dated 5th March, 1825, and signed "Joseph Hume." (Hear and a laugh.) And to shew with what good humour our proceedings, and the discussions upon this measure in particular are likely to be terminated, I will read the contents to the House. The right hon. Gentleman then read as follows:—I have further to say, that the plan which you have proposed to adopt respecting apprentices at Dundee, and which it is intended to follow at other places, will not have the result which the operatives expect from it. And I am quite sure that if the operatives do not act with more fairness towards their masters, and more prudence than many of them now do with reference to the great interests of trade, especially the seamen, shipwrights, and other trades, whose combinations and proceedings are too often marked with violence, the Legislature will be obliged to take some measures to counteract them, probably to retrace their steps, and re-enact the Combination Laws which were repealed last Session." (Loud cheers.) Now, sir, the Legislature have not been quite so severe as the hon. Gentleman would in this letter, and in heart, have them to be. They have not re-enacted the Cumbination Statutes—they have not retraced their steps. But they have done that which, I hope, with the assistance of the hon. Gentleman's good advice, will have the effect of recalling these deluded men to a sense of their true interests, and which, on their own accounts, I do most sincerely hope will be the means of putting a stop to those abominable combinations amongst workmen which so materially affect trade.—After a few words from Mr. Maxwell, the Bill was passed.

Mr. Secretary Peel moved for leave to bring in a bill to enable the Insolvent Debtor's Courts to dispense with residence within the walls of the King's Bench Prison, in certain cases until the next Session.—After a few words from Mr. Abercromby and Mr. Hobhouse, the Bill was read a first and second time, and ordered to be committed to-morrow.

The following votes were then passed:—1,200*l.* to Mr. Brogden, the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.—Certain sums of money to pay the salaries of the Officers of the House.—400*l.* to Ed. Phillips, Esq. the Speaker's Secretary.—500*l.* to Sir T. E. Tomlyns, for digesting the Statutes.—9,600*l.* to Mr. Mitford, for making an index to the Journals of the House.—And an Address to his Majesty, praying that he would be pleased to confer some dignity in the Church on the Rev. Thomas Manners Sutton, Chaplain of the House.

FRIDAY.

Colonel Lushington rose to present a petition from several Officers of the Deccan Army, complaining of misrepresentation in the imputation of delay to the trustees appointed to administer the Deccan Prize-money. The Hon. Member here read the concluding prayer of the Petition, which prayed that there might not be any interruption in the course of proceedings adopted at present by the trustees. He was desirous of taking this opportunity of stating, that the delays had been in a great degree occasioned by the extravagant demands of persons for a share in the distribution, and by the delay in furnishing the lists of persons who were duly entitled to the prize-money.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer felt great pleasure in hearing the petition which had been just presented to the House by his Honnurable and Gallant friend.—Dr. Lushington said, The Petition which was now submitted to the House he could not otherwise regard than as an attempt to do away with the effect of the petition which had been presented by his hon. Friend (Mr. Hume) on a former night. It had been got up for the occasion.—Sir H. Hardinge happened not to be present on the last night that the Petition referred to had been presented, and was anxious to avail himself of the present opportunity that offered, to express his opinion as to the claims on the Deccan Prize Money. He could not forbear from taking the present opportunity of of adverting to what had fallen from an hon. and learned Gentleman (Mr. Lushington) relative to the conduct of the Duke of Wellington in this transaction, When a Noble person was accused of unparalleled impudence and insolence, it was, in his opinion, the observance of extreme patience on the part of the friends of that Noble Person who was absent not to retort upon the hon. Member, and to characterise his speech in the same language in which the hon. and learned Member had thought proper to characterise the conduct of his Noble Friend.—The Speaker suggested to the hon. and Gallant Member that he was certainly out of order.—Mr. Hume said, that in presenting the Petition which he had submitted to the house on a former night, he had not on light grounds preferred a charge of delay and neglect against the trustees. Sir H. Hardinge said, that the expressions attributed to the hon. member, in the newspapers, remained uncontradicted by the hon. and learned member himself.—The Speaker here interposed and observed, that it was most decidedly disorderly under any circumstances, to refer to what had occurred in the course of a previous debate, whatever might be the source of the information.—Sir Henry Harringe expressed his readiness to bow to the decision of the Chair.—Mr. Brougham said he could have little hope, after the declaration of the hon. and gallant member, of inducing him to take a moderate tone upon this matter. He did not mean to say he disapproved of the warmth which the hon. and gallant member had shewn upon the occasion; he thought the heat of his temper highly becoming, and just such as he himself should have evinced under similar circumstances.—Mr. Secretary Peel declared upon his honour, that he had heard no expression fall from his honourable and gallant friend, transgressing the fair privilege of parliamentary discussion.—Mr. Secretary Canning said he had been endeavouring to tax his memory relative to what had fallen from the hon. and learned gentleman opposite (Dr. Lushington) on the occasion which had given rise to the present discussion. He could not pretend to state with great positiveness the very words that were used; but he thought he could speak with some confidence as to the word "insolent," or "insolence" being used. If he rightly apprehended the matter, that word was applied, not to the individual, but to the letter, which now appeared altogether in a different form from that which it assumed on the occasion alluded to. As it now appeared, indeed, it changed the whole of the business.—Dr. Lushington said, he hoped he was not a man given to take offence slightly. There was only one expression of the hon. and gallant member which had been painful to him. It was that wherein he said, that he would apply the epithet "insolent" to his (Dr. Lushington's) conduct. If there was no offence intended, however, it was far from him to conceive any—(Hear.) The petition was then brought up and laid on the table.

Mr. Brougham rose to put a question to the right hon. Secretary for Foreign Affairs, to know when it was understood the French troops intended to withdraw from Spain.—Mr. Secretary Canning, in an unusually low tone of voice, proceeded to answer the question of the hon. and learned member. He was prepared to say, with perfect sincerity, that he was satisfied in his own mind that the French Government had not the slightest shadow of an intention of keeping permanent occupation of Spain.

The other Orders of the Day were then disposed of, and the House adjourned at a quarter past seven o'clock, until Tuesday next.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

In consequence of my LORD ALVANLEY having burnt the "Age" IN OUR PRESENCE, at White's, last Sunday, we despatched a message to our publisher, suggesting the printing off an extra number, in anticipation of a prudigious sale, which actually turned out to be the fact; but in case any of our readers may have forgotten what nettled his Lordship so much, we beg to subjoin the following verse of a SONG entitled "Home Truths:"

ALVANLEY did not "throw
A Somerset" in the Park,
Nor LADY FITZROY show
Any thing in the dark!

Now really we cannot conceive how a little innocent sally of this kind could so agitate his Lordship's nerves; but it is as well to observe, in order that the good things of this life may not be lost, and also to prevent any future disappointment, should a recurrence take place, we shall strike off a few copies of the Song, that those Members of the Club, who are anxious to read it, may not be deprived of that gratification by any Noble Lord who, like the one we have alluded to, feels disposed to give to our deeds what his own could never yet boast of—FIRE! The late RICHARD PEPPER ARDEN, his Lordship's noble father, was always called "poivre ardent" by the French, and really his son seems quite determined not to lose the family title—poor fellow!

A Member of a Club remarkable for its high play and low manners, has lately been detected in stealing the Newspapers.—MORNING HERALD.

M'NAUGHTEN is wrong—we do not wish to rake up old stories, without the individuals still obtrude themselves on the public—his story of GLENGALL'S "night cap and Kitty," shall be kept in petto.

LORD HARDWICKE should address his letter to the person who addressed him, and not to us.

G. G. and his friend, on the same subject, are answered by a partial appearance of the arrangements we had entered upon, before the receipt of their letters.

We shall bear ROSS in mind.

In consequence of the unprecedented Sale of this Paper and in compliance with numerous requests on the subject, arrangements have been made for the future composition of the AGE in ENTIRELY NEW TYPE, and it will be printed by a STEAM-ENGINE.

THE AGE.

LONDON, JULY 3.

If we deemed it prudent to follow the opinion delivered by MR. HUME, on Wednesday last, in the House of Commons, in which he observed, "he held that mischievous axiom of our laws, that truth was a libel, to be a departure from the principles of good government," we should tell that egregious blockhead some truths he would not like to hear; but as we do not entertain a doubt but MASTER JOSEPH would be the very first person to construe our truths into a libel, we shall keep as closely within the limits to which we consider his observations extend, as we consistently and justly can. It is deplorable to reflect, for a moment, on the general mummery of this man's arguments, and the singular impertinence and ignorance manifested in all his interferences with the important questions that agitate the Councils of our Parliament; but it is something more than deplorable to witness the continual harassing occasioned to HIS MAJESTY'S Ministers, by remarks at all times falsely applied, and positions of the most pertinacious, yet most shallow pretensions,—a fact so indisputable, that at last, on Wednesday evening, MR. PEEL was compelled to say, "he could no longer sit and hear the gross misrepresentations of the honourable Member."

Before we dilate any further on the general character of HUME'S Parliamentary wisdom, or its direction in this particular instance, it is imperative upon us to revert to the serious COMBINATIONS that have lately taken place throughout the country, and to impress on the minds of our readers an absolute necessity for the interference of the Legislature, in an alteration of the COMBINATION LAWS' BILL, since it will be seen that, on a strict investigation of thirteen cases which have come before the Committee, with a view to ascertain how far these combinations have been affected by the passing of the Act of last Session, the result has left a decided conviction on the Members' minds, that it is to this Act principally the conduct of the Operatives has assumed such an open and avowed hostility. Unless some decided step had been taken by Parliament, to bring down to its proper level the false tone adopted by the mechanical classes of society, the very operations of commerce must be not alone temporarily suspended, but its power completely annihilated,—the corner-stone to the very fabric of our Constitution would be removed, and the building fall into ruin. There must exist between the different classes of the community, that defined and systematic understanding which has so long upheld the glory, the unanimity, and the security of our nation, or our nation will no longer be supported by these valuable props,—for any attempt to separate the lower orders from that connexion and controul which the wisdom of Government, and the organization of society, has established between them and their superiors, would be fatal to the prerogatives and advantages of both,—the suspension of trade would be one consequent evil of this vast error; and even if that were not to be the actual case, the encouragement of foreign artizans, which must inevitably follow, would be equally prejudicial to the workmen, and terminate in the emigration of their employers abroad, or their absolute ruin at home. The very proper and comprehensive view taken by MR. WALLACE of the Act of last Session, must convince every person, that a more dangerous Bill never passed through the Senate; for it did not confine itself to the toleration of combinations for the advance of wages and the like, but in plain terms enacted permission to workmen to combine to induce others to adopt a particular course—to leave off work already begun—to break an agreement before its natural termination, and also to regulate the manner of conducting any manufacture. With these prerogatives of the bill before us, it is only necessary to point at some of the consequences that have taken place since it was passed—fellow workmen have been murdered and threatened, masters lives been attempted—every species of interruption to trade committed—Shipwrights have refused to work for any employers who used blocks made by machinery, which has been the means of stopping the works in all the Dock Yards on the River,—and other acts of equal depravity and ruin—and then ask any rational person if it was not high time to amend this Act of the stultified Member for Aberdeen, before its results become more alarming and probably more beyond the power of controul. In what particular visitation of supineness this Bill found its way through the house, we shall not stop to enquire—for it is quite sufficient to know that the operations, which it has been the means of creating, have naturally excited the proper attention of Ministers, and they have at once remedied the evil—and it requires no very great head-piece to be assured it will be long enough before any bill of MR. HUME'S is again passed by Parliament, as a little more scrutiny last year would have saved all this exorbitant trouble, and also prevented the commission of those disastrous scenes to which we have alluded. In a very spirited and able article in this month's Blackwood, the subject is treated in the light in which alone it can be viewed by considerate and well regulated minds—for it is too evident that the doctrines put forth by certain political men in favor of the independence of the working classes, is nothing else but the impulse of faction, and as such capable of working incalculable mischief. The concluding passage of this article is entitled to particular attention:—

"Let these misguided workmen who are agitating the "country and preparing for it the most serious evil, be as- "sured, that in the upshot, they will be the greatest sufferers "from their madness. The cup of bitterness will not be "long in reaching them. Their turbulence and outrages— "their sickening cant, touching their right to inflict the "most grievous wrongs on all but themselves, have already "stripped them of all respect and sympathy on the part of "the rest of the nation. They stand the objects of general "indignation—they are regarded as men who disgrace their "country—who are acting the part of enemies to their "country. Do they suppose that the masters and the rest "of the community are men to be robbed of the controul of "their property and of their sacred rights by them, or any "other people in the universe? If they do, they will soon "be better informed. They may rely upon it, that if one "law fails to curb them, another will be framed that will; "and, if nothing else will do, the rest of the nation will "unanimously place them bound hand and foot at the mercy "of the masters."

With this admirable extract we shall dismiss the subject as far as respects the propriety of the Amended Bill, which has just passed the House, and on which there cannot be a difference of opinion at least entitled to notice, but, as this is the last time most likely, for the present, we shall have occasion to treat on such a very sad piece of goods as MR. HUME, we shall give him the unlimited benefit of our remarks. If the present Parliament were to terminate with the present Session, there would be some hopes that the common understandings of the Aberdeen Electors would be exerted to relieve themselves from the Parliamentary imputation under which they have been so long labouring—but, until that is the case, they must submit to it, in proportion as we submit to its consequences. As far as the most inveterate curiosity, the most perfect buttershop calculation will carry a man, this man will go—he will talk to the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER of "splitting the difference," about 40,000*l.* of taxes, as if he were buying a horse, and of giving his guarantee for the country sustaining no loss by an unnecessary reduction of half a million of money—and, although, as SHERIDAN expressed himself, it was very kind to give MR. ROBINSON what NO OTHER person WOULD TAKE, yet it does not constitute him a man one jot the more capable of interfering in the high and important duties of the Senate. But the very criterion by which you are to estimate MR. HUME'S abilities, so particularly discernable in the fluctuating resistance he has made throughout the progress of the COMBINATION LAWS AMENDMENT BILL, is the wind up to the affair in the House of Commons by MR. PEEL, who, with that admirable tact for which he is so peculiarly distinguished, turned round upon HUME, and thumped him with his own weapons. As no language can be so good for this purpose as MR. PEEL'S, we transcribe it—he says, "I have "evidence of the language formerly employed by the "Honourable Gentleman upon this subject, in a letter "which I hold in my hand, by which it will be seen that "the legislature have not been quite so severe as the "Hon. Gent. would in this letter HAVE THEM TO BE. This "letter is addressed to 'JOHN ALLEN, Shipwright, Dun- "dee,' is dated 5th of March, 1825, and is signed "'JOSEPH HUME,'" (whereon the House burst into a fit of laughter, as well it might.) MR. PEEL then read as follows:—

"I have further to say, that the plan which you have proposed to adopt, respecting apprentices at Dundee, and which it is intended to follow at other places, will not have the result which the operatives expect from it. And I am quite sure, that if the operatives do not act with more fairness towards their masters, and more prudence than many of them now do, with reference to the great interests of trade, especially the seamen, shipwrights, and other trades, whose combinations and proceedings are too often marked with violence, the Legislature will be obliged to take some measures to counteract them, probably to retrace their steps, and re-enact the Combination Laws, which were repealed last Session."

If after this display, any human soul can be found incapable of ascertaining the precise quality of JOSEPH HUME'S intellects, a question will naturally arise, which is the greatest blockhead of the two.

A PUN.

An express has just arrived from Oatlands, conveying the gratifying intelligence that Mr. BALL HUGHES has made a pun:—TOM RAIKES was congratulating him on the beautiful aspect of the park and grounds at Oatlands, and observed that it presented a much more pastoral appearance than when in the possession of the DUKE OF YORK; whereon MASTER BALL, mustering up all his courage, remarked, that the reason probably why it might seem more pastoral now than formerly, was, because there were more EWES in it. "It made a great laugh at the time," as MATHEWS has it.

We entertained great hopes that the redoubtable Member for Galway would have confined his opinions on the subject of cruelty to animals to the House of Commons, where the question stands some chance of being freely and openly discussed; but when we hear of MR. MARTIN attending a public meeting and haranguing them for two hours one day, then going to Bow-street and pitting himself against MR. ADOLPHUS another day, by calling himself counsel for the plaintiff; we are disposed to look upon his exertions quite in a different point of view. In regard to the grand object of preventing cruelty as far as possible to the dumb part of creation, we go with him heart and hand—but when defeated in the Senate House, he convenes assembles to vituperate the ATTORNEY-GENERAL, and play the fool by laughing at himself, we cannot refrain from following his example, and at the same time from offering some comments on his conduct. A more ridiculous and unnecessary affair than the meeting on Wednesday was probably never convened, for excepting the reading of some letters from sundry doctors, and a few quacks, observations on bull-baiting, an harangue from MARTIN, in which he actually said, if he could not take away all cruelty, he would try to take away 50 per cent. or 25 per cent! a shining idea or two from MR. HENRY HUNT and a short dissertation on the firing of Horses, nothing on earth was effected; and, in short, the whole thing turning on the member's complaints about Bull fighting, Jack ass flogging, and so on, merely proved the truth of the line which says "a fellow feeling makes wondrous kind." We know that MR. MARTIN'S theory and practice are entirely at variance—for every one remembers the story of his calling a man out, who, he supposed, had insulted MRS. MARTIN, whom he had deserted—assigning as a cause, that if he ill-treated his wife, it was no reason why any person else should—now, though we approve of the general impulse of this worthy man's heart, we are disposed to believe that his head may lead him into continual errors—and while they are confined to his family circle, we have no right to complain—but when they extend to the community, and the public become implicated, it is our duty to interfere. The business at Bow-street on Friday, was of the same frivolous nature, as the affair at the Crown and Anchor, and, indeed, rather more so—and it is imperative upon us, therefore, to hint to this gentleman, that, unless that everlasting propensity to tom-foolery, with which he is afflicted is subdued, the grand object which brought him into notoriety will be defeated, and he will necessarily sink into a more insignificant obscurity than that from which he sprung.

THE REVIEW.

In our capacity of Reviewers, we attended in due form at Hounslow Heath on Tuesday last, and through the kind attention of a military friend obtained, as Caleb Quotem observes, "a place to see the Review." Although the rain which heralded the morning threw a damp on the air, it was far from throwing a damp on the spirits of the company, for very early the roads were lined with every vehicle that could be procured, all hastening with as much speed to this scene of mock combat, as many who were there would have been glad to have hastened from former scenes of reality. At the appointed hour of eleven o'clock, the Commander-in-Chief, accompanied by his Royal Brother, the Duke of Cambridge, and attended by a numerous suite, arrived on the ground, and were received by a salute of artillery, which, however, did not drown the loyal acclamations evinced by the vast assemblage of persons of all degrees. The regiments were formed in two lines—in the first, the Royal Artillery, two Regiments of Life Guards, and Blues, whose appearance on their coal black chargers, with "their polished helm and corslets," was certainly most commanding.—In the second line the Royal Dragoons and Bays,—the Scotch Greys, of whom, at Waterloo, the late Napoleon said, "Ah que les chevaux gris sont terribles,"—the 12th Lancers, at whose head, in the above memorable battle, the Gallant Ponsonby fought, conquered, and fell—and the 7th, the Noble Anglesea's own Hussars. After the usual parade movements, "the pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious war" commenced:—the charges, more especially the one made by the household troops, were executed with the utmost precision—and it was really gratifying to contemplate the coolness which they have ever evinced on their home service, and the intrepidity shewn by them while on foreign duty. It would be out of the question to suppose that a spectacle of this description could occur without some drollery attached to it, and assuredly that of Tuesday had much to boast of—for, among the numerous individuals, who, in a true zeal for their country's service, appeared on the field in their respective uniforms, we observed my Lord Nugent, whose appearance at once denominated the Bom*bardier*—then there was Joseph Hume, who, in compliment to his late avocation, appeared as a Lancer, ready, if called upon, to bleed for his country. Next to him was Colonel Berkeley, in the cast off uniform of a late Colonel of Foot—Ninny Robins and Lord Normanby as Foot Guards—Dick Martin as a Horse Guard, and Lord Chesterfield, and Mr. Curzon as black—guards. Among the rest, we particularly noticed the Managing Director of the New Burial Company in the costume of the Rifle Corps; also Brougham, Denman, Wood, and old Lushington, as the Queen's Own; Wilson came in the dress of the Bays, but seemed quite out of his element; indeed it was an universal opinion, that the less he had to do with any bay, unless it was Botany Bay, the better; then Bum Hill, as a Light Dragoon, in a Cuirass, and "very like" a queer Ass he looked in it. There was Lord Limerick giving a description of the battle of Vinegar Hill, which seemed to make his companions in arms look rather sour; and Mr. Rowland Stephenson, in the "brilliant regimentals" which Wednesday's Post says he wore at the Fancy ball at Almack's. We happened to have a very full view of the Royal Horse Guards Blue, and when "eyes right" was given, it was the greatest fun imaginable to see Lord William Lennox evidently turning over in his mind what was best to be done, as he could never look "eyes right" in all his life; and Sefton, who was close to us, immediately rode off, on hearing the word "right shoulders forward." The scene was greatly enlivened by the introduction of occasional pieces of music by the bands on the ground, but it was really droll to see little Tankerville ride up to Lord Uxbridge, and ask him, as a personal favour, to stop the Horns, as they were unpleasant to his ears. The day, upon the whole, was a very agreeable one, for there were not as many legs left behind as is usual on such occasions; neither carriages nor blood were spilt to any great extent; and what with a little wet outside, and stopping now and then on the road to take a little inside, as Mr. Pierce Egan denominates the London beverage, the worthy visitors reached the metropolis in very comfortable plight, long "ere the set of sun."

THEATRES.

Our dramatic attention has been principally directed to the appearance of Signor Velluti, who made his debut at the King's Theatre on Thursday, and contrary to the expectations of those geese who flock any where to see a riot, and to the designs of those reptiles who are always to be found instrumental in making one, his reception was of the most flattering nature. We shall take this opportunity of alluding to one of the most disgusting and insolent compositions with which our Press ever teemed, which cut a conspicuous figure in Thursday's Times, referring to the nature of Velluti's epicene gender, as the writer the following day termed it, and condemning in toto, not only the appearance of the singer, but of every person going to see him. We have not forgotten the outrageous calumnies and injuries heaped by this Journal on that poor Devil, Kean, whereby he became the object of the most disgraceful persecutions that were ever inflicted on a person so situated, and of which Mr. Kean almost deserved the full extent, for not prosecuting the libellous Cockney—and had we been then before the public, possessing the great influence our paper does, he should have had the full use of its columns, to have exposed to the scorn of every reader the affected morality of one of the most immoral men in the metropolis. There are two persons in the conduct of the Times, professed and open adulterers—who were insulting and disgusting the ears of all readers by the defamation of this man, for the very crime they were then committing, and one, in particular, whose name the courtesy due to a cotemporary is the cause of withholding, is the most profligate vagabond to be met with; and yet, this fellow can have the audacity to affect a squeamishness, which his enlightened and dignified rival journalists despise, at the delinquency of a poor actor completely harpooned by a wretched courtezan, and a foreign singer personally mutilated, by an accident in early life; while, at the same time, he himself is figuring away in the Blackfriars coteries with another man's wife—to say that this is the height of all insolence, is the least you can say—for it is the height of all humbug and hypocrisy.

In witnessing the performance of Velluti, we of course did not allow our minds to be prejudiced by any feelings of his situation: for, if we had viewed the matter in the light the Times views it, we should have considered the only way to check the immorality of such an exhibition, was to maintain a profound silence on the business, and deeming it an indelicate subject for female readers, certainly, not direct, by any remarks, their attention to it—these feelings, however, did not impress our minds, and, we therefore do not hesitate to say that we derived considerable gratification from his performance—he is an excellent singer, and when recovered from the natural timidity his peculiar situation excited, he may rest assured that the canting stuff of the Times would obtain for him friends instead of enemies, more particularly as his abilities are sufficient to command them. Every one has a joke about Velluti—Alvanley's about Remorini and him is capital, but we should have the "Society for the Suppression of Vice" about our ears, if we were to give it—we have had our own jokes, and certainly laughed internally to see Signor Velluti and Signora *Cast*elli on the stage together—but all this is foreign to the purpose.

In the other departments of the Drama little of interest has occurred, except that Miss Foote, or rather her Managers, have taken our hint and withdrawn "Clari"—that Miss Tree is to have a Law as well as a Love suit entailed upon her, for breaking her Covent-Garden engagement—that a very large Scotch booby, yclept Captain Forbes, had the impudence to call on Mr. Bradshaw to ask him if he meant to marry her, and that Mr. Bradshaw very properly shewed Sawnie the door, who went down stairs muttering to himself the first line of Simkin's song in the Deserter, "A little cock sparrow a'top of a tree,"—that Thursday's Herald killed Mr. Malcolm for love of this actress, and that Friday's Herald brought Mr. Malcolm to life again,—that Colman, the Licenser, was reeling drunk in one of the green-rooms the other night, and that Mrs. Coutts was sober in her box the same evening. The "note of preparation" has been loudly sounded at both theatres, for the production of the French King's Coronation; and report of course says, that we are to have something quite superlative at each house, in spite of the damp thrown on the spirits of Mr. Planche, the Covent-Garden caterer, because they did not fire a salute on the coast, when he landed from Rheims. It was certainly a pointed neglect to the "great Plenipotentiary."

It is not our intention to enter, at present, into any discussion relative to the Meeting held on Friday at the City of London Tavern, to consider the plans and objects of a New University, to be established in the Metropolis, as the business is so completely in its infancy, that any animadversions would be almost unnecessary; but as things take a different turn, and information on the subject expands itself, we shall take the liberty of pointing out several speakers at the said meeting, as fit objects for the very earliest admission, as soon as the said University is completed and open.

We perceive, by the Morning Chronicle, that Mr. Judge, the Editor of the Cheltenham Journal, has been horsewhipped again; and having made the necessary enquiries on the subject, we find the cause of quarrel to have originated in the following circumstance:—In reporting the motion lately made by Counsellor Phillips for the removal of the trial of Judge versus Berkeley from Gloucestershire, the Courier misnamed the paper, mentioning the Editor of the Cheltenham Chronicle, when it should have said the Cheltenham Journal; which blunder elicited the following letter:—

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE COURIER.

"Cheltenham Chronicle Office, June 13.

Messrs. S. Y. Griffith and Co. Proprietors of the Cheltenham Chronicle, request the Editor of the Courier will do them the justice to correct an error which appears in the Law Report of Saturday evening, in which it is stated, that the Editor of the Cheltenham Chronicle had applied to the Court of King's Bench to remove the venue of a trial for an assault from Gloucestershire into Herefordshire. The Editor of the Cheltenham Chronicle never having received personal chastisement from any member of society, has no occasion to institute such a proceeding—and if he had, he has too firm a reliance upon the conscientious feelings and honourable principles of the Jurors of Gloucestershire, to state, upon his oath, that he believed they were incapable of rendering him justice, upon their oaths."

Upon which Mr. Judge made these comments:—

"That a man should be so besotted as to suppose any person would have had the hardihood to go before the Lord Chief Justice, or a Commissioner of the Court of King's Bench, and make an affidavit, accusing every eligible special Juror in a whole County, of partiality, prejudice, and perjury, we should never have supposed credible, had we not 'seen and read with our own eyes,' the above precious composition. To men, whose understandings are even somewhat below mediocrity, the affidavit alluded to, requires no explanation; and as to the wilful misconstructions attempted to be put upon it by the few interested fawning parasites, our real friends, we are convinced, will consider them utterly contemptible and worthy only of the source from whence they sprung. Could any sober-minded man, we would ask, not bewildered by interest, or maddened by prejudice, deduce from the affidavit in question so ridiculous a supposition, much less so frothy a conclusion? No."

And in consequence, Mr. Griffith went with a friend to the Cheltenham Theatre on Tuesday last, and there publicly chastised the said Mr. Judge. In the former instance, in which Colonel Berkeley was the assailant, we really imagined that this gentleman, who is not accustomed to use much ceremony on any occasion, had committed himself in some outrageous manner, but this subsequent instance in which Mr. Judge's writings have come under the lash of his antagonist, induce us to view Berkeley's conduct in a totally different point of view, and we presume it will completely alter the complexion of the pending action. It would be unjust to either party to adjudge this business prematurely, and we shall therefore decline to insert, at present, any part of the mass of scurrility and abuse that we have received against Mr. Judge; because, divested of any other consideration, he is really to be looked upon "as a very ill-used gentleman." He was horsewhipped some time since by Colonel Berkeley, who is above six feet in height; and in consequence of the punishment he received, his marriage was put off for nearly two months; he is now horsewhipped by Mr. Griffith, who is just three feet one inch in height; and we understand that, in consequence of its severity, the parental expectations from the said marriage are frustrated, owing to Mrs. Judge's alarm. When Mr. Judge's eye gets quite well, and he is enabled to see things in their proper light, we do hope something may suggest itself to him to remedy all this personal inconvenience; in the mean time we shall suspend all further animadversion, and merely notice a most extraordinary coincidence,—at the end of the criticism, in the last Cheltenham Journal, Mr. Judge mentions the announced appearance of Mr. Macready, and concludes by saying, "we anticipate a great treat on Tuesday next," and as this is the identical night on which he was horsewhipped, we have every reason to hope his expectations were realized.

FASHIONABLE MISCELLANY.

The King's Levee and Court.—Wednesday, at two o'clock His Majesty held a Levee at his palace in Pall-mall, which was attended by between six and seven hundred of the nobility, gentry, and persons of distinction. A short time before one o'clock, the King's Guard marched into the Court Yard of the Palace, under the command of Colonel Mackinnon, preceded by the band of the Coldstream Regiment of Guards in their State uniform, the Ensign carrying the State colours. Sir Richard Birnie appeared at the head of Townsend, Sayer, and a numerous assemblage of police officers, Bow-street patrol, who preserved very excellent order in the avenues and entrance to the Palace-yard. A detachment of Life Guards marched into Waterloo-place, where they halted opposite the Palace, their band, in their superb uniforms, playing marches and various pieces during the afternoon. The band of the Coldstream Regiment of Guards playing alternately with them. Two of the Royal Porters appeared at each gate, wearing embroidered scarfs and holding long splendid staves in their hands. The Marshalmen, Under Porters, Gentlemen Porters, the Pages in Waiting. Mr. Messenger and Mr. Lyn were the State Pages. The grand hall was lined with a party of the Yeomen Guard under the command of Mr. Cipriani, the Exon in Waiting.

The grand ball to be given by His Majesty at St. James's Palace, on Monday evening, will be magnificent in the extreme. Great preparations are making for the occasion. The splendid suite of rooms, when lighted up, will excel in grandeur anything that has been seen on any similar occasion. The company are all to appear in new gala dresses.

The Marquis of Hertford entertained a most splendid party last evening at his noble mansion in Piccadilly. The whole of the Royal Family, we believe, with the exception of His Majesty, were present, besides four hundred persons of the highest rank. The Noble Marquis erected with peculiar taste a temporary theatre in the large apartment, where a French play was acted by the performers from Tottenham-street. At the conclusion of the Vaudeville, a superb supper, consisting of every delicacy of the season, together with the greatest variety of fruits and wines, kept the company in a spirit of perfect enjoyment and hilarity till a late hour.

Prince Esterhazy, Austrian Ambassador to the Court of London, who attended the Coronation as the representative of his Sovereign, will shortly leave Paris for the British capital. We hear that his Excellency is likely to supersede Baron Vincent, as Austrian Ambassador to the Court of France.—Galignani's Messenger.

On Friday His Majesty's naval steam vessels Comet and Lightning, under convoy of His Majesty's ship Brazen, of 50 guns, arrived in Dover Roads from Boulogne, with the Duke and Duchess of Northumberland, and suite. Upon the Comet and Lightning quitting the Brazen to enter the harbour, she saluted the noble party, by a discharge of 15 guns; at the same time her yards were manned, and the sailors cheering until out of sight. As soon as the Comet reached the quay, a salute from the guns at the Drop Redoubt was fired. There was an immense multitude of persons assembled on the quays and pier, to witness the arrival of the noble party; the greater portion having followed his Grace and Duchess to the York Hotel, gave them nine distinct rounds of cheers.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

Madrid, June 9.—The project of a forced loan, which was decided on some time ago by the Council of Ministers, has been laid before the Council of Castile, which threw obstacles in the way of it, and which have hitherto paralysed it; but it seems that the distress of our Exchequer, and the necessity of providing for the current expences, added to the state of the public mind in the Isle of Cuba, have induced the Council of Castile to sanction the forced loan, without regard for the consequences of this disastrous measure. Eight individuals of that party which prowls about Aranjuez, were executed yesterday, but the discontent expressed by the people on a preceding execution of two individuals of the same party, caused great precautions to be taken this time, almost the whole garrison being under arms.

Vienna, June 11.—Prince Ruffo, ambassador from the King of the Two Sicilies to the Imperial Court, arrived here yesterday from Milan, and the Chevalier Vasquez, Spanish mbassador at the Swedish Court, for Stockholm.

Stutgard, June 16.—A letter from Stunfen (in the Grand Durhy of Baden) says, "The damage done by the dreadful hail storms of the 24th of May, in 17 parishes of this district, amount to 390,000 florins, without reckoning the loss of the fruit. The fields present a most melancholy appearance of desolation. The cornfields look like stubble after the harvest, and the trees are as bare of leaves as in the middle of winter."

Switzerland.—On Sunday the 5th, at two in the morning, the city of Zurich was illumined by a frightful column of fire, which arose on the other side of the lake; it was found to be the great dye-house One of the owners perished in the flames. This active and most respectable man has left three young children, who are reduced to poverty by this misfortune, as the proprietors of the establishment, which they had lately increased considerably, were in treaty about the insurance. It is said the fire was caused by the spontaneous bustion of some oil-cloth.

The Canton of Tessine has granted a license to a Piedmontese Society, for 15 years, for establishing steam vessels in the Lago Magiore.

Papers and letters from Quebec, to the 28th ult., have been received. A public meeting of the inhabitants had been called, for the purpose of discussing the plan of a new canal to connect the lakes of Ontario and Erie, and to proceed through a whole chain of minor lakes. Accounts had reached Canada of the establishment in London of the Canada Ship Building Society, the Halifax Agricultural Association, and other societies about to be formed, which the papers notice as likely to be very beneficial to the British possessions in North America.

Letters received yesterday from Bordeaux, referring to an account from Madrid, of an attempt to destroy the soldiers of the Royal Guard, by mixing poison with their provisions, treat it as a far more serious affair than the Paris papers have done, but supply no details which can be useful in developing its true history. It is remarkable that no account of it has appeared, except in papers known to be under the influence of the Spanish Government.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The King has presented the Duke of Wellington with the identical diamond ornament (the George) belonging to the Order of the Garter, with which Queen Anne invested the Duke of Marlborough. His Majesty, in the most gracious and pleasing manner, desired the Duke of Wellington to wear it at the dinner at Apsley House on the 18th, at the anniversary of the Battle of Waterloo—Morning Paper.

A meeting of the Creditors of Messrs. Chambers and Son, Bankers, took place on Monday at the King's Theatre. J. Calcraft, Esq. M. P. in the chair. It was stated by that gentleman and some others, that it was impossible to avert a bankruptcy; Mr. Chambers, Jnn. was in custody for debt to the amount of 20,000*l.* Mr. Denew said, that the conduct of the Committee was base, malignant, and oppressive; there was no person more honourable than Mr. Chambers; the Chairman, in particular, betrayed a bad feeling towards him. He (Mr. Denew) would undertake to pay 20s. in the pound, if a commission were not issued; 10s. before a year and a half, and the other 10s. when the Chancery suit respecting the Opera-house, should be decided. It was then agreed that the conduct of the committee has met the approbation of the creditors, and that they be empowered to act as they think fit respecting the revocation of the letter of licence.

More Horsewhipping at Cheltenham.—On Tuesday night last, Mr. Judge, the Editor of The Cheltenham Journal, was in the Theatre of that town, and was called out to a person, who, it was said, was desirous of speaking to him. The moment he left the box he was assailed by Mr. Griffith the Proprietor, and by the Printer of The Cheltenham Chronicle, the one using a horsewhip, and the other a stick, with quite as much vigour as had been displayed by Colonel Berkeley. The effects of the discipline were soon visible, and Mr. Judge had another vein opened on the occasion. The attack is attributed to some paragraph in the Journal offensive to Mr. Griffiths and his squire, who thought they could not act in a more becoming manner, than by following the example of their gallant neighbour, the Colonel.—Morning Chronicle.

A Brussels paper states, that Mrs. Becher, late Miss O'Neill, the celebrated actress, is now in Paris, deprived of sight, and is about to undergo an operation for cataract.

On Wednesday, the first Anniversary meeting of the Society for preventing cruelty to animals took place at the Crown and Anchor. Mr. Warre, M.P. took the chair, in the place of Sir James Mackintosh, who was too indisposed to attend. The meeting was but thinly attended. Mr. Martin, M.P., Mr. M'Kinnon, M.P., and several other gentlemen, addressed the meeting on the benefits which the society had conferred; and the report, which was read by the Secretary, stated that 149 convictions had taken place through its exertions. The letters of several eminent surgeons, expressive of their objection to experiments upon animals was read, but as these were published several months ago, they are known to the public. The meeting separated, after voting thanks to the leading supporters of the society.

Much of the annoyance of which complaint has been so frequently and justly made, at the Coach-stand, Piccadilly, will be in future avoided, a new regulation having commenced on Monday last—all the cads are done away with, and two persons appointed to prevent any stage remaining there more than ten minutes, the expence to be defrayed by the Coach Proprietors jointly.

The wife of General Lavalette, whose escape made so much noise some years since, is still in a private mad-house in Mont-Martre. Her malady is of a melancholy kind, and she amuses herself with tearing her dresses in long narrow slips, accompanying the action with a corresponding hissing sound. Her only paroxysms are when she beholds her husband; her conduct is then outrageous. She is about 45 years of age, and all means have been used for her recovery, but without effect. Her husband has been again received into favour, and is now employed in the King's Household.

Society of British Artists.—We are very glad to hear that this Exhibition has increased in public estimation, assured as we are of its beneficial tendency to the promotion and encouragement of the fine arts, it has not only been more numerously attended this season, but its sales have likewise been more extensive; and in addition to which we are gratified to know that the Duke of Bedford, Lord Northwick, Dr. Mackie, and several other distinguished patrons have given commissions for pictures to several of the Artists; we sincercly and cordially wish it every success it merits, and have no doubt that every successive Exhibition will add to its importance by a pictorial display; honorable to native talent and worthy of British support.

The Thames Tunnel.—On Thursday last, his Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester, accompanied by an Officer of rank, visited these interesting works at Rotherhithe. His Royal Highness, attended by Admiral Sir Edward Codrington, one of the Directors, and by Mr. Brunel, the Engineer, went down the great shaft, which is, we understand, now 52 feet deep, or 13 feet lower than the deepest part of the river. His Royal Highness witnessed the manner in which the works is carried on, and expressed his admiration of the progress which has been made in this great undertaking. It is expected that in about three weeks or a month the double archway will be commenced towards the river. The ground, on the river side in particular, is found to be so dry and hard, that the engineer feels no apprehension at leaving in the wall of the shaft, on that side, an opening of 40 feet by 17 feet, which in his original plan was to have been built solid, and cut through afterwards. This work was visited the preceding day by the Vice-Chancellor and a numerous party of persons of distinction.

Election of Sheriffs.—The poll finally closed on Friday, when Messrs. Crowder and Kelly returned thanks for the distinguished honour conferred on them. The Hall then adjourned to Monday, when the election of these Gentlemen will be declared in form. The final state of the poll was as follows:—

For Alderman Crowder	945	For Mr. Hurd . . .	287
Mr. Kelly	872	Mr. Martin . .	137
Mr. Dove	455	Mr. Woolley . .	86

THE ARMY.

Half Pay.—The three months' half-pay due on the 27th ult. will be in course of payment on Thursday, the 14th of July. The under-mentioned services, due on the 24th ult. will be in course of payment on the 14th of this month, viz:—Retired, full and half-pay; Military Pensions to Wounded Officers; Pay of Adjutants of Local Militia; Allowances to Reduced Adjutants, and Serjeant-Majors of Militia; Foreign half pay, and Foreign Pensions—The 7th (the Queen's Own) Regiment of Light Dragoons (Hussars) is ordered to march, on Monday next, from Hounslow Barracks, for York.

The 8th (the King's Royal Irish) Regiment of Ligh Dragoons (Hussars) has received orders to march, on Monday next, from Windsor to Hounslow Barracks.—The 12th (the Prince of Wales's Royal Lancers) Regiment, has received orders to march, on Monday next, for Birmingham and Coventry.

ARRIVAL OF LORD COCHRANE AT PORTSMOUTH.

Portsmouth, June 27.—This morning's dawn discovered his Majesty the Emperor of Brazil's frigate, Peranga, anchored at Spithead, with the flag of Lord Cochrane flying at the main, as Admiral of the Emperor's fleet. At nine o'clock a communication was had with the Victory, the flag-ship of the Port Admiral, regarding the customary salutes between friendly powers, which we suppose was satisfactorily arranged, for, about three in the afternoon, the Peranga saluted our Admiral, which was returned by him in the usual manner. Lord Cochrane landed at the King's Sally Port, about ten o'clock, when the assembled populace gave him three cheers, for which he bowed politely in return. He walked up the High-street, to the George Hotel, accompanied by his suite. Time and the elements seem to have had some effect on his Lordship's person. He was dressed in a blue undress military coat, with a foraging cap with gold band. His Lordship seemed to stoop in his gait, and looked rather pale. We learn the frigate sailed from Maranham on the 20th ult., and having been driven by the S. E. winds to the Northward of the Azores, bore up for this port, in order to shift some of her masts, which have been sprung, and to repair other damages. The officers report, that all the northern provinces of Brazil had been restored to tranquillity and obedience to the Government, and that no hostile vessel of war had been seen on any part of the coast since the evacuation of Bahia two years since.—A number of naval and military officers waited on his Lordship immediately on his arrival at Billett's Hotel. He proceeds to London in the morning.—The Peranga is a very fine frigate, mounting 46 guns, and has a very showy appearance, from the immense size of her ensign, added to the flag of his Lordship flying at the main, and another flag on the bowsprit.—Most of the crew are British, as also the officers. The first and second Captains are Shepherd and Crosby.—During the time the Peranga was saluting, she ran up the English union to her fore-top-gallant-mast head.—It was a considerable time before any shore boat was allowed to board the frigate. The first information Lord Cochrane asked, was, if the Catholic Bill had passed.

On Tuesday last Abraham Levy, Esq. of the East India House, residing at Bank Terrace, Whitechapel-road, was proceeding in his carriage with his family to see the review on Hounslow Heath, when on reaching Hammersmith he became alarmingly ill, so much so, that he could not onger bear the motion of the carriage. The unfortunate Gentleman was conveyed to the Cock and Magpie Tavern, at Hammersmith, where every medical aid was promptly procured, but in less than ten minutes after entering the house, he breathed his last.

A dreadful fire broke out on Thursday morning between twelve and one o'clock, in the Green-lanes, Stoke Newington, on the premises of Mr. Massey, a bullion dealer, of Leadenhall-street. Mr. Massey had just finished building four beautiful houses near the end of Church-lane, and the workmen were going to leave about the time above stated, when one of the houses was discovered to be on fire, which owing to the dry state of the materials was spreading rapidly to the adjoining houses. Messengers were dispatched after the engines to town, and persons employed themselves in throwing water with pails and buckets, but without effect, and the whole of Mr. Massey's houses were enveloped in the flames, which wore a very alarming aspect, and all attempts to arrest their progress proved abortive. Before the engines could arrive from town three out of the four houses were completely burnt down. We understand Mr. Massey is not insured; and no cause can be assigned for the conflagration.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT—Thursday.

Lord Ravensworth v. Law and others.—Mr. Sugden stated, that this was a common bill, filed by Lord Ravensworth, his son, and other persons interested, against Mr. Law, the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle, the Bishop of Durham, and others; and the object of it was to establish a claim to a modus.—Mr. Horne said he did not think it necessary to trouble the Court in opening the answers of the several defendants, because, if the Court should be of opinion that the plaintiffs' title was clear upon their own evidence, he did not mean to resist the application.—His Honour asked, if Mr. Horne meant to pray an issue?—Mr. Horne said no—he meant to leave it entirely to the Court, to decide the right upon the evidence of the plaintiff himself.—Mr. Sugden was quite prepared to read his evidence and to prove the title of the plaintiff, which was not disputed.—His Honour considered, from what had been said, that there was nothing to be disposed of but the question of costs.—Prayer of the bill granted.

Mr. Secretary Peel, in answer to a question from Mr. Hume, said, it was his intention to bring in certain Bills next Session, for the consolidation of parts of the Criminal Law.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER—Thursday.

The King v. Knight and Others.—This was an information filed against the defendants, under the 43d Geo. 3, for the recovery of a sum of 50*l.*, as a penalty, due in consequence of their resisting a tax-gatherer in the execution of his duty.—The Solicitor-General and Mr. Shepherd appeared for the King; and Mr. Jervis, for the defendant. The circumstances were these;—A Mr. Richard Hoskins, who resides at Charlton-row, near Manchester, not finding it convenient to pay his taxes, a necessity arose of putting a distress into his house. When the tax-gatherer, Redfearn, arrived at the house, he found that the creditors of Mr. Hoskins had been before-hand. The property and furniture of the house had been seized, and a sale was going on. He immediately applied to one of the defendants for the taxes, which amounted to 6*l.*, and some odd shillings. This request was received civilly, and the tax-gatherer was told, that if he would wait half an hour, he should have the money. He waited the half hour, but no money arrived. A second demand was made. The conduct then pursued was far different from that on the first intimation. Insult, abuse, violence, and blows, were the response. Two bailiffs were then sent for, and a chest of drawers was seized, to answer the demand. At length, perceiving that they must in the end yield, the money was obtained, and paid to the tax-gatherer. On these facts of the assault, which thus operated to obstruct the tax-gatherer in the execution of his duty, the present information was filed. Mr. Jervis, for the defendant, contended, that the evidence for the Crown did not prove that his clients were guilty of the obstruction in question. Those who had been guilty of the offence had submitted, and allowed judgment to go by default. This, however, was by no means the case with them. They were conscious of their innocence, and therefore defended it themselves. They might have been present at the obstruction, but there was no proof that they had been guilty of the offence imputed to them. Taking all the facts into their consideration, he hoped the Jury would think their verdict ought to be for his client. The Solicitor-General was greatly surprised at the very strange speeies of defence here set up. If the defendants were to be acquitted in this case, then if there were five persons engaged in a murder, the person only who had actually struck the fatal blow, or fired the pistol, would be punished. These parties were present at the time, and by that presence, and the countenance thus afforded, they certainly rendered themselves liable, and were subject to the penalty of the law.—The Lord Chief Baron summed up the evidence, and told the Jury, that the sole point for their consideration was, whether these defendants had been engaged in obstructing the collector in the performance of his duty. If they thought they had, their verdict must be for the Crown; if not, they would find for the defendants. The Jury having consulted some minutes, returned a verdict for the Crown.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH—June 26.

Newport v. Starling.—This was an action by the late keeper of a boarding-school at Little Hampton, in Sussex, to recover the amount of half a year's schooling of the defendant's daughter.—Mr. Talfourd and Mr. L. Adolphus conducted the plaintiff's case; and Mr. Wightman, the defendant's.—The plaintiff, in support of her case, was obliged to call Mrs. Perry, the wife of a defendant in a former action, and sister of this defendant, and on her cross-examination, she stated that the defendant's daughter had been put to the plaintiff's school on her own responsibility, and not that of the defendant, and this fact not being contradicted, the Lord Chief Justice directed a nonsuit.

Same v. Saggers.—This was a similar action against the parent of another child, but it was agreed by Counsel to refer the case to arbitration.

Maguire v. Farnsworth and others.—This was an action of trespass and assault.—The plaintiff's case was conducted by Mr. Scarlett and Mr. Platt. The defendant did not appear.—The case proved in evidence was in substance this:—The plaintiff, a poor man, had rented part of a house with a separate entrance, of the defendant Coates, a coachmaker, in Somers'-town, at fifteen pounds per annum. For some reasons Mr. Coates was dissatisfied with his tenant, and wished to get rid of him, right or wrong. The last quarter's rent was paid at Michaelmas, 1824, but in the second week in October, Mr. Coates employed Mr. Farnsworth to make a distress for two weeks' rent, and he accordingly seized a table, and left the other defendant, Parsons, in possession. At the end of two more weeks, another seizure was made, in the expectation that the plaintiff would be induced to give up possession, which he refused to do. After twelve o'clock at night in the month of October, the defendants, Farnsworth and Coates, broke into the plaintiff's room, turned him naked into the street, and gave him in charge to the watchman for an assault. The watchman refused to take the charge until the plaintiff put on his clothes, and as soon as he was clad he was taken to the watchhouse, but discharged next morning by the Magistrate, who advised him to bring this action. There being no defence offered, and these facts being uncontradicted, the Jury, under the learned Judge's directions, found their verdict for the plaintiff—Damages 100*l.*

Lee v. Levy.—This was an action brought by the plaintiff who is an Attorney, against defendant, a Sheriff's Officer, as an indorsee of a bill of exchange for 50*l.*, who at the sittings after Hillary Term last, obtained a verdict on the grounds that plaintiff took a warrant of attorney from the acceptor without his consent.—In Easter Term last, the plaintiff applied to the Court for and obtained a rule Nisi to set aside such verdict, and that judgment might be entered for the amount of his debt.—In last Trinity Term, Mr. Brougham and Mr. Platt for the plaintiff contended, that as at the time plaintiff took the warrant of attorney from the acceptor, this action was brought; it was not necessary to have defendant's consent—on the contrary, Messrs. Gurney and Chitty for defendant, contended that it was, and several cases were cited, when the Judges took time to consider of their judgment and to look into the cases cited, and this day gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the whole amount due to him by making the rule absolute.

LIBEL—MEMOIRS OF HARRIETTE WILSON.

Blore v. Stockdale.—Friday—Mr. Jones, in opening the pleadings, stated that this was an action brought by the plaintiff, who is a statuary and stone mason in Piccadilly, to recover from the defendant, who is a publisher and bookseller in the Royal Colonade, Pall-mall, compensation in damages for injury sustained by him in consequence of the defendant having published a false and malicious libel upon the character of the plaintiff, in a work entitled The Memoirs of Harriette Wilson. The defendant pleaded the general issue.

Mr. Scarlett, in stating the case for the plaintiff, read the libel, which was contained in a letter alleged to have been written by Harriette Wilson's sister Fanny, then the kept Mistress of Capt. Parker, and in which she stated that she had just declined an offer of marriage made to her by the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff, in making her the offer, told her "that he would have no objection to her taking a little KITCHEN RANGES, with C. Ricket's late Holmes's Patent Conducting Ovens; it is a fact well known that all Ovens hitherto contrived for the use of Families, which are attached to Kitchen Ranges, owing to the Flues, occasion a considerable loss of Fuel as well as diminution of Heat. To obviate these great disadvantages has been the study of the Inventor of the Patent Conducting Ovens, which are without Flues, and which instead of diminishing increases the Heat without the least additional Fuel. References to Families of the first respectability will be given, where Ovens may be seen in use, and also at the Manufactory, Castle Court, near Bedford-street, Strand.—N. B. The Society of Arts did Mr. Holmes tho honour of voting him a handsome premium for his Invention.

AMBITION, a Novel.

Printed for J. CADELL, Strand; and W. BLACKWOOD, Edinburgh.

"It is more than pleasing to read these lessons of real life, and of good society—it is useful.——The Author has skilfully performed the difficult task of tracing out, in a beautiful story, the workings of Ambition, as they may be supposed to manifest themselves in modern life.——The novel in question is written with evident facility, and much occasional elegance and pathos."

PERRING'S PATENT DOUBLE EDGED SILK HATS.—PERRING (original inventor of this justly celebrated Hat,) invites the members of fashion, taste, and fancy, to his establishment, 413, Strand, and at Hammersmith. The Peer, the Gentleman, the Man of Fashion, the Tradesman, and the Sportsman, here find a Hat suited to their wants, and worthy their peculiar notice. Little need be said respecting the qualities or advantages of the Hats in question; suffice it to say, they possess what every good manufactured Hat ought to do. Public estimation is the best criterion to preference, and it is fully borne out in the universal satisfaction and esteem in which these inimitable Hats are held. The double-edged Silk Hat differs from all others in possessing an extra quantity of napping on that part of the crown most exposed to wear, thereby removing that long existing prejudice against them. Price 17s.—Best Superfine light Beaver Hats, in a variety of modern shapes, warranted to retain their shape and colour in any climate, 23s.—Youth's Silk Hats, Gentleman's and Youth's Seal and Fur Forage Caps, Young Ladies Hats and Bonnets. Hats covered with Silkand double edged, 12s.—Best Superfine light Beaver and Drab Summer Hats.

Gentlemen residing in the country may meet with early attention to their orders by stating the number of inches round the band of the Hat, and inclosing a remittance.

TO THE EPICUREAN ADMIRERS OF FINE SAUCES.—N. B. GILBERT begs to inform the Public, that he has prepared a new and highly superior ESSENCE of the ANCHOVY, possessing in an eminent degree all the real and peculiarly fine flavor of the GORGONA FISH, which has been pronounced by some of the best Judges to surpass any thing of this description hitherto submitted to the Public; and it is warranted to keep in all Climates.

N. B. G. also begs to recommend his ROYAL METROPOLITAN SAUCE, which has been universally approved of for purposes of general use.

To be had in London, at the original Fish Sauce and Italian Warehouse, 451, Strand, opposite Villiers-street; and of J. C. HOSE, late KINNARD, 309, High Holborn.

FEATHERS, FEATHER-BEDS and MATTRASSES.—W. TIBBATTS, Feather-Bed, Mattrass, Bedstead, and Sea Bedding Manufacturer, No. 303, HIGH HOLBORN, near Chancery-Lane, begs leave to return thanks to his friends and the public in general, for the very liberal support he has met with, and assures them that no pains shall be spared on his part, to supply them good clean Bedding at fair and moderate prices, not pretending to sell cheaper than other tradesmen; but to sell such goods as will always be a credit to himself, and really serviceable to his customers. W. T. trusts by assiduity and perseverance, and an honourable mode of conducting business, still to merit the favours of a generous and discerning public.—Families Furnishing and Tavern Keepers, will find their advantage.

DEPOT FOR THE REAL EAU DE COLOGNE.

In order to prevent trouble and additional expense to those parties who have been hitherto supplied direct from this place, with our EAU DE COLOGNE, and to promote the sale of it in general, we have been induced to establish a depot at Messrs. ASCHROTT'S and Co. London, where the genuine article is always to be had at the original prices. R. F. & M. FARINA.

In reference to the above Advertisement of Messrs. R. F. and M. Farina, of Cologne, ASCHROTT'S and Co. respectfully beg leave to recommend their extensive Stock of Genuine EAU DE COLOGNE, which may be had Wholesale at the Original Prices, directly out of bond, or duty paid at their warehouses, Sun Street, Bishopsgate; and have likewise appointed Mr. J. C. Hose (late Kinnard), Druggist, as their wholesale and retail Agent for the same; where all orders directed for him at No. 309, High Holborn, will be immediately attended to.

BRADBERRY'S PATENT SPECTACLES, upon unerring principles to preserve the sight to extreme old age. It is necessary to caution the public against the use of improper Spectacles, as their effects prove injurious, instead of beneficial to the eye. The unremitted and anxious study Mr. BRADBERRY has paid to his glasses for upwards of 30 years, has called forth the most distinguished approbation of their merit from the medical profession, and from many thousands of persons of the highest rank and respectability.—To be had only at 28, Holles-street, the first door out of Oxford-street, next to the large Fruiterer's at the corner, facing Hanover-square, and at no other place in the United Kingdom. Orders from the country immediately attended to. Remove from 332, Oxford-street.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY.

THE STAFFORD PEERAGE.—DR. TUCKER appeared on behalf of Mrs. Gertrude M'Carthy, a widow lady, who is opposed to Sir George Jerningham in this claim.—MRS. BLANCHARD gave a hearsay evidence of the pedigree of the female claimant, which went to shew that she was descended from the late Earl of Stafford, but could not establish her legitimacy. The Worcester marriage register was produced on behalf of Sir George Jerningham. It appeared that it was kept very irregularly, being for some time out of the custody of the proper officer; it likewise contained some interpolations, and it was in many parts blotted, so as to excite suspicion among their Lordships. A copy of the will of the late Earl of Stafford was produced by a clerk from the Prerogative Court, in which the following singular bequest appeared:—To the worst of women except not being a ——, my wife, I bequeath 45 brass half-pence, to buy a pullet for her supper; she is a scold, and a termagant; the daughter of Monsieur Grammont, a Frenchman, who was the most contemptible of men, and never was able to make 45 half-pence in his life; had I known their character in time, I would not have intermarried with them." This will is dated 1724. —The LORD CHANCELLOR said he supposed that this was a set-off to another part of the will, wherein a bequest was made to the best of women.—MR. ADAM said that Sir George Jerningham's descent from the late Earl of Stafford was considered as established, there being no doubts manifested respecting it on the former inquiry.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said, that Sir George Jerningham some time ago petitioned His MAJESTY to have his claim established. His MAJESTY having referred it to the House, two questions arose, first as to the pedigree, and secondly how far the attainder affected him. The latter was referred to the Judges; and before they came to a decision the attainder was reversed. Application was then made to him to issue a writ; but recollecting that the question of pedigree was also before the House, and not established, he did not feel at liberty to comply. He was often blamed for hesitating in such cases; but if it should turn out that the pedigree could not be established, their Lordships might then feel inclined to give him credit for being particular. The further consideration was adjourned to Wednesday next.

THE GARDNER PEERAGE.—Several medical men were examined in this case to-day, whose evidence went only to prove several instances of protracted gestation. Some discussion arose as to the admissibility of women to give evidence on this point.—The EARL of DARLINGTON said, that as the opinions of physicians were entirely founded on the statements made to them by women, if women themselves were admitted, the evidence of the physicians ought to be struck out.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said, that when a physician gave his opinion the House might ask the grounds of it; and if they doubted the statements of women, they might then examine them. Suppose a woman, conscious that the child she bore was not her husband's, took means to accelerate the birth, by driving over stones, like the opponent's mother, and failing to effect it, might be unwilling to tell the truth to a physician, would it not be dangerous to admit the evidence of a physician, in such a case, and ought not the woman herself to be examined.—After a few words from LORD LAUDERDALE.—MRS. PARKER was examined.—She stated that she was now 11 months gone with child, according to her own calculation; she had had children before, and could not be mistaken.—Four other women were examined, who gave evidence of having been pregnant from 10 to 11 calendar months.—The further consideration was adjourned to Wednesday next.

Petitions were presented from the Workmen of Birmingham and its vicinity, against altering the law relative to Combinations of Workmen—from the Freeholders and Landholders of Axminster, in favour of the Western Canal.

The EARL of HARROWBY laid on the table the Report of the Committee on the State of Ireland.—The EARL of DARNLEY complained of the meagreness of this Report, which contained no recommendation relative to the Catholic Claims, or the Elective Franchise. The EARL of LIVERPOOL defended the Report, as containing a most important and useful body of evidence. That it did not contain any recommendation of specific measures, was not, in his opinion, matter of blame, as it was for the House to decide upon these points.

On the Order of the Day for going into a Committee on the Combination Laws Amendment Bill, the MARQUIS of LANSDOWN said, he had several petitions to present against the bill now before their lordships, relative to the combination of workmen. He censured the lateness of the period at which a bill of this importance was introduced; but approving, as he did, of the general objects of the measure, he should not oppose its going into a Committee; he would merely move that these petitions be read. His lordship then presented petitions from the Journeymen Ladies' Boot and Shoemakers of London and Westminster, against altering the law relative to combinations of workmen.—The EARL of LIVERPOOL stated the objects of the bill which these petitions referred to. The measure was rendered necessary by the bill of last session, having, along with some 30 or 40 obsolete statutes respecting the regulation of wages, swept away also the whole of the common law relative to the combination of masters and workmen, and it was one object of this bill to restore the common law. The bill was absolutely necessary to the peace of the country. If any part of it were found inconvenient it would be perfectly competent for Parliament to make some alterations in it next session. It had been said that this bill was intended to repress workmen alone. This was not the case. It applied both to combination of workmen against masters, and to those of masters against workmen. The bill repealed the act of the last session, but at the same time continued the repeal of all the old statutes, whilst it revived the common law in all cases where the other act repealed it. He trusted that their lordships would not object to the word molestation, and would see no word in any of the clauses to excite jealousy. The bill did not apply to any fair meeting of workmen to regulate their wages, and there was every disposition to give it the most liberal interpretation. It allowed besides an appeal to the Quarter Sessions.—The MARQUIS of LANSDOWN wished it to be distinctly understood, that he not only did not oppose the Bill, but concurred in every thing which had fallen from the Noble Earl. Some measure was absolutely necessary to protect the men against themselves. It was desirable that the men and the masters should have opportunities of discussing their respective interests together, but it would be impossible for any commerce or manufacture to stand, if it were in the power of one part of the persons employed to impose laws on the other. This would not be endured if done by the Legislature; and it could not be tolerated in a free country, that what the Legislature could not do, should be done by a set of men with threats and violence. If this were allowed, the best workmen or manufacturers might be driven away to other countries where the Government would afford them adequate protection. Should next year any body of men think that they had been injured by a Bill passed so hastily as the present, he should be ready to move, or to support a motion, for calling Counsel to the Bar upon the subject.—The LORD CHANCELLOR observed, that a petition from certain persons delegated by the operatives of the silk trade at Manchester, complaining of not having been examined by the Commons' Committee, could only be received as the petition of the persons signing it, and not in the character of delegates.—The MARQUIS of LANSDOWN said, there was no doubt it could not be received as from the delegates.—EARL ROSLYN supported the Bill, as tending to secure to every man the right of disposing of his labour. He then presented petitions like the former ones, from the Shipwrights on the river Thames, the Power Loom Weavers of Manchester, the Calico Printers of the county of Surrey, and the Cotton Spinners of Glasgow. Laid on the table.—EARL DARNLEY did not mean to oppose the Bill before the House, but thought it most extraordinary that his Majesty's Prime Minister and the Chancellor of England should have known nothing of the Act which had passed last year. He then complained of the manner in which measures were sent in mass by the other House to their Lordships' table, at a period of the session when it was impossible to attend properly to them.—The House having resolved itself into a Committee, the MARQUIS of LANSDOWN objected to the nature of the punishment affixed to the Bill, the Tread-mill, and moved that the words "kept to hard labour" be left out, and "six calendar months" inserted instead of "four."—The EARL of LIVERPOOL could not agree to the amendment, as gross cases might arise under that Act for which the Tread-mill would be an appropriate punishment. There was besides an appeal to the Quarter Sessions, and the punishment would be suspended till the appeal was decided.—The amendment was then negatived without a division.—EARL ROSLYN then moved an amendment extending the right of the workmen to meet, for the consideration, not only of the wages, but of such regulations or measures which might affect the price of work.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said, that the amendment was wholly unnecessary, as it was already comprised within the meaning of the clause to which it was proposed.—EARL ROSLYN then withdrew his amendment.—The House resumed: the Report was brought up and agreed to, and the Standing Orders having been suspended for that purpose, the Bill was read a third time and passed.

EARL GROSVENOR stated the circumstance of a Bank at Bristol having refused to pay their notes in gold, and suggested the propriety of a short Act of Parliament to renew the clause for compelling summarily the payment.—The EARL of LIVERPOOL did not see the necessity for any Act of Parliament, as there could be no doubt that there was but one legal tender, and that was the coin of the realm.

LORD CLIFDEN complained of the conduct of the Bank of Ireland, who had, he was informed, thrown every obstacle possible in the way of the measure for assimilating the currency of the two countries.—The EARL of LIVERPOOL denied having any knowledge that the Bank of Ireland had so done.

The MARQUIS of LANSDOWN moved the Committee on the Indictments' Removal Bill.—The LORD CHANCELLOR hoped the Noble Lord would not press this measure, as it had been brought up only two days ago, and he had not had time to consult any lawyer on the operation of it.—The MARQUIS of LANSDOWN had no objection to accede to the Noble and Learned Lord's wish, and trusted, that early in the next session, the measure would be brought forward again.—Motion withdrawn.

TUESDAY.

The Royal Assent was given, by Commission, to the following Bills:—Court of King's Bench and Court of Common Pleas, Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellor's Salaries, India Judges, Bishops of Jamaica and Barbadoes Salaries, Regulation of Customs, Smuggling Prevention, Irish Bank Tokens, Frivolous Writs of Error, Shooting and Stabbing (Scotland), British Consuls' Salaries, Newspapers, Law of Merchant and Factors', Universities' Police, and several other public and private Bills. The Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Shaftesbury, and Lord Redesdale.

The MARQUIS of LANSDOWN presented a petition from the Unitarian Dissenters, praying for enquiry into the state of the law respecting themselves. The Petitioners contended, that there was nothing in the opinions they held that disqualified them from acting as became loyal subjects, nor that should place them without the protection of the laws. The principal grievance was as respected marriages.—The LORD CHANCELLOR thought it certainly was desirable that the law should be ascertained. Should any doubts exist, it was but reasonable that those doubts should be construed for the benefit, and not to the prejudice of the Petitioners.

WEDNESDAY.

THE STAFFORD PEERAGE.—Their lordships met at ten o'clock and heard Appeals.—Afterwards they formed themselves into a Committee of Privileges, and heard evidence on the Stafford Peerage, in consequence of the petition presented some days since by Richard Stafford Cooke, claiming to be the right heir to that Peerage. The examination having terminated,—The Earl of SHAFTESBURY moved that it be declared that Sir George Jerningham had established his claim to the Barony of Stafford.—The motion was agreed to nemine contradicente, and the House having resumed, the Report of the Committee was immediately received.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.—At three o'clock the LORD CHANCELLOR, the Earl of SHAFTESBURY, the Earl of HARROWBY and the Earl of WESTMORLAND, in their robes, took their seats as his Majesty's Commissioners, on the Woolsack. Sir THOMAS TYRWHITT, the Usher of the Black Rod, was then directed to require the attendance of the Commons in the House of Peers to hear the Royal Commission read.—In a few minutes the SPEAKER of the House of Commons attended by fifty or sixty Members and the usual officers having appeared at the bar,—The LORD CHANCELLOR stated that his Majesty had pleased to issue a Commission under the Great Seal for giving the Royal Assent to several bills.—The Commission was then read and the Royal Assent given with the usual forms to the following bills:—The Surplus of Grants Bill, the Combination Laws Amendment Bill, the Ireland Church Rates Bill, the Western Ship Canal Bill, the Apothecaries Bill, the Scotch Copartnerships Bill, the Marine Insurance Bill, the Bristol Dues Bill, and a great number of private bills.

The LORD CHANCELLOR then read the following Speech:—

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"The business of the Session being now brought to a conclusion, we are commanded by his Majesty to express the great satisfaction which he feels in releasing you from your laborious attendance in Parliament.

"His Majesty returns you his warmest acknowledgments for the zeal and assiduity with which you have prosecuted the inquiries into the State of Ireland, which he recommended to you at the opening of the Session.

"It is a particular gratification to his Majesty, that the tranquillity and improved condition of that part of the United Kingdom have rendered the extraordinary powers with which you had invested his Majesty no longer necessary for the public safety.

"His Majesty is happy to be able to announce to you, that he receives from all Foreign Powers the strongest assurances of their friendly disposition towards this country, and of their desire to maintain the general Peace.

"While his Majesty regrets the continuance of the war in the East Indies with the Burmese Government, he trusts that the gallant exertions of the British and Native Forces, employed in operations in the enemy's territory, may lead to a speedy and satisfactory termination of the contest.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"We have it in command from his Majesty to thank you for the supplies which you have granted to him for the service of the present year, and at the same time to express the satisfaction which he derives from the reduction you have found it practicable to make in the burthens of his people.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"His Majesty has commanded us to assure you, that he is highly sensible of the advantages which must result from the measures you have adopted, in the course of this session, for extending the commerce of his subjects, by the removal of unnecessary and inconvenient restrictions, and from the beneficial relaxations which you have deemed it expedient to introduce into the colonial system of this country.

"These measures, his Majesty is persuaded, will evince to his subjects in those distant possessions the solicitude with which parliament watches over their welfare; they tend to cement and consolidate the interests of the Colonies with those of the Mother Country; and his Majesty confidently trusts that they will continue to promote that general and increasing prosperity on which his Majesty had the happiness of congratulating you on the opening of the present session, and which, by the blessing of Providence, continues to pervade every part of his kingdom."

The LORD CHANCELLOR then said:—

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"By virtue of his Majesty's Commission, under the Great Seal to us and other Lords directed, and now read, we do, in his Majesty's name, and in obedience to his commands, prorogue this Parliament to Thursday, the 25th day of August next, to be then here holden; and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued to Thursday the 25th day of August next."

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY.

Sir R. FURGUSON presented a petition from Longford, Wilts, concerning the case of Robert Gourlay.

Mr. Secretary CANNING stated that his Majesty had read the Address of the House of Commons concerning the destruction of the Methodist Chapel at Barbadoes, which his Majesty had graciously received.

Mr. R. MARTIN presented a petition from certain inhabitants of Lambeth, expressive of their approbation of the bill to prevent the cruel and improper treatment of animals.

Mr. LITTLETON presented a petition from 2,000 British female inhabitants of Birmingham, praying for the abolition of negro slavery.

Mr. ABERCROMBY rose to present a petition from Sir Evan M'Gregor, one of his Majesty's aide-de-camps, and a member of the Prize Committee. The situation of this gallant officer, enabled him to acquire full information respecting the Deccan Prize Money. The Petitioner had observed that a petition had been presented to the House from several officers, stating that they depended on the Trustees for the proper guardianship and prompt payment of the money; and also to prevent the continuance of needless and expensive litigation. The petitioner remarks, that there can be no reasonable grounds for complaining of the litigation which took place before the Lords of the Treasury, as the claim of the Deccan army was there successfully established by the efforts of the law advisers. The present petitioner, like a man of spirit and of honour, felt it his duty to come forward and give the authority of his opinion and experience, to vindicate individuals from aspersions which ought never to have been made, or if made, should have been in such a form as to allow the accused an opportunity of defending themselves.—Col. LUSHINGTON thought it his duty, on the part of the officers who had signed the petition alluded to, to state that he had no idea of injuring any one. He could not conclude without observing, that in his opinion, if any party had a right to complain of insinuation and calumny, it was the Duke of Wellington and Mr. Arbuthnot.—Sir H. HARDINGE admitted the right of Sir E. M'Gregor to express his opinion in the manner he had chosen. He thought, however, that the unreasonable claims made by the Deccan army justified the gentlemen who signed the petition in the inference that a disposition to unnecessary litigation existed somewhere. He (Sir H. Hardinge) hoped the law bills would also be brought forward, which would enable the House to judge what portion of the plunder had gone into the pockets of the lawyers.—Mr. BROUGHAM assured the hon. member that he had his full consent to say all he pleased of the legal profession. He had talked of plunder; and he (Mr. Brougham) believed there were plunderers with black coats as well as with red. He asserted the latter, he did not deny the former. What he objected to was, that particular individuals should be charged with practices which the lowest practitioner would despise. As to the aspersion against the Duke of Wellington, all he (Mr. Brougham) had charged him with was gross ignorance of the practice of the legal profession. It was said that the Duke of Wellington had no objection to show the papers to any but legal gentlemen—Law Agents, who could alone take legal objections, were not allowed to look into them. So deep an interest do the Trustees take in the advantage of the army, that they would not permit them to see their own papers. In his opinion all the papers should be produced, and he had little difficulty in anticipating who should cut the worst figure.—Colonel LUSHINGTON said that he considered that he had sufficient authority from Colonel Noble to put his name to the petition.—Mr. BROUGHAM confessed he did not think the conversation he had detailed was sufficient to warrant the hon. member in signing Colonel Noble's name. At the same time he was free to acknowledge that the hon. member (Colonel Lushington) had acted to the best of his judgment, and entirely free from any improper motive.—Mr. Secretary CANNING said, that after the candid and manly manner in which the honourable member behind him had avowed that which on the opposite side so much pains had been taken to mystify, it was unnecessary for him to make many observations: but at least he would express his opinion that no specific authority for signing a petition could be inferred from a general knowledge of the sentiments and opinion of the individual from whom the petition purported to come. It was even wrong, he conceived, with authority so to put a name to a petition; but without it there was unquestionably an informality. At the same time he would take that opportunity of saying, that where there were two modes of determining a dispute, it was perfectly innocent to advise that of arbitration, in preference to going to law. It was perfectly natural for those who belonged to a learned profession to wish for employment, and that he would take the liberty of repeating, notwithstanding that it appeared to be the opinion of others, that no one should presume to breathe a syllable to that effect: because true the present opposition in Parliament was composed chiefly, if not entirely of lawyers. Never, in the history of Parliament, was an opposition so entirely, he might almost say exclusively, composed of lawyers; and they were then to learn for the first time since the origin of that magnificent profession, that its members were indifferent as to the increase of their professional occupation. —Mr. ABERCROMBY wished to correct the misrepresentation of the right hon. gent. (Mr. Canning). His deliberate conviction was that no one who read this petition, and also read the letter of the Duke of Wellington, could put his hand to his heart and say that the charges were not directed against a particular individual, and not sufficiently specific in their nature to make it necessary that they should be repelled.—Mr. BROUGHAM on a full view of the case could not but say that the Duke of Wellington and Mr. Arbuthnot did not take the most effectual means of vindicating themselves from the aspersions thus injuriously cast upon them. Instead of having hon. members in that House rising up to bear testimony to the uprightness and purity of their characters, they should at once proceed to the only complete legitimate and effectual way of repelling the accusations with which they had been assailed—that should bring their action.—(Hear, hear, hear. Loud laughter.) After a few words from Sir J. HARDINGE and Dr. LUSHINGTON, the petition was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROUGHAM presented a petition from Bishop Burnett, complaining of the conduct of Lord Charles Somerset.—Mr. Hume then rose, and was understood to advert to the difficulties which the petitioner had to encounter for want of means to proceed to the Cape of Good Hope.—Mr. Secretary CANNING asked, was it because an individual had thought proper to accuse a public officer that the Government thereupon were to furnish him with money?—Mr. HUME explained that that was not his meaning. The petitioner had been banished from the Colony for a period of five years which was not yet expired, and as it was material for the substantiation of his case that he should proceed to the Cape, all that he then wanted to know was, whether, under existing circumstances he was at liberty to do so.

Mr. Secretary CANNING, observing that the hon. member for Taunton (Mr. A. Baring) was not in the House, proceeded to state that he (Mr. Canning) had intimated his intention of being present then, and giving that hon. member the explanation respecting the onduct of Great Britain towards the state of Buenos Ayres, hich on a former occasion having been applied to unexpectedly, e was not fully prepared to give. Inquiry had been made hether any interference had taken place on the part of any oreign power with the Government of this country, respecting its iplomatic relations with the state of Buenos Ayres. To that inuiry he was then prepared to give the most decided and unequiocal negative. The State of Buenos Ayres had appointed an nvoy and Minister Plenipotentiary to Great Britain. The creentials which that Minister received might have been enough as etween him and his Government, but yet not at all enough as beween Great Britain and Buenos Ayres. It was therefore impossible that a Minister so accredited could, with a just sense of what as due to Great Britain, be received. A partner in a highly espectable mercantile house in the city had been appointed a onsul, and had, in right of that appointment, called on him Mr. C.) and tendered his credentials, offering then to enter upon he discussion of points of the highest importance. But he (Mr. C.) elt it his duty most positively to refuse entering into any negociaion with that gentleman on the subject of his mission. He had trictly forbidden all the British Consuls abroad from entering into ny mercantile pursuits; and he would state, that if any were found ransgressing these injunctions, their removal would ensue, for to reserve our diplomatic relations with the new States was infinitely more delicate task than in maintaining them with those Powers hich were old and established. He was sorry to be obliged to dvert to any deficiency in the credentials of any gentleman, but he oubted not that, before the next Session of Parliament, he would e in possession of what might be necessary to his being fully ccredited.—Mr. BROUGHAM concurred with the right hon. gentleman, that forms of the nature to which he had adverted ought to be bserved. He then noticed the other observations which fell from im, and approved of them entirely.

After a few words from Mr. HUME, Mr. T. P. COURTENAY, Mr. OBERTSON, and Mr. Secretary CANNING, the petition, which was rom certain inhabitants of the county of Kent, on the subject of he Emancipation of Slaves, was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HUME presented a petition from certain inhabitants of taplethorn and another parish, respecting Mr. Gourlay's case.—Laid on the table.

Mr. Secretary CANNING brought up certain papers, containing nformation as to the additional measures adopted for the ameioration of Slaves in the West Indian colonies. The honourable entleman also brought up papers connected with the Administraion of Justice, and other subjects in the same Colonies.

Mr. WILMOT HORTON brought up Returns of certain Duties onnected with Sierra Leone.

COMBINATION OF WORKMEN BILL.—Mr. HUSKISSON moved that he amendments introduced into that Bill in the Lords, be read a rst time.—Mr. HUME said, that the House of Lords had made ome alterations in the amount of the penalties to be inflicted nder the Bill, he wished to know whether such alterations were ot an infringement on the privileges of the House. He was inlined to believe they were, and trusted they would prove fatal to he Bill.—The SPEAKER said, it certainly was inconsistent with the rivileges of the House of Commons, that any alteration should e made as to the amount of penalties. In the present instance, owever, the Lords did no more than fulfil the intention of the ommons, and but restored on parchment what the Commons had laced on paper.—Mr. C. W. WYNN thought an entry should be ade on the Journals, stating the circumstances under which the lteration had been introduced.—The SPEAKER concurred with the ight hon. gentleman, and said, that such had been his intention.—After a few words from Mr. HUME and Mr. HUSKISSON, the amendents were agreed to, and the Bill ordered to be sent back to the ords.

The Amendments made by the House of Lords to the Church tates' (Ireland) Bill, the Apothecaries' Bill, the Scotch Partnerhip and Societies' Bill, were subsequently agreed to, and the Bills rdered to be sent back to the House of Lords.

On the motion of Mr. S. WORTLEY, the Resolution of the 7th March last, relating to Private Bills, was made a Standing Order.

WEDNESDAY.

At a few minutes before three o'clock, the SPEAKER entered the House, and the Chaplain proceeded to read the prayers, which he ad just concluded, when the House was summoned by Sir T. YRWHITT, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, to attend in he House of Peers, to hear the Speech for proroguing the Parliament read.—The SPEAKER, attended by a number of Members, hen proceeded to the House of Lords, and on their return, the SPEAKER stated that he had procured a copy of the Speech, which was then read and the House immediately separated.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

St. John's, June 9.—At half-past one o'clock in the norning of Friday last, this town was again visited by the alamity of fire. Such was the rapidity of the progress of he dreadful element, tbat before we reached Queen-street we ound several houses completely in flames. In ten minutes fter the alarm was given, the engine from Fort Townshend, manned by artillery-men, under the command of Major kinner, was on the spot, others afterwards followed, as did he Royal Veterans, under the command of Colonel Burke, nd detachments of seamen from his Majesty's ships Grasshopper and Snap, under the command of Captain Aplin; by he united exertions of the Civil and Military authorities a upply of water was obtained for the engines. At four, we ad the satisfaction of observing the fire was so far subdued s to prevent its communicating with the blocking houses artly occupied by J. Brown, Esq. Chief Magistrate; and by heunexampled exertions of all, the partitions which joined he house of Mr. Brown, to that of Mr. Hogsett was at last ulled down, thereby mainly preventing the spreading of the re, which was finally got under at half-past four.

The names of the principal sufferers:—A. H. Booking, sq., collector of the customs; A. Hogsett, Esq. deputy aval officer; the Miss Keatings, Howard, baker, Mr. A. laire, Mr. Lambert, R. Sears, J. Long, carpenter, Hacock, nd many others, amounting in all to twenty-four families, hose houses have been entirely consumed. The only life ost was a child of Mr. Haire's.

The treaty of Commerce between England and Mexico is nderstood to have been sanctioned by the Congress of the atter country, but not without considerable difficulty; as it ppears that every impediment was thrown in the way of an micable arrangement between the two countries by a dissatised party in Mexico.

The Paris papers of Wednesday arrived yesterday. The ournal des Debats entertains its readers with a long descripion of the festival celebrated by the French Ambassador at ome, in honour of the coronation of his master. The xtravagant loyalty and unbounded adulation displayed on he occasion, would be misplaced any where north of the lps, and are scarcely conceivable to our colder imaginations n this side of the Channel. So ingenious was his Excellency n absurdity, that he caused an Egyptian obelisk to be erected n the occasion, and celebrated the virtues of his master in n ancient hieroglyphic—a language which had been lost for ,000 years. This fourteenth obelisk (for Rome had already hirteen) must have been extremely edifying to the Parisians t Rome, who could no more decipher its inscription than hey could the legend on Belzoni's tomb or Pompey's pillar.

German papers state on the authority of a letter from Havre, that negociations have been resumed between the Governments of France and Hayti, through the medium of a private agent from the President Boyer, which are expected to terminate in the recognition of the independence of the latter Power.

By the arrival of the Alicia in the Clyde, a file of Barbadoes papers to the 25th of May, has been received.—They are principally filled with the proceedings of the Legislature, the Clergy, and the people, to carry into effect the diffusion of religious knowledge after the forms of the Established Church, by erecting a new Church. So strong is this feeling, that the Wesleyan Clergyman sent out to replace Mr. Shrewsbury, declined to land, and had proceeded to St. Vincent's, intending from thence to return to England. The most anxious desire is evinced by all classes to attend, and to get their slaves to attend the Established Church. The Bishop and the Established Clergy are welcomed with enthusiasm on all occasions wbercever they go, not only in Barbadoes, but in all the Windward Islands where his Lordship had been. He had also proceeded to visit the Leeward Islands, in the Eden, Captain Lawrence, accompanied by the Rev. Mr. Pinder and Mr. Coleridge. The state of the slave population is said to be improving, in consequence of the increased facilities afforded for religious instruction since the arrival of the Bishop. The afternoon service of Wednesdays and Fridays at the Cathedral was attended by much greater numbers of them than before, and a prepossession was gaining ground among them in favour of the rite of baptism. Notwithstanding the weather had been extremely unfavourable at Barbadoes for getting out the crop of sugar, the quantity cleared at the Custom house up to the 10th amounted to 11,717 hogsheads. Quarter-master Matthews, of the 35th regiment, was thrown from his horse on the 10th, and a waggon passing at the time, went over him and killed him on the spot.

Madame Catalani, after eight years absence, appeared again in Paris, on Friday week. The concert was thronged with all that was most fashionable and gay, and as the price of tickets was very high, she must have netted a considerable sum by the distinguished patronage paid to her talent.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Menai Bridge.—The fifteenth chain of this stupendous undertaking was safely got up to its situation on Tuesday: this is the last chain but one, whence the road-way will be suspended. At six o'clock in the morning, the pontoon carrying part of the chain began to move; and somewhat under two hours it was safely secured in its situation without the least accident. We understand the road over will be completed early in this autumn, for passengers and carriages. The Suspension Bridge over the Conway is in a forward state.

Oxford.—On Thursday last the following degrees were conferred: Doctor in Divinity—The Rev. J. Bull, Student of Christ-church.—Bachelor in Divinity—Rev. J. M. Boultbee, Merton College.—Masters of Arts—The Rev. C. S. Hassels, the Hon. A. Herbert, Rev. L. Dryden, Rev. P. W. Taylor, Rev. W. B. Cosens, R. Noble, J. B. Webb, J. M. D. Alexander, G. B. Farrant, Rev. W. Goddard, Rev. G. Roberts, W. H. Temlow, Rev. H. Gower, and D. Cameron.—Bachelors of Arts—A. Turner, R. Eden, R. C. Dallas, S. W. Cobb, the hon. J. L. Barrington.

Cambridge, July 8.—At a Congregation yesterday, the following degrees were conferred: Batchelor in Divinity—The Reverend John Baily Tuson, Trinity Hall.—Masters of Arts—R. Beehoe Radcliffe, Robert Edmonds, and the Rev. George Norman.—Batchelor of Art—Alexander J. Lyon Cavie, St. John's College. At the same Congregation the following Gentleman were admitted, ad eundem:—The Rev. Edward J. Burrow, of Trinity College, Oxford; Charles Price, M.D. Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford; the Rev. Thomas R. Wrench, M.A. Queen's College, Oxford; and H. Smedley, Esq. M.A. Oxford.

A congratulatory address was presented to the King of France on Monday se'nnight from the inhabitants of that part of Buckinghamshire where the King resided during his stay in this country. The address was signed by about 3,000 of the proprietors and most respectable persons in the neighbourhood.

The King has been graciously pleased to send to Lord Robert Seymour one hundred guineas, for the relief of the sufferers by the late calamitous fire in the eastern part of Mary-la-bonne.

The lately-discovered mineral spring, in Windsor Great Park, has been opened by command of his Majesty, and one of the keepers' wives ordered to attend every morning from seven to nine. It is the opinion of the medical gentlemen, that the water is equal to Leamington, and superior to the Cheltenham. Every morning that beautiful avenue, the Long-walk, is thronged with persons visiting the well. Not less than from 200 to 300 daily frequent it. On Sunday last at least 500 parties arrived from all parts of the surrounding neighbourhood.

Canadian Chiefs.—A few days ago, the four Canadian Chiefs breakfasted with the Lord Mayor, and having expressed a wish to visit the coffer dam, in which the Lord Mayor and company were received on the occasion of laying the first stone of the New London Bridge, the Rev. Mr. Wrench, the Lord Mayor's Chaplain, accompanied them to the spot and over the works. They expressed the most lively astonishment at the enormous fabric. The Lord Mayor presented them with a medal, upon which was engraved a brief statement of what took place on the day the ceremony was performed.

Madame Manson, who was celebrated for the part she played in the affair of Fualdes, died lately at Versailles.

Hydrophobia.—A medical gentleman has stated, that a few drops of any mineral acid, put in the wound inflicted by a rabid animal, effectually prevents hydrophobia: it decomposes the saliva poison, consequently no bad effect follows.

The Quarterly Meeting of the Members of the Naval Charitable Society was held on Monday the 4th of this month, at the Thatched House Tavern, St. James's-street, Lieutenant-Governor BROWELL, in the Chair;—when 78 petitions were presented for the consideration of the committee, 71 of which were relieved with donations amounting to 689*l.* 17s. and seven were decided to be inadmissible cases.

A meeting of the Members of the Royal Institution of Great Britain was held on Monday, in order to fill up the vacancy in the presidency occasioned by the resignation of Earl Spencer. The Earl of Chichester was unanimously elected President for the ensuing year.

On Tuesday the Clerks at the Table, Messrs. Ley, Rickman, and Ley, and the leading clerks of the Journal and and other Offices of the House of Commons, dined with the Speaker, in the grand and official dining-room, which is the antique chamber directly under the House of Commons. There were about 30 gentlemen present. The chaplain of the House, the Rev. Mr. Sutton, was at the upper end of the table, and R. Phillipps, Esq., the Speaker's Secretary, was at the lower end of the table; the Speaker sat at one side of the table. On Wednesday the sessional dinner, given by the Speaker to the messengers, &c. of the House, took place in the same chamber. Mr. Phillipps, the Secretary, presided on the latter occasion.

Foreign Stock Exchange.—It having been represented to the Committee of the Foreign Stock Exchange, that projects have been formed, and companies established, with the sole view of raising an account, and inducing members of this house to sell Bears of a larger number of shares than have been issued, the Committee think it incumbent on them to caution the members of the Foreign Stock Exchange against dealing in the shares of any company, with the respectability and fair conduct of which they are not perfectly satisfied.

"July 7. By order of the Committee. "WADE, Sec."

Lady Holland's Will.—The will of the late Dame Harriet Holland, of Cranbury, Hants, and of Piccadilly-terrace, Middlesex, relict of Sir Nathaniel Holland, was registered in the Prerogative Court on the 12th ult. Probate, under the sum of 500,000*l.* was granted to the Right Hon. the Earl of Cardigan, the nephew, sole executor. The will is dated the 12th of March, 1818, and most of the codicils (of which there are nine) are in her Ladyship's own hand-writing, and duly executed. The legacies are considerable: amongst the principal are these—to her sister, the Dowager Countess of Liverpool, 50,000*l.*; the hon. Miss Brudenell, 50,000*l.*; nephew and niece Bishopp, 30,000*l.* each; Lady Charlotte Rivers, 60,000*l.* the interest for life, and principal to her children; the Rev. Sir Henry Rivers, 10,000*l.*; the Rev. Thomas Penton, Vicar of Wellon, 10,000*l.* These sums are all in stock of Three per Cent. Consols. To the Duchess of Dorset (niece), her best diamond necklace and cross, ear-rings, tiara, and bandeau; to Lady Rivers all the rest of her diamonds and trinkets. The Earl of Cardigan is residuary legatee of the personal, and sole devisee of the real estates.

The savage owner of the bull, in pride of victory over Mr. Martin's efforts to convict the bullbaiters, brought out the same bull to a field about two miles from Hounslow, and there set on an unlimited number of dogs, who literally tore and devoured the living flesh from off the bones of this poor defenceless victim of their cruelty.

THE ARMY.

Major General Sir Hudson Lowe, K.C.B. has been appointed to Ceylon, vice Major General Sir James Campbell, K.C.B.—The 1st Battalion of the Rifle Brigade, which is stationed at Belfast, is ordered to embark for Halifax, Nova Scotia.—The 96th Regiment of Infantry, on being replaced at Halifax by the 1st Battalion of the Rifle Brigade, is ordered to embark for Bermuda.—The 39th (Dorsetshire) Regiment of Foot, stationed at Buttevant, is ordered to embark for Chatham, to replace the 57th (West Middlesex) Regiment of Infantry, which has proceeded, in detachments, as guards on board the convict ships, for New South Wales.—The 32d (Cornwall) Regiment of Foot has received orders, on being relieved by the 7th Royal Fusileers, at Corfu, to embark for England.—The 34th (Cumberland) Regiment of Infantry, stationed at Enniskillen, has completed its augmentation establishment.

THE LATE MURDER.—It appears that Ougan, the unfortunate man who was murdered, was a steward, or care-taker, in the employment of Mr. Daniel, the gentleman who lately took a lease of the Commons of Saggard. Some weeks back he prosecuted some women of that neighbourhood, before the Bench of Magistrates at Lucan, who committed them to Kilmainham. The field in which the body was found is on the land of Whitestown, and is upwards of three miles from the residence of the unfortunate deceased. His wife states that he came home, on the night before the murder, between eight and nine o'clock, she being then in bed, and that he remained some time at the fire smoking, while she fell asleep. On missing him in the morning, she imagined he had got up early, to superintend the enclosing of the Commons, and did not hear of his death until informed by the police.—Another person saw him sitting at the fire, between ten and eleven o'clock that night; a watchman, named Sinclair, in the employment of Mr. M'Cracken, paper-manufacturer, heard two shots fired about one o'clock in the morning. The body was discovered about six, by a girl going to milk the cows; it was in a shocking state; three balls, or slugs, were lodged in the breast; the back of the skull was fractured in two places, and the front of the head down to the teeth, was completely beaten in; a ball had passed through the right hand, and the left was dreadfully mangled with some sharp instrument. Part of a ram-rod, the back of a gun, and a scithe freshly sharpened, were found near the spot, which was in the field where Mr. Brown's cows were maimed. What could have induced the unfortunate man to go so great a distaucc from his own place, is yet involved in mystery.

Mr. M'Carty, the Coroner, held an inquest on the body, until seven o'clock on Thursday evening, and then postponed it till Monday next, for further evidence. Mr. Farrell and a party of Police, set off on another search last night, and from his well-known activity we have no doubt that the villains will be discovered.—Freeman's Journal.

CONSPIRACY.—In the Court of King's Bench on Wednesday, Mrs. Saunders, otherwise Cooke, and three other persons, named Godfrey, Parke, and Gavett, were indicted for a conspiracy to obtain money by fraudulent representations of the characters of each other, and as designing to share in the spoil. Mrs. Saunders, who had also passed by the name of Mrs. Stamp Sutton Cooke, was represented as a lady of fortune, having large possessions in the West Indies, and well able to pay for all the goods which she proposed to purchase, though at the time when these representations were made she was nominally a prisoner in the custody of the Mashal; but having obtained the liberty of the Rules, she set all bounds at defiance, and commenced her career as if she had been entirely free from embarrassment or restraint. The frauds were of the most extensive description; and the evidence of conspiracy clearly established against Mrs. Saunders, Godfrey, and Parke, who were found guilty, and Gavett acquitted.

We have lately given two or three anecdotes illustrative of the lamentable superstition which still prevails in this enlightened country. We now subjoin another:—A poor woman in a neighbouring county appeared with her child before the parish surgeon. "Well, my good woman, what is the matter with your child?"—"O,la, Sir, I'm afraid you can do nothing for 'en. I have tried every thing. I have carried 'n to the water three times backwards. I have drae'd 'nthrough the brim'le bush; and I have let the mallard (the drake) blow in the mouth of 'en, and nathin doed'n a bit o' gude.—I am afraid your honour can do nothing for 'n."—Dorset Chronicle.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We return our sincere thanks to P. for his communication—trusting he will pardon the trifling omissions and alterations which we have ventured to make, and shall at all times be most happy to hear from him.

Peeping Tom must descend more into facts, before we can avail ourselves of his communication.

We are compelled to omit the favours of Emilius, among many others, owing to the mass of advertizements that has this week been sent to us.

F. S. is quite wrong in his information—for many persons were at St. James's on Monday, whose names he has omitted to mention, and some alluded to by him were certainly not present.

The letter from Brompton to Mrs. Faucit, of Covent Garden, is like the lady, a little too broad and indelicate.

We hope to hear again from Woburn, and shall shortly avail ourselves of our correspondent's information relative to her Grace of Bedford's "Private Theatricals."

Loyalist is informed that Mrs. Coutts was not at His Majesty's Ball last Monday, at St. James's—God forbid!

We are aware of the circumstance Quiz alludes to, but do not think the public sufficiently interested in the affairs of the little Lord and Lady Tankerville—her French education accounts for her conduct at Vauxhall, at 3 o'clock last Monday—they were right to console themselves at not being asked to Court.

Mercator from Liverpool, informs us that old Foote arrived there as avant-courier, having started before hand to order horses for Mamma, Maria and George Robins on their way to Dublin. We are obliged to our correspondent, but few persons now care a farthing what these sad people do. So, Mr. Abbott really secures her 1,000l.—for which he ought to be horsewhipped.

We have not room for Junius.

We received Mr. Newbury's circular too late for any notice this week, but he may be assured it shall not be forgotten.

Hope is quite right, as he will see, for what with Steam, new Type, and other operatives, it would be devilish odd, if we had not an excellent paper this week at any rate.

We did notice the Herald stating Lord Glengall to be formerly Walscott. A Fool! the Peerage could have set him to rights.

THE AGE.

LONDON, July 10.

It will be seen by a reference to our Report, that Parliament was prorogued on Wednesday last, till the 25th of August, by the Lord Chancellor and Lord Rendlesham.

We are quite delighted that the Session of Parliament has terminated—we are spared for some considerable time to come, all altercations with those miserable disputants, the Whigs: and also have got rid of those continual bickerings to which they eternally subject the House, answering no earthly purpose, and impeding the general progress of business. We shall take this opportunity of alluding to their last dying attempt at making a flourish, which occurred on Tuesday last, on the presentation of a petition from Sir Evan Macgregor, by Mr. Abercromby, on the hacknied subject of the Deccan Prize Money, and here it will be as well to allude to the disgusting aim so openly manifested during the greater part of the year to cast a stigma on the strenuous exertions of the Duke of Wellington and Mr. Arbuthnot, the appointed Trustees for preparing a scheme of distribution according to the principles recommended in a minute of the Lords of the Treasury. There will surely be met with few persons so hardened by absolute prejudice as to say that a fitter person than this illustrious commander could be found to decide on such a magnitudinous question; and none, who could for a moment suppose that His Grace would be tardy in witholding from that army, of which he is so brilliant an ornament, the reward to which their valor and intrepidity have so justly entitled them, but those—either whose own peculiar ignorance, or whose general desire to mislead public opinion, induces them to agitate this, like many other points of equal moment. It has been apparent to every rational person throughout the progress of this business, that the Duke of Wellington has adopted that one systematic line of conduct which alone can effect the proper distribution of justice, and that strict devotion to the fulfilment of duty, against all the ribaldry and vulgarity of ignorant assailants, which has marked so strongly every action of His Grace's life; and it is not because, in a desire to reserve for the reward of his fellow soldiers as much booty as he can, and at the same time to avoid any further unnecessary delay—he has pertinaciously refrained from entering into litigation which he knew could only obstruct, instead of forwarding the general cause, that His Grace is to be subject to the animadversions of every legal blockhead that may get into Parliament. But Brougham would be miserable if he could not say something, no matter how little to the purpose—but when referring to a point on which his own delectable calling is brought into question, he becomes absolutely ignited. Mr. Canning most justly observed, that "when there "were two modes by which a question might be settled, "an expensive arbitration, and an expensive process of "law, he thought it was perfectly honest to entertain an "opinion, that arbitration was the most advisable course "to adopt; and a person might sustain that opinion with-"out being called upon to substantiate any charge against "the members of the learned profession, who of course "had an expectation of being employed." But as this goes directly to prevent Mr. Henry Brougham from having any finger in the pye, it is not to be supposed he would sit quietly down and hold his tongue; and although above 14,000*l.* out of the 300,000*l.* has been expended in law upon the business already, still, as by his own account, only three guineas of the said sum has come into Brougham's pocket, he naturally feels sore upon the subject. The pamphlet that has appeared relative to the Deccan Prize Money will form the point of our future strictures, and we shall therefore pass it over at present, by remarking, that although it would be almost hopeless to expect that Mr. Brougham could agree with any rational man on any one given position, we did not possibly think he could style that book temperately written which is a mass of abuse and falsehood from beginning to the end.

A gentleman is said to have pawned his shirt for the purpose of having one more throw at Fishmongers' Hall.—Morning Herald.

Tea-pot Crawford ought to contradict this.

It is with feelings of infinite satisfaction we congratulate our readers on the very flourishing state of the Country's finances, as will be seen by the official details introduced in another part of our Paper. On a comparison of the Revenue of the two last years, there will be found an increase, in favour of the year just closed, amounting to 1,713,601*l.* because in computing the income of 1824, the repayment by Austria of 2,500,000*l.* though added to the gross amount of receipt, must be deducted, as forming no portion of our ordinary resources---and in reference to the quarter just ended, it will be seen that in those two grand branches of our revenue, the Customs and Excise taken together, there is an increase of 225,078*l.* and in the whole branches together, the sum of 504,041*l.* and indeed the only one instance of decrease which will appear to the observer, is in the Excise, which arises in the transfer of the duties on imported articles therefrom to the Customs, since the 5th of April last—a circumstance necessary to explain, that no erroneous impressions may be made on the subject. It is impossible to present more gratifying intelligence to the Nation, than the above statement, because it will occur to the most superficial reader that this increase is not derived from the same imposts as were available last year, but takes place during that period when several taxes have been repealed, which contributed very materially to the general Revenue, and is, therefore, palpable evidence, not only of the general thriving condition of the Country, but of the desirable means now within the reach of the people—and adopted by them—of indulging in those pleasures and comforts which the necessary exactions for the service of the State, had hitherto placed beyond their reach. The broad fact that, in the last quarter alone, an increase of more than Half a Million of Money, during a considerable reduction of taxation, has actually taken place, speaks for itself; and is the very best answer that can be given to that incessant tone of grumbling, which will for ever mark the operations of the Whigs, and which has so peculiarly distinguished their career in the late Parliament—and while it points out to the people the able and indefatigable exertions of the present Administration, it will be to the Advisers of the Crown, the very best refutation that can possibly be advanced to those contemptible malcontents, at all times to be found disposed—nay, desirous—to cavil with 'the powers that be."

We have received New York Papers to the 9th ult., and Baltimore to the 7th. The following is the only intelligence they contain of any interest:—

From the Baltimore Advertiser of June 6.

"MEXICO.

"Mexican Papers to the 30th of April state, that the General Congress was busily engaged in organizing the Government. From the reports in the Papers it would appear, that its proceedings are conducted with wisdom and moderation. The treaty with Great Britain had not been made public; and it had become unpopular with the people, as they conceived it to contain some very obnoxious provisions. The Federal Congress of Guatimala was employed in passing laws for raising a revenue, suppressing smuggling, and protecting the agriculture, commerce, and manufactures of the country, and providing for the immediate organization of a senate."

(From the New York Advertiser, June 3.)

"FROM BUENOS AYRES.

"We have been favoured with several numbers of the Buenos Ayres Argus, to March 26.

"The Argus, of the 23d March says—General Don Carlos Alvear has arrived in this capital from his mission to the United States. So early a return seems to have been caused by an express order from this Government sent to him after his departure; this has left a chasm, considering that it is of national importance that these United Provinces should have a Minister in the United States; but we think that the Government must have had urgent motives to send such orders, especially as the said General had been handsomely received, and enjoyed distinguished consideration; thus acquiring an aptitude which would have rendered it easy for him to promote with success the interest of his country.

"The Congress General of the United Provinces of Buenos Ayres proceeds in the exercise of its functions with great deliberation, solemnity, and unanimity. It gladdens one's heart to find among the number of illustrious deputies that compose that body the venerated name of the patriot Funes, the enlightened and genuine friend of mankind.

"A well-contested election for representatives in the Legislature of Buenos Ayres had taken place in that city. The twelve candidates in favour of the Government had 3,799 votes, and the opposition candidates had only 116 votes.

"On Holy Saturday (the last day of Lent), there was publicly burnt in Buenos Ayres, a Judas of huge size, with this label—"Emblem of Anarchy," to commemorate the late defunct opposition.

"Great preparations are making in the Province of Entre Rios, to secure it from any sudden incursion from the Brazilian forces at Montevideo and vicinity.

"The last Message of President Monroe to Congress is faithfully translated and published entire in the Argus, which is the Government Paper.

"The Constitution of the Province of St. Salvador, one of the States of the Confederation of Central America, has already been published. The Catholic, Apostolic, and Roman religion, is the dominant religion, and the exercise of all other religion is prohibited."

His Majesty yesterday afternoon sent Mrs. Brandon a draft for One Hundred Guineas. Such an act needs no comment—for in any instance where warmth of heart, delicacy of feeling, and remembrance of public service are required, every other name must shrink before George the Fourth.

FANCY BALL AT ALMACK'S.

A pressure of more important matter has obliged us to postpone the account of the late Fancy Ball at Willis's Rooms, until the present number. Among those who best sustained their characters, we remarked:

The Duke of Wellington as a Chelsea Pensioner, and Showman exhibiting several worn out battle pieces, in one of which Lady Shelley appeared en Amazone, in the uniform of the Blues. Lord Hertford, as keeper—Lady Strachan, as chamber maid—Lord Graham, as waiter—and Sir Richard Strachan, as boots, at the Horns Tavern, were soon discovered.

Lord Binghiam, as Foppington, with a bouquet of Narcissus, coxcombs, and ladies smocks, "looked unutterable things." Mrs. Coutts was in high spirits, as Moll Flaggon. Lord Alvanley, as *Cull*pepper, played the hero of Alsatia to the life.

Lord Londonderry, as Kill-devil Killian, and the Marchioness as "la petite femme colere," were inimitable. Lord Anglesey as the Wood Dæmon, and the Ladies Paget as "the Imps of Der Freischutz," looked too natural. The Countess St. Antonio, as a Sultaness from the Torrid Zone was accompanied by Velluti, as Mesrour. Lord Glengall, an amateur, as Le menteur veridique, surprised every one by playing true.

Mr. Henry de Roos, as Mephostophiles was very successful. We were delighted with an admirable group from Moliere, of Lord Belgrave, as Harpagon in L'Avare—Sir H. Cooke, as Tartuffe—"Le pauvre homme?"—Mr. Raikes, as Jourdain, in the Bourgeois Gentilhomme, speaking lingua franca—Mr. Francis Russell, as Scapin, in Les Fourberies, and the Duke of Bedford, as George Dandin, exclaiming, "la méchancete d'une femme iroit-elle bien jusque-la?"—Sir George Warrender appeared—first as Monsieur de Sotenville, and afterwards as the glutton of La Fontaine.

Amongst the Artists from the Opera, we observed Begrez as an itinerant brazier, trying to dispose of a rusty Flint fowling piece, and Torri, as a Savoyard, selling casts of St. Antonio. Major Wylley, as Messire Bon, in the Cocu battu et content of Fontaine, seemed well pleased with his character; and Mrs. Wylley, as a fellow*commoner* of Cambridge, looked very cunning.

We have only room to add, that Mr. John Mills, as a gentleman from Duke's Place, with specimens of Mosaic, seemed very anxious to obtain the custom of Lady Sefton and her daughters, who were charming as Mother Bunch and her chickens, and that Messrs. C. Mills, Cockerell, and Talbot were not bad as Tag, Rag, and Bobtail.

ACTS OF PARLIAMENT.

AIR—"One bumper at parting, though many."

One motion at parting, though many,
The members have made since they met,
The best and the wisest of any,
Remains to be pass'd by them yet.
The wisdom the Senate has in it,
Is always so slow to come forth,
That seldom, alas, till the minute
Of breaking up, know we its WORTH!!
And oh, may the good people never,
At motions like these dare to scoff:
So let's move that each member's endeavour
Be read—and each member move off.

DUKE WILLIAM OF GLOUCESTER has brought in
A bill which, their Lordships might see,
Could shew that he never was caught in Attempts to prove one and one—three!
Old SUSSEX has passed the whole season,
In dining out every day,
And has spoke not—for one only reason—
—Because he had nothing to say.
LORD LAUDERDALE's spent every morning
For pawnbrokers making a fight,
And left very soon, for adorning,
To spend with old LANSDOWNE the night.

LORD GRANTHAM's been signing commissions
In his troop of the York Cavalry,
LORD GLENGALL has brought in petitions,
Allowed "on the table to lie."
LORD HARBOROUGH's weathered the gale in
The watch-house, and 80, Dean Street,
And seems so devoted to sailing,
He'll very soon be in the Fleet!!
LORD ALVANLEY's been such a fume in,
"He moved," in his amorous rage,
"The order of the day" for consuming
That infamous Paper, the "AGE."

LORD HOLLAND petitions presented—
In which the petitioner sues
That Ladies, he knew, be prevented
From having their vassals ill-used.
Lord LUCAN's been begging "young hopeful"
The sixth great commandment won't break,
When he's known ALEXANDER to mope, full
A twelvemonth, for TULLAMORE's sake.
DUKE MARLBOROUGH's promised to settle
What he "promised to pay" long ago,
And LIMERICK's stated, that mettle
As good as the others, he'll shew.

LORD TANKERVILLE, being afflicted
With violent pains in his head,
Has moved, that his Lady's restricted
From coming so late up to bed.
The bill having passed through the Commons,
When WALPOLE was not in the way,
'Twas moved, that he now had a summons
To hear just what JOHN had to say.
LORD DONOUGHMORE had but committed
One blunder as oft as he spake,
And PADDY to speak once permitted
Can sure do no more than mistake.

LORD BELGRAVE has put down a shilling,
And DE LA ZOUCH sixpence has set,
To show that they both are most willing To pay off the NATIONAL DEBT!
'Tis done, though, on this one condition,
Which BELGRAVE begg'd leave to explain,
That the House do send out a commission
That RAWLINGS shan't lick him again.
LORD VALLETORT's been rather puzzled
To know "how many beans make up five,"
And MARTIN concerned that they muzzled
The bulls "just to bate 'em alive!"*

ARTHUR HILL and LORD NUGENT comparing
The size of their heads and their tails,
Have long been contending and swearing
In whom the preponderance prevails.
But both knowing well they had got 'em,
'Twas settled at last—for they said,
That NUGENT was largest in bottom,
And HILL was the thickest in head.
JOHN CALCRAFT on GLENGALL's been calling,
To tell him that UXBRIDGE was mad,
And an error would certainly fall in,
For CHESTER was not to be had!!

MR. BROUGHAM, of Glasgow the Rector,
And grand University tool,
Has tried for his friends to project a
New Cockney kind of a school.
Where HOBHOUSE the classics to teach is,
And DEERHURST the horn book to hold,
And TWISS's last Catholic speech is
For Learning's advance to be sold!
That people may all have a notion
How PETER MOORE fagged to the last,
Let them know he has not made a motion,
Poor fellow! since Easter has past.

GOOSE HUME has been shewing how he'll dock
Our Ships, when he steers into Place,
And BURY, with STEER's Opodeldoc
Been rubbing "goose-look"† from his face.
As he fancied a jerkin of camlet,
And patronized always the art,
LORD FORBES has been studying Hamlet,
But TOTALLY FAILED in the part!
SIR W. GUISE has been trying
To learn by conjecture, or rule,
Whether WEBB or himself stand most high in
The Gloucester idea of—fool!

LORD SEFTON has netted six thousand
At CROCKFORD's, by "seven's the main,"
And LAMBTON been buying a house and
The grounds, upon Wimbledon plain.
GEORGE LAMB, rather short in his speeches,
A motion made, begging to say,
That all must take two pairs of BREECHES,
Who went down at HATFIELD to stay!!!
There's JEM ABERCROMBY who rose up,
To get CAPTAIN WILSON his place,
May talk, and BOB button his clothes up,
They cannot close up his disgrace.

SIR FRANCIS BURDETT has been writing
The life of the late LADY O———
And ARCHIBALD HAMILTON quite in
A stew, lest too far he should go!
TOM DENMAN for once has been quiet,
As nothing has offered a slice,
HART DAVIS has issued his fiat
To say that "it is very nice."
MICHAEL ANGELO's sent to buy provender
Five or six times every day,
But always found out that GEORGE WARRENDER
Ate all that came in his way.

GEORGE ANSON has properly voted
An army reduction for fear,
As he chanced to be lately promoted,
Some fighting might shortly be near!
So you see what the Senate has in it
Is always so slow to come forth,
That seldom, alas! till the minute
Of breaking up, know we its WORTH!
Then, oh, may the good people never
At motions like these dare to scoff:
We've noticed each member's endeavour,
And now move—each member move off!

* Vide MARTIN's Speeches, passim.
† "Where got'st thou that goose-look, villain?"—MACBETH.

We have so fully entered upon the merits of the present year's ACADEMY, that we have nothing further to advance—but as both that and the SOCIETY FOR BRITISH ARTISTS closed yesterday, we feel bound to express our regret, that we have been prevented from saying as much as we could have desired, relative to the latter institution. We feel highly interested in its prosperity, and entertain not a doubt of a continuation of the success it has so eminently enjoyed this season, while it possesses the aid of such men as LINTON, MARTIN, and STANFIELD; and without saying another word on artists, the splendour of whose genius requires no eulogy, we seriously advise the first of them, who is the assiduous and able Secretary to the society, if he wish that good to his undertaking, which his great exertions seem to indicate, to exclude for ever from any participations in this exhibition the paintings! of that redoubtable blockhead, Mr. B. R. HAYDON, whose daubs seen there this year would be a disgrace to the signs of our country pot-houses. The Society is quite wrong, if its members suppose there is any thing in this fellow's name, for they must know that it is only by their works such persons are either estimated, or cared about. We are particularly induced to notice this man, because, in a late review of his works, in a cotemporary Journal, he was accused of "asking Parliament for money because he was a great artist," and he laconically replied in the daily prints, that "it was a falsehood." How far it was a falsehood our readers shall judge; for the following extracts from his petition to the House of Commons, praying for patronage to Historical Painters, though it does not actually ask for a draft off hand, is about as broad a hint as any fellow ever had the impudence to make:—

"That your petitioner (if he may be permitted to allude to his own misfortunes) has devoted 19 years to the study of historical painting; that his productions have been visited by thousands in England and in Scotland; that he has received signs of regard and estimation from many of the most celebrated men in Europe; that the day after he was imprisoned he was greeted by a distinguished honor from a foreign academy; but that historical pictures of the size of life being ill-adapted to private patronage, he has been overwhelmed by the immense expense of such undertakings. That he has been torn from his home and his studies; and all the materials of his art, collected with the greatest care from all parts of the world, the savings and accumulations of his life, have been seized. That he is now in the King's Bench, separated from his family, and his habits of employment, and will have to begin life again with his prospects blighted, and the means by which alone he could pursue his art, scattered and destroyed.

"And he humbly prays you to appoint such a committee as investigated the subject of the Elgin Marbles, to enquire into the state of encouragement of historical painting, and to ascertain the best method of preventing, by moderate and judicious patronage, those who devote their lives to such honorable pursuits, so essential (as your committee has affirmed) to science, literature, and art, from ending their days in PRISON and disgrace!"

In the first place, by his own account, this Mr. HAYDON has been patronized "by thousands in England and Scotland," who paid a shilling a piece to see his paintings, consequently his embarrassments do not appear to arise from any national neglect of his art—at least his professional art; in the next place, on what pretence did he petition Parliament "to ascertain the best method of preventing historical painters from ending their days in prison," unless it was to extricate himself, who was probably the only historical painter! at that time in prison? It is sheer impudence from first to last; for, in our firm belief, Mr. HAYDON's difficulties arose from an extravagance of private expenditure, deemed by himself commensurate with the dignity of an historical painter, and not solely in the furtherance of his art, which the encouragement of that art was fully equal to. Mr. HAYDON ought to be a much better artist than he stands the least chance of being at present, before he ever thought of troubling Parliament about either himself or his affairs, or before he could expect that Government would feel disposed to listen to the petition of a man who, in all his other writings, had heaped the grossest abuse upon them.

THEATRES.

THE FRENCH CORONATION made its appearance at Drury-Lane on Tuesday last, and, although the total want of interest excited by the original, led one to believe that little could be effected in a Theatre, entitled to extraordinary commendation, particularly where the ceremony of crowning our own King had been so gorgeously exhibited, we were most agreeably disappointed. The interlocutory matter put together, as the medium of introducing this imposing spectable, is from the prolific muse of GEORGE COLMAN, though a Mr. BLUECHAMBER has been made, we understand, nominally to bear the responsibility of the mighty burthen; and, if one thing can point out more forcibly than another the utter incapacity of the present Licenser to fulfil the duties of his office, it is to be found in his having sanctioned this most contemptible botch—the whole of which consists of a string of pointless jokes, vulgar dialogue, and confused plot. It will be quite enough to observe that Mr. TERRY is denominated a Mr. READY DUMPS! as a joke, of course, on his late purchase of the Sans Pareil Theatre, an excellent actor, as he is, having to support this grievous absurdity. Mr. HARLEY is called a Master Clipcard! and Mrs. ORGER's beautiful face, whose very smile is an hour's happiness, styled Jolly-guills! and this is the upshot of COLMAN's genius, whose name was once the focus of all the brilliancy and wit of the land—it makes one melancholy to reflect upon, when we, moreover, take into account the general loss the drama must sustain—not from a want of his talents, but owing to the talents of every other dramatic writer having to pass under his censorship. Having dismissed this position, let us introduce the grand points of attraction, viz., the mode of preparation and exhibition of all the paraphernalia appertaining to this imposing representation—and viewing the general and particular parts of it, we think it right to pay Mr. ELLISTON the most unlimited expression of our approbation—not that ELLISTON will care personally a fig for that, but regarding it as the means of his obtaining a more extensive approval, and feeling assured, which he ought, that we should not praise where we were in doubt, he will be likely to estimate such opinion the more. As far as the cursory glance permitted to a spectator will permit, we have no hesitation in pronouncing this spectacle not more replete with splendour of decoration, than it is with fidelity of costume—and among the many specimens of liberal expenditure and great ability, we have particularly to notice a most ingenious method adopted of forming instantaneously, out of a false front to the dress circle—a handsome plat rm for the purpose of shewing the PROCESSION from the Archiepiscopal Palace to the Cathedral, at Rheims. In point however, of real genius, of scenic effect, throwing all competition far in the distance, and surpassing any expectation that could by the most sanguine disposition be entertained, are the Dioramic views painted by STANFIELD, on which it is impossible for any language to be too laudatory—indeed, this one sight alone, were there no other attraction, possesses in itself quite charm enough; but there are some other very clever things by ROBERTS, though, of course, of a secondary quality, when compared with this gigantic effort of Art. The fine order in which the whole ceremony is arranged, does infinite credit to Mr. WALLACK, and possessing, as it does, the combined excellencies to which we have alluded, must be a source of great receipt for some time to come; and it would be the height of injustice to anticipate otherwise—for on all points of spirit, where expenditure, research, and assiduity are prominently called into question, no man can exceed Mr. ELLISTON. We beg to suggest that it is contrary to all etiquette, wearing gloves in the PRESENCE, though, it is to be sure, a minor point compared with many others, and this, with the extirpation of the whole dialogue, would then render the thing perfect. In the scene of Brighton, where a group o Sailors are singing, there was a Naval Officer we took for FORBES—if that be the case, this sneaking into the enemy's camp is quite unpardonable, and while on the subject of rivalry, we cannot omit noticing the interruption we were subject to during the representation, by the vociferous remarks of a little fellow they pointed out to us as a Mr. PLANCHE, the Covent Garden charge d'affaires, whose determination to abuse every thing, smacked somewhat both of impudence and ignorance. According to this little monkey-faced personage's account, there is to be the very devil to do at the rival Theatre, but, as at present, we have only his word for it, we shall wait till next week, sincerely trusting that it is to be produced under the very judicious eye of Mr. C. KEMBLE, or that if he should have delegated this Mr. PLANCHE to do it, he will display a better knowledge of costume than in some of his Shakspearean displays.

We are most delighted to find that our hint relative to poor BRANDON's widow has been adopted, and that the benefit she is to take on Tuesday next at Drury Lane, is likely to be a bumper—there cannot be a more deserving case—and while we are on this point, we cannot withhold our meed of approbation from GEORGE ROBINS, who, with a most praiseworthy and warm-hearted alacrity is using every exertion in his power to forward the object.

We regret that want of room alone prevents our commenting on the opening of the English Opera House—but we shall certainly pay attention to it next week. Mr. THORNE (who that stupid cockney critic in the Times asserted, never appeared on a stage before—when he was at Drury Lane a few years ago) has made a very successful debut, and the new opera of Broken Promises met with a most enthusiastic reception—on the respective merits of both of which we shall certainly hereafter dilate.

COMMERCIAL CHRONOLOGY OF INDIA.

A work of the above nature has just issued from the Lithographic Press, under the authority of that most laborious and acute compiler, Monsieur Cesar Moreau. It is in the form of a brochure, and contains some eight and forty folio pages of closely written matter, enough to alarm the industry of the most elaborate financier. M. Moreau professes to give in this work a view of the financial affairs of the East India Company since the period of their establishment in 1600. Such a work, going over two centuries and a quarter of the most extensive and complicated operations of trade, cannot fail to be highly desirable and important in a country where commerce rests upon the foundations of truth and knowledge. These important arithmetical facts, which have hitherto existed in a library of 73 folio volumes, of 1,200 pages each, may be now had for the convenience of reference, compressed into a space in a less proportion than one page to each volume. The solid mass of figures which everywhere meet the eye in this brochure are truly startling; and this is one of the greatest compliments that can be paid to Mr. Moreau's diligence. The arrangement seems to be as luminous as the nature of the work admits of; and the qualifications of this Gentleman, for the arduous task, are already before the world in his work on British Trade. As far as we have examined, it appears to possess the one essential in matter of account—accuracy.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF CHANCERY—Thursday.

The Attorney-General v. the Bank of England.—This was a case of appeal, partly heard yesterday. It related to the construction of a will, in which the testator bequeathed his property in the British funds to certain legatees, and the remainder of the money in the 4 per cents. (described in the will as R. 4 per Cent. Consols) to the Society for the Relief of Persons confined for Debt. Previous to his death, but subsequent to the execution of the will, a large portion of the property invested in the Navy 5 per Cents., was converted by the act of the legislature into 4 per cent. stock. Supposing that the testator meant this part of his property to be subject to the same disposition, the Society, instead of receiving a small sum, would become entitled to about 80,000*l.*—The Lord Chancellor, after observing that if the testator could be restored to life he would be astonished to hear what the Court had been listening to, was of opinion that the will would not pass the larger sum (amounting to upwards of 70,000*l.*) to the Society; but that they were entitled to the sum of 18,000*l.*, and certain smaller sums. His lordship announced to-day that the sittings in the hall would continue till August 16.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH—Thursday.

Keenan v. Smyth.—This was an action against Mr. Carmichael Smyth, to recover 31*l.* 6s. 2d. for necessaries furnished to his wife. A similar action against the same defendant was recently tried in the Common Pleas, when the misconduct of the lady was urged as a ground of defence; and after a trial which lasted two days, the plaintiff recovered a verdict. Before this case was opened,—Mr. Campbell said he appeared for the defendant, and he was ready to admit a prima facie case for the plaintiff, and take the opinion of his lordship on a point of law, waving all the unpleasant questions of fact which might be introduced on the inquiry. This demand arose between July and November in last year. In the March preceding, Mrs. Smyth sued her husband for a divorce and for alimony; he was cited and appeared; and in December, a decree was made for a divorce and for alimony, to the extent of 30*l.* a-year, which had operation from the commencement of the suit. Now, though at the same time this debt was incurred, the decree was not pronounced, yet, inasmuch as it covered the whole period, he submitted that the husband ceased to be liable to support his wife, from the moment of the citation; or, at all events, that he was liable only to support her at the rate of 30*l.* a-year.—Mr. Denman and Mr. Maule submitted that the proposed defence was no answer to the claim; and that the evidence could not be received.—The Lord Chief Justice agreed in this opinion, but proposed to receive the evidence, and direct a verdict for the plaintiff, giving leave to move for a nonsuit.—Mr. Campbell then proved the citation and the decree, but failed to prove the payment of the alimony, having only the receipts of the lady, which were not admissible as evidence. The jury then, under the direction of his lordship, returned a verdict for the plaintiff—Damages 31*l.* 6s. 2d.

Frost v. Bolland and Others.—This was an action by the clerk to the commissioners for paving the parish of St. Pancras, against the assignees of Marsh and Co., of Berner's-street, to recover 1,070*l.* paid into the banking-house before the bankruptcy. The commissioners claimed to recover the whole sum out of the assets, by virtue of a local act giving them a preference. A similar claim was set up in an action at Guildhall, which has been reserved for the consideration of the Court.—Mr. Scarlett now appeared for the assignees, who, he said, felt bound to see that the actions were rightly brought, in protection of the interest of the mass of creditors; and, in addition to the general question raised in the case, contended that the commissioners had no authority to sue in Mr. Frost's name.—On the suggestion of the Lord Chief Justice, a verdict was taken for 1,070*l.*, subject to the opinion of the Court on a special case.

OLD BAILEY.

Monday.—F. Wilson, aged 30, was indicted for forging an endorsement to a bill of exchange, for 500*l.*—There were other counts in the indictment varying the form, one of which laid the fraud to be against R. Booth.—Thomas Beck examined—Knows the prisoner, and has seen him write; saw him write on the paper now produced; the signature on the other side "Wm. Ogilvie," is his hand-writing; the signature "F. Wilson" on another paper is also his; also the body of two other letters (produced); saw Mr. Morse on the 20th of January, at the Vine Inn, Bishopsgate-street, when the prisoner was present: it was there the witness saw the letter now put in, written by the prisoner. Witness said to prisoner, "You do not know Mr. Morse, and you should make strict inquiries to satisfy yourself of his respectability;" this was before Mr. Morse came—when Morse came, prisoner stated his terms, saying he would discount any bill for 5 per cent. discount, and 5 per cent. commission—he said that his brother-in-law kept an account at the Bank of England. Mr. Morse assented to the terms, and inquired in what manner he was to draw this bill—prisoner told him first, but Morse said you had better write it down for me. Prisoner did so, and Morse copied it on the bill stamp. Morse received a letter signed Ogilvie—he asked the prisoner if his name was Ogilvie? he said, "No, my name is Wilson, but I do business for my brother-in-law."—The prisoner said, after the bill was drawn, that on the following Wednesday, Morse should receive the money—the note now produced was then put in the hands of the prisoner.—By Mr. Adolphus. The writing is so like that he saw the prisoner write that he believes he can swear it to be the same—not only the letter, but also the endorsement on the bill. Witness is brother-in-law to the prosecutor.—J. Thompson lives at Northampton: knows the prisoner, by having seen him in London; knew him by the name of Ogilvie on one night, and by Wilson the next morning; he answered to both names. It was in consequence of a letter he sent, that witness applied at the Ram Inn. He drew a bill on the second interview, and in consequence of the alteration in his name, witness said, "I cannot think of signing any bill, because you have written to me in the name of Ogilvie, and signed the bill Wilson." The prisoner explained, that he had a brother-in-law named Ogilvie. The letter addressed to me was signed "Ogilvie," and addressed to "Joseph Thompson."—James Hance stated that he was brought into Court in custody for debt. Had seen the prisoner write many times; believes the endorsement "Wm. Ogilvie" is in the prisoner's handwriting, at whose suit he (witness) is in custody.—Mr. Adolphus—It is a comfortable thing to hang your plaintiff, because you'll get out of prison.—Court—No he will not.—Sarah Hambley—Knows the prisoner, who at one time lodged at Mrs. Clark's, 35, Little Union-street, Moorfields; Mrs. C. is her grandmother; he passed by the name of John Cooper; he had lived there three months before he was taken into custody; has frequently seen him write, and knows "Wm. Ogilvie," on the bill now produced, to be his writing.—Mr. Adolphus, on behalf of the prisoner, submitted that there had been no proof of the prisoner's having uttered the forged endorsement, and that offence took place in the City of London.—Mr. Justice Burrough addressed the Jury, and stated that there was no evidence to prove the charge against the prisoner. The consequence, therefore, was, that they were bound to acquit him. The Jury acquitted the prisoner.

He was then indicted upon a charge that he, on the 11th of May last, had defrauded Robert Coles of a bill for the value of 350*l.*, upon the understanding that he could discount the same, and that he at the same time falsely stated that he could borrow money upon the said bill, through a Scotch bank, where he had a regular discount account. There were four counts in which the charge only was varied.—The prisoner traversed till the next Session.

The Sessions terminated on Monday.—The following prisoners received sentence of death, viz.:—Thomas Bright, aged 34, John Williams, 18, George Bruton, 25, William Harding, 22, James Davis, 22, William Naylor, 20, for stealing in dwelling-houses to the amount of 40s. and upwards; Thomas Hill, 17, for burglary; George Waters, 27, William Field, 13, Thomas Godwin, 11, James Norris, 11, Mary Ann Cook, 20, for housebreaking; Jane Davis, 23, Catherine Ferris, 20, Charlotte Groves, 23, Charlotte Williams, 21, James Grosvenor, 15, for highway robberies; Jeremiah Riley, 40, for returning from transportation; John Battle (alias Nathaniel Hartley), 40, James Smith, 40, for horse stealing. One of the female convicts, Mary Ann Cook, pleaded her pregnancy in arrest of judgment, but a jury of matrons having been sworn, and having retired for some time with the prisoner, assisted by the advice of a medical gentleman, they gave an opinion that the prisoner was not quick with child.

POLICE.

Bow-street.—A man who made an application at Marlborough-street police-office on Tuesday morning last for a warrant against Sir Richard Birnie, for assaulting him in Pall-mall at two o'clock in the morning, came here late in the afternoon of the same day, and finding that Mr. Halls, the magistrate of the day, had left the bench, he followed him to his private house in Great Queen-street, where he renewed the application which he had previously made at Marlborough-street.—Mr. Halls told him to be at the office in the evening, and wrote to Sir R. Birnie to inform him of the complaint in order that he might be present, but Sir Richard was from home. The man, however, came in the evening, and stated publicly that he was passing through Pall-mall about two o'clock in the morning, and found that there was a great bustle and confusion at Carlton-house, in consequence of the grand ball given by his Majesty. Sir Richard Birnie was there very busy with a staff in his hand among the officers, and applicant having stopped for a few moments, the chief magistrate came up to him and knocked him down. He got up, and Sir Richard again knocked him down, and it was for these assaults that he wished to have the usual redress.—The applicant did not say here, as he said at Marlborough-street, that Sir Richard Birnie seemed elevated with wine.—Mr. Halls said, that if the applicant had real ground for this complaint, he was certainly entitled to redress, as in any other case, and he (Mr. Halls) was bound, in the discharge of his duty, to hear the charge; but he could not help feeling convinced in his own mind, from what he knew of the chief magistrate, that he was perfectly incapable of the conduct attributed to him, and that there must be some mistake.—The complainant said there could be no mistake on his part as to the identity of Sir Richard, for he knew him well, and had done for years; and what was more, the knowledge was mutual.—Mr. Halls asked the complainant his name, what he was, and where he lived?—The complainant said his name was Dodd, his trade was that of a shoemaker, and he lived near Newport-market.—Mr. Halls said, that a warrant was of course out of the question, but the complainant could have any opportunity of stating his case when Sir Richard Birnie was present. He would very probably find him on the bench on the following day (Wednesday), but at all events on Thursday, that being Sir Richard's day of sitting.—The complainant said he would come on one of those days, but whatever happened, he should prefer an indictment against the chief magistrate at the next sessions.—Sir R. Birnie was on the beuch the whole of Wednesday, but the complainant did not make his appearance. Towards the close of the afternoon, of Thursday, Sir Richard took occasion to allude to the statement that had appeared in the newspapers, and said that the accusation was totally untrue, for that on the night in question he had spent some hours with a worthy brother magistrate, at his private house, and went home to bed at ten o'clock. He believed the man who made the charge was mad. In the evening, however, he appeared to make good his charge to his face. When he came in, Sir Richard said "Well, my good fellow, what have you got to say?" Dod: I have to say that you knocked me down, between one and two o'clock on the morning of last Tuesday.—Sir Richard: What I? Dod: Yes, you.—Sir R.: Why, I was in bed at the time. Dod: Come, come, Gov'nor, don't go for to gammon me. I knows you; I'n a cordvainer, and I have worked for you, so I must know.—Sir R. B.: I tell you again, I was in bed at the time. Dod: That is a good one. I tell you what, you're a devilish good one, perhaps, to do other people, but you won't do me. I saw you, and you had a staff in your hand. Sir Richard: I a staff in my hand! I never had in my life. Officer, lock him up. The unhappy cordwainer was forthwith locked up. Two respectable looking women now stepped forward, and stated that the poor complainant had been knocked down by a fat ill-looking man on horseback, who was armed with a silver truncheon, and that they supposed that was the cause of Dod's mistake. Sir Richard: Oh! That's a different case; I dare say, by the description you give, it is the High Constable of Westminster; bring in the poor man. He was obeyed, and the disrespectful culprit was discharged, and desired to speak to a man named Lee, who was the supposed assaulter.

Bull-baiting.—This long-looked for case at length came on to be heard before Mr. Minshull, the Sitting Magistrate. Mr. C. Philips attended with Mr, R. Martin, M.P. for the prosecution; and the defendant, John Halt, who had now been taken, appeared to make his defence. Mr. C. Philips then rose and said, that as the Magistrates were clearly of opinion the evidence of the informer, Mr. Wheeler, could not be received in support of the information, he would not trouble them by endeavouring to enforce arguments, against which they had already decided, if against the present defence he should be able to produce evidence completely independent of that person's testimony. He should prove that the defendant had been engaged, with a number of other persons, who were, he was sorry to say, persons of respectability, rank, and title, on Hounslow-heath, on the 21st of last June, in one of the most inhuman scenes imaginable. It was the baiting of a bull! The case was proved by a man named Benjamin, who had been present on the occasion. On being asked for his defence, the prisoner stated he was not aware he was offending the law in setting his dog at the bull.—Mr. Minshull said this was not a valid defence to the accusation, and therefore he must convict him in a penalty which the 2d Geo. 4 would warrant. The act said, the penalty must not be less than ten shillings, nor more than five pounds. As this was the first conviction under the Act, and as possibly the prisoner was not aware of the guilt attaching to the act proved, he should only inflict on him the fine of twenty shillings. He hoped, however, this would be a warning to him, and all persons of a similar disposition, not to pursue a similar line of conduct. If a second offence of the same nature came before him, his feelings would be very different. Mr. C. Phillips said, that there was very great danger to be feared from these persons, for the informer, Mr. Wheeler, had received several threatening letters.—Mr. R. Martin said, that now the defendant had been fined, he would state, that the unfortunate bull which had been baited, was that same evening devoured alive by the dogs, and his living flesh actually torn from his bones. If such atrocious cruelty as that was not sufficient to induce a dereliction of this odious practice, the feelings of its supporters were not to be envied.—The prisoner was leaving the office, when the worthy member for Galway addressed him to this effect:—"Harkee, my fine fellow, if you had maimed that ox, or that bull, and it is a question with lawyers whether you have not maimed him, you might have been transported to one of his Majesty's colonies for seven years. So take that with you."

On Wednesday James Woodrouffe, proprietor and driver of one of the Uxbridge coaches, appeared at this Office, to answer the complaint of a female for retaining a basket containing perishable articles. It appeared that complainant came to town on Monday by the coach with an infant in her arms, and on her arrival tendered 2s. 6d. the regular fare, and which she had frequently paid before; but Woodrouffe refused it, and demanded 5s. and said he should detain the basket unless she paid the full fare for herself and child. A witness proved that she often passed to and from Uxbridge with a child, and was never asked more than 2s. 6d. The defendant acknowledged that he had detained the basket, and pleaded the Act of Parliament as a justification of his demand. Sir G. Farrant, however, said the Act did not allow him to charge for infants, and ordered him to pay 20s. to complainant for the expences of herself and witness, and as compensation for the contents of the basket, which were spoiled.

Marlborough-Street.—Count De Lancy, a Spanish nobleman, residing in Jermyn-street, St. James's, was brought to the office upon a warrant charged with an assault on Mr. Vaughan, a boot and shoe-maker, residing in the same street. Mr. Vaughan stated, that having been in the habit of making boots, &c. for the ladies of the Count's family, one of the servants came and ordered a pair of shoes for his own use, to be charged to the Count, and the other day, when the bill was sent in, the Count paid it, with the exception of this pair of servant's shoes, which he refused to pay for, saying that they were never ordered by any permission of his. Mr. Vaughan called again in person, and demanded to be paid for the shoes, but the Count peremptorily refused, and ordered him in a violent manner to quit the house; and he not doing so on the instant, the Count clenched his fist in his face, and flourished a large stick over his head, but did not strick him with either, and this was the assault complained of. The Count not speaking a word of English, his lady, who is a native of this country, and who with another lady accompanied him to the office, acted as an interpreter, and explained to him the statement Mr. Vaughan had made. The Count, who is a powerful man, on hearing it, expressed the utmost indignation at its being for a moment supposed that he could have ever contemplated or threatened to strike such a diminutive being as that, pointing to Mr. Vaughan, who is of no great stature. The Countess De Lancy said, that although she was aware that she could not be a witness for her husband, she assured the magistrate that she was present at the whole transaction, and the Count never attempted to strike the complainant; but being rather passionate, he used some vehement gestures, in desiring Mr. Vaughan, in the Spanish and French languages to quit the house. As for the shoes, she said they were ordered by the servant entirely unknown to them, and they certainly considered that they had no right to pay for them. The magistrate said, that they undoubtedly had not any right to pay for them, and Mr. Vaughan had no claim whatever on account of those shoes. As for the charge of assault, it did not appear by Mr. Vaughan's own statement that any had been committed, only threatened; and he thought the justice of the case would be perfectly answered by the Count's paying the expences of the warrant, which he did immediately, and was discharged.

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

BIRMINGHAM.—Several robberies have been committed in this town within a few days. Some villains broke into the warehouse of Messrs. G. A. and E. Hadley, of Camden-street, and stole therefrom three £1 notes, some silver and halfpence, a card of silver pencil cases, 13 penknives, a pair of silver spectacles, and other articles, with which they got clear off.—A few nights after, some thieves broke into a warehouse of Messrs. Reeves, of Moor-street, but without obtaining much plunder, as they were soon disturbed. They, however, succeeded in taking a trifling amount of cash, left in a temporary situation, with which they got clear off. An iron crow-bar and phosphorus bottle were left behind. This is the second attempt upon these premises within the last few months.

BRIGHTON.—Mr. E. Youens, a respectable boot and shoe-maker, of Red Lion-street, Holborn, arrived at Brighton with his wife and brothers-in-law on Wednesday last, and in the course of the evening drowned himself a few miles westward of the town. Every possible enquiry was instantly made, but without success, till between 10 and 11 o'clock the same evening, when a man belonging to the Coast Blockade Service, stationed at Copperas Gap, a small village on the coast, about three miles westward of Brighton, found a coat and waistcoat lying on the beach, just without the wash of the sea. On putting his hand within the sleeve it was still warm, and from that circumstance, together with the clothes being thrown carelessly down, it is supposed they had been very recently taken off, and that the deceased had wandered there from Brighton, and then flung himself into the sea. The man took the clothes to his Commanding Officer, and in the pockets was found a pocket-book containing two 20*l.* notes and some private memorandums. Thus things remained till about 3 o'clock the following morning, when the body was discovered by another of the Coast Blockade men, in the sea, opposite Regency-square, Brighton; he immediately went into the water and brought it to shore, and the same evening a Coroner's Inquest assembled, at which the above facts were stated in evidence.—The brother-in-law of the deceased (Mr. King, of Islington) attended the Coroner's Inquest, and stated to the Jury, that his unhappy relative had for the last fortnight appeared to labour under mental despondency; and after a full and patient investigation, a verdict was recorded of "Drowned himself while in a state of temporary derangement."

MANCHESTER.—A very shocking circumstance, which has excited a strong interest in Salford, took place on Thursday morning. Joseph Standring, a dyer, lived with his wife in a cellar, in Catcliffe-street, at the back of the Methodist Chapel, in Gravel-lane. He was addicted to liquor, and his wife, there is reason to believe, was not quite free from the charge of inebriety. They had frequent and violent quarrels, and lived together in a very uncomfortable manner. On Wednesday last the wife of Standring left a public-house, about 11 o'clock at night, at which time she was not much intoxicated. It appears probable that she was then refused admittance into the cellar by her husband, for she was seen about four o'clock, standing at a short distance from it, being at that time perfectly sober. About five, a watchman, who had been calling up some young women to go to their work, was returning in their company, when one of the young women happening to look into the area in front of Standring's cellar (which is about eight feet deep,) saw a woman lying on the flags. She immediately called the attention of her companions to the circumstance, and the watchman went down into the area to see what was the matter, and found her quite dead. He then knocked at the door of Standring's cellar, and in a short time Standring came out, quite dressed, and with a basket on his arm, as if going to his work. When he saw the body of his wife lying on the ground, he said very little, and did not stop to examine it, but passed by, and went direct to the police office. He was there directed to the house of the beadle, whom he called up, and informed him that his wife was dead; and added (though he had not examined the body,) that he believed she had choaked herself. Diggles immediately repaired to the spot, and on examining the body found a very obvious mark of a string, which appeared to have passed round the throat, and then behind the ears to the back of the head, but had not touched the back of the neck. When he saw this his suspicions were immediately excited, and he took the man into custody. On searching his house, a frame for hatting cotton was found, from which a piece of cord had been recently cut; and on comparing the mark on the throat of the deceased with a piece of the cord left, they appeared to correspond precisely in size; but no piece of cord with which the deceased could have been strangled was discovered. The body was afterwards opened by Mr. Boutflower, and another surgeon, who were both of opinion that the death was caused by strangulation. A coroner's jury was impannelled on the same evening, and viewed the body, but heard no evidence, except that of the surgeons'; the inquest was adjourned until Wednesday.

BERKS.—While Mr. Crockett (the auctioneer) was on Wednesday disposing of the effects of Mr. Worthy, of Lavington, the beam which supported the room in which the company were assembled suddenly gave way, and the floor gradually sunk two or three feet. The consternation which ensued among a number of ladies present, who thought that they were "sinking to rise no more," may be conceived. Fortunately they all escaped unhurt. This is the second or third instance of the kind that has occurred in that neighbourhood.

WANTAGE, JULY 1.—Died on Saturday last, Mr. John Walker, of Stanlake, Oxon, aged 77. He was a most eccentric character, and so fond of the glittering dust, that he was called a second Elwes. He was at our fair on the Monday previous to his death, where he bought a horse; but such was his penurious disposition, that he cheated the toll man of the toll, by saying he could not sell him—meaning the horse he had bought. He tried to escape our gate, by pressing the same tale, but could not succeed, although he did better at the Kingstone gate, where he passed through without paying. On his death bed, he observed to the person who sat up with him, "I suppose I shall die, but remember, you owe me for a hundred of hay." He has left property, it is supposed, to the amount of 20,000*l.*—Berkshire Chronicle.

AFFRAY OF THE MILITARY.—We are at all times sorry to have occasion to notice proceedings of a riotous tendency, and more especially so when the military are implicated, not alone on account of probably dangerous results, but because it is a most unwarrantable species of hostility which could induce two or three hundred people to raise a contest in a drunken brawl with a recruiting party of the 3d, or King's own Light Dragoons. It appears the band of this regiment had been parading the streets of this town on Saturday last for recruits, and had retired to Eggleton's, the Fighting Cocks, in the Biggmarket, on that evening, to take refreshment. An affray commenced there, about ten o'clock at night, and the band proceeded, playing (as well as the jostlings of the crowd of people that accompanied them would allow) as far as the Darn Crook, when the shouts became awful from the pressure of the people, who began to use brick-bats, stones, and mud, so as to provoke the few soldiers who were of the recruiting party, and accompanied the band, to draw their swords. Great violence continued to be evinced on both sides, as we learn, along the road up to Gallowgate and towards the barracks; many bruises were the consequence, and one man, who had been very obstreperous the whole evening, received a cut in the cheek from a sabre. The sergeant is said to have behaved well on the occasion, and the soldier bearing the instrument vulgarly called the "Great Tom of Lincoln" used every means to persuade the mob to allow the band to go peaceably to the barracks. Towards twelve o'clock a file of men was dispatched to quell the disturbance, but we are glad their interference was then rendered unnecessary by the people dispersing. The destruction of the musical instruments, belonging to the band, has been serious, as the fragments of the clarionets, &c., found strewed in the Gallowgate on the Sunday morning, amply testified. We have not been enabled precisely to learn how the affray originated.—Tyne Mercury.

An accident of a melancholy nature took place at Auldbar, on Monday, the 30th ult. The gamekeeper's wife went out of her house for the purpose of gathering some fuel, leaving behind her two fine young children, one of them about the age of six weeks, fast asleep in the cradle. In her absence, the other child, which had been amusing itself about the house, became tired, and laid itself down in the cradle, with its head upon the mouth of its little relative. Upon her return, the mother found her youngest child quite dead, and the other fast asleep.—Aberdeen Chronicle.

There are still many disciples of Johanna Southcott at Ashton-under-Lyne, and one of them, John Wroe, has assumed the character of a prophet, and in a published rhapsody calls upon his fellows to assume the name of "True Israelites," to abandon such of their garments as contain a mixture of linen and wool, and to put away all pictorial representations. Five respectable gentlemen have actually signed their names to a paper recommending this rhapsody to the obedient attentions of mankind.—Liverpool Advertiser.

HORSE STEALING.—Mr. Joseph Trumper, of Upton, Bucks, has recently recovered two valuable horses, which had been stolen from him some time since, through the means of Sargeant, the culprit who was executed with Probert and the other malefactors, on Monday se'nnight at the Old Bailey. Since sentence of death had been passed upon him, Sargeant wrote to the constable of Upton, to say, that if the farmer who lost two horses from that place some time ago, would come to him, he could tell him where to find them. Mr. T. went to him, and was informed, that the horses had been left under the care of a publican, at Braintree, in Essex, who had sold them to a farmer in that vicinity. This information proved correct. The horses had been shut up from public view for some considerable time, and was advertised in a provincial paper for public sale, and ultimately sold by auction, without any probability of the circumstance becoming known to the proper owner in a remote county. Mr. T. however, having received this intelligence from Sargeant, took such prudent measures as soon compelled the reluctant publican to restore the purchase money to the Essex purchaser, and the horses to their proper owner.

On Thursday, the 30th ult. Mr. Giles, of Watton-on-Thames, had an excellent horse stolen from his field. He communicated his loss to his son, who is a guard to one of the mails. The son gave information of the robbery to several of the mail guards; and last Saturday morning, on the arrival of the Colchester mail at the Three Cups Inn, Colchester, the guard saw a man offering a horse for sale to the owner of the above inn: on examining the horse, he proved to be the one stolen from Mr. Giles. The man who had the horse was taken before a magistrate; he said he had bought the horse from a man in the City-road. The prisoner, John Hamilton, was remanded until Thursday, to give the parties time to appear; and on that day he was brought up for final examination. Mr. Giles, of Walton, identified the horse to be his property. The man whom the prisoner said he bought the horse of was also examined, but his evidence was of so prevaricating a nature, and contradictory to what the prisoner had previously asserted, as to leave no doubt of the prisoner's guilt. He was committed for trial.

On Friday last, a man who casually resided at Ware, was returning from Hertford in a state of intoxication, when he fell down and broke his leg. He laid several hours in the road before he was discovered. A litter was then procured, and he was taken to the parish of Amwell, which adjoins Ware, but the Overseers refused to take him in; he was in consequence carried on in that state to Ware, where his landlord also shut the door upon him, and refused to admit the poor fellow in. At length, after a full hour had elapsed, on application to the Overseers of Ware, they humanely ordered him to the poor house, where due attention was paid to his case.

ACCIDENTS, &c.

An Inquest was held on Saturday, at the King's Head, Baker's-row, Whitechapel, on the body of an infant three months old. Its mother, to keep it quiet, introduced a piece of fat meat into its mouth, holding it between her fingers, but suddenly letting it slip by accident, it fixed in the windpipe, and caused the death of the child in a few minutes from suffocation. Verdict—Accidental Death.

On Monday night, about twelve o'clock, a fire broke out in a shop, in Tothill-street, near Dartmouth-street. The flames communicated almost immediately to the adjoining house, in the occupation of a butcher, and thence to a china shop, in Dartmouth-street, to which it was carried by the connexion of a slaughter-house. The three buildings were entirely consumed.

An Inquest was last week held at the Black Horse, Poplar, on the body of Sarah Reed, aged 25, who, it appeared, had come down to town on Monday, with two other female acquaintances, to purchase a wedding suit, as she was to have been married on the Thursday following. On returning to their home at Greenwich, in the afternoon, the party took a boat at Wapping, and in order to get down the river the quicker, as the tide was on the turn, the waterman made his boat fast to the stern of a sailing barge, a practice not unusual amongst watermen, but contrary to the regulations of the river; and on getting into Limehouse Reach the barge took a short tack, and at that moment a lighter was passing, against which the wherry struck, and she was upset.—The Jury, in just terms, censured the conduct of the waterman, and observed, that they hoped the publicity given to the case would draw the attention of the water bailiffs, or other officers, whose duty it was to put a stop to such practices.—They then returned a verdict of Accidental Death.

An extraordinary investigation took place on Thursday at the Regent's Arms, near Vauxhall Bridge road, before MR. HIGGS, the Coroner, and a Jury, respecting the death of a fine mule infant. It appears that a basket had been delivered at the house of Mr. Fricker, 6, Vincent-street, Vauxhall-road, by a porter from Hatchett's, in Piccadilly, directed to Mr. F.; on opening which, a quantity of paper, rose leaves, and a parcel of [illegible] presented themselves, and underneath, wrapped in two pocket handkerchiefs, the dead body of the infant was found. The basket came by the Winchester coach, regularly booked, and entered in the way-bill. As no satisfactory information could be procured from the examination, the Jury adjourned to Monday next; and Weale, the officer, was immediately dispatched to Winchester to make inquiries. Mr. F. has been some time confined to his bed-room with a complication of disorders.

Between eight and nine o'clock on Friday evening, Godfrey, the police-officer, destroyed himself in a public-house, called the Apple Tree, near Coldbathfields' Prison. It will be recollected that this unfortunate man had in his charge, a short time ago, a prisoner who contrived to escape from him, and that the Magistrates, in order to prevent carelessness, which may be attended with injurious effects to the public, discharged the officer from his situation. This dismissal weighed heavily upon Godfrey. He was observed to become more and more dejected every day, and at length an inconsistency was observed in his actions, as well as his words, to be accounted for only by the absence of reason. He had been frequently in the neighbourhood of the place where his prisoner succeeded in getting away from him. A few minutes before he destroyed himself he walked into the house in which he and his prisoner had sat immediately before the escape was effected. No person took particular notice of his approach, but the lodgers were soon disturbed by the report of a pistol, and, upon going into the room from which it proceeded, found the unfortunate man lying dead. He presented a dreadful appearance. The greater part of the face was blown away, the ramrod as well as the bullet having passed through. Near the deceased were several letters, one of which was directed to a female of his name. Mr. Whitmore, the surgeon, of Coldbath-square, was called in, but it must have been a mere matter of form, as to suppose that life could be in a body presenting such an appearance was absurd. The body was taken to the workhouse, where the Coroner's Inquest is to be held.

On Monday evening, a fine boy, seven years old, son of Mr. Jones, of Montague-place, Manchester-square, fell from the drawing room window on the pavement, and so dreadfully fractured his skull that all surgical skill was of no avail; he remained in a state of stupor for twenty minutes, and then expired. His afflicted mother, who was in the room, saw him fall, but had no power to save him; she dropped senseless on the ground; and we regret to add, the effects of the shock are so great, that it is believed she cannot recover.

THIRD AND LAST DAY.

Match for 50 sovs. each. Two Miles.—Mr. Messer's Miss Sly, 8st., 1; Mr. Jacob's Jewess, 9st. 7lb., 2.

A Handicap Sweepstakes of 15 sovs. each, with 10 added. Heats, 1 Mile.—Captain Berkeley's Little Driver, 9st. 6lb., 1 1; Captain Locke's Irene, 8st. 7lb., 2 3; Mr. Ball Hughes's Fairy, by Castrel, 7st., 3 2.

First Heat—Fairy made all the running until the turn coming home, when she bolted and ran almost into the Thames; the contest then became strong between Irene and Little Driver, who soon got in front, and won the heat in a canter.

Second Heat—A fresh jockey, Old Jerry was now placed upon Fairy, it being found that the boy who rode her the first heat had not strength to hold her. Irene made strong play for about half a mile, when Little Driver came up, followed by Fairy, and a very pretty race ensued between these two, till within a distance of the Judge's Chair, when Little Driver made ground every throw, and won the race cleverly, by a length, Little Driver was rode by a boy; Irene by Snap. Any odds on the winner for both heats, but no takers.

A Grand Foot-race took place on Thursday morning, in Hyde Park, for twenty guineas, between Mr. Smith, of sporting celebrity, and Mr. Jackson, known on the turf. The distance ran was one hundred yards, and Mr. Smith won by half-a-yard. Considerable sums were lost and won on the occasion.

FASHIONABLE MISCELLANY.

His Majesty's Ball.—On Monday night the ball, whie it had been for some days announced to be the intention of His Majesty to give, took place at St. James's Palace; and one more splendid has never, perhaps, been witnessed. The new apartments in this Palace are peculiarly well adapted to give effect to a scene of this description. His Majesty slept at St. James's on Sunday night, and passed the whole of Monday there; and we are sorry to say, that in consequence of a slight attack of the gout, His Majesty was not so well able to enjoy the society of those whom he honoured with an invitation, as he undoubtedly otherwise would. At ten o'clock the Nobility and others invited to the Palace began to arrive. All but those of the Royal Family were driven in at the new entrance near Marlborough House. The Royal Family alone entered at the gate exactly opposite to St. James's-street. The members of the Royal Family present were—the Duke of York, the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Duchess of Kent, the Duke and Duchess of Glouceester, the Princess Augusta, the Princess Sophia of Gloucester, and Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg. The company, on their arrival, were introduced to the Presence-chamber, which was on this occasion the promenade room. About 12 o'clock dancing commenced in the anti-room, where an orchestra was fitted up. The supper, which was a standing one, was laid out in the splendid banquetting-room, and His Majesty's superb service of gold plate was produced on the occasion. The King himself supped with the members of the Royal Family and a select few, in a private apartment, owing to His Majesty's slight indisposition.—Amongst the nobility, &c. invited, were the Marquis and Marchioness of Lansdowne, the Earl and Countess of Liverpool, Earl and Countess of Harrowby, Marquis and Marchioness of Salisbury, Count and Countess Munster, Duke and Duchess of Leeds, Duke of Brunswick, most of the Foreign Ambassadors, Mr. and Mrs. Peel, Mr. and Mrs. Canning, Duke and Duchess of Beaufort, the Marquis and Marchioness of Hastings, the Earl of Donoughmore, Lady Sarah Robinson and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Lord and Lady Colchester, and a long list besides.

The King held a Court on Tuesday at his Palace at St. James's, the first which has been held there for upwards of eighteen years. His Majesty held a Privy Council, at which his Majesty's Speech, to be delivered at the closing of the present Session of Parliament was arranged and agreed upon. The Earl of Harrowby, the Duke of Northumberland, and Earl Chatham had audiences of His Majesty. The Court broke up at six o'clock, and soon after the King went to his Palace in Pall-mall.

Thursday the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, accompanied by Prince George, and suite, visited the brewhouse of Messrs. Barclay and Perkins, in the Borough. Their Royal Highnesses expressed their astonishment at the magnitude of the premises, and after inspecting the whole, partook of an elegant dejeuner, which was provided for the occasion in one of the interior apartments.

Vauxhall Gardens.—This fascinating scene of amusement has attracted, during the last week, a greater number of visitors than we remember to have seen in any other such space, for we learn from authority that above 21,000 persons have visited the Gardens since Monday last. We shall reserve a notice of the Juvenile Fete till next week, as we hear that a scene of greater interest has never been witnessed.

Remarkable Case.—There is a person of middle age in the vicinity of Boston who has nothing but the muscles and common integuments to cover or defend the heart on the left side of the thorax. The heart's pulsation can be seen distinctly, even pressing itself beyond the anterior side of the sternum. This is a great curiosity to the anatomist, and strikes those who are acquainted with the beautiful mechanism of this never-tiring organ with astonishment, as it seems, on viewing this phenomenon, as though every succeeding diastole would burst the heart, and sever the thread of life in an instant. The facts in relation to the case are simply these:—When the individual of whom we are speaking was a child, by some strange accident all the ribs about this part were badly fractured, but instead of uniting again, by a deposition of ossific matter, the absorbents took away the injured bone, and none was afterwards formed, thus leaving the heart entirely unprotected. Even the puncture of a pin at this tender point would be his death, and yet he is apparently so careless of his existence, that he never has provided himself with any pectoral defence beside his common clothing.—American Medical Intelligencer.

We understand that a fine steam vessel of five hundred tons, named the Enterprise, will depart from Falmouth about the 5th of August next, for the East Indies. They calculate on arriving there in about two months.—Cornwall Gazette.

A young African of the name of Francis was committed on Monday from Queen-square Office, for bigamy. It was proved that he was married in Ireland to his first wife, who having lately left him, he married the other, who was an Indian, in the service of an officer.

A fire broke out early on Tuesday morning, at the shop of Mr. Perdue, in Tothill-street, Westminster, which entirely consumed the same, with the adjoining house of Mr. Croker, and did considerable damage to several premises in the rear of the buildings.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE—through the kindness of Mr. Elliston—For the Benefit of the Widow and Four Daughters of the late Mr. JAMES BRANDON, on which evening the kind patronage of their friends and the public is most humbly solicited. Tuesday, July 12, 1825, will be presented the Farce of MONSIEUR TONSON: the part of Mons. Morbleau, by Mr. Mathews. (The other Characters as before.) After which the Extravaganza of Giovanni in London: Don Giovanni, (by permission of Mr. Ebers and the Proprietors of the Theatre Royal, Haymarket) Madame Vestris with a Grand Concert; on which occasion Mr. Bishop will preside at the Piano-Forte, combining the unrivalled talent of Mr. Braham, Mr. Sapio, Miss Stephens, Miss Povey, Miss Graddon, Mr. Harley, Mr. Knight, and other Eminent Performers. To conclude with the splendid spectacle of the French Coronation.—Tickets and places to be had of Mrs. Brandon, No. 6, Charles-street, Covent-Garden; and of Mr. Spring, at the Box-Office of Drury-Lane Theatre.

An attempt to defraud the Underwriters at Lloyd's has been discovered at Rostock. A merchant of Weismear, named Engel, chartered a ship to load wool for London; but one of the bales said to contain wool bursting, was found to consist of nothing but straw, dung, and other filth. Engel is in custody, and has confessed that it was intended to sink the vessel, and come upon the Underwriters for the value for which he had insured it.

AMPLE COMMAND OF MONEY:—While one hears this exclamation on every side, thousands feel the pressure of want, and deride the mockery of the cry. It may be, this plentiful command exists among a few leading capitalists, and that the city men who draw their resources from their ink, may boast of their facilities to create artificial checks, but there is no real and general plenty, and the truth becomes manifest enough by the difficulty every person finds in borrowing money when he wants it, unless he has some Government or Mercantile security to offer, or a Landed Estate of twice the value of the sum he would wish to raise. The writer professes however to procure Loans upon every description of Convertible Security, upon Terms fairly apportioned to the risk which may be incurred of delay or loss as to the repayment, and he may be communicated with personally, or letter, post paid, addressed to E. H. G. No. 8, Carlton Chambers, Regent Street; but he will only treat with people of consideraton, and not upon trifling subjects, or about less than £100.

THE BRITISH SPECIFIC, for re-prodneing and promoting the GROWTH of HAIR.—The principle of its operation is to cool and contract the pores which are opened by a redundancy of heat, occasioning a relaxation of the roots, and render them incapable of retaining the hair; to counteract which nothing is better calculated than the British Specific, as, from its invigorating and oleaginous properties, it almost immediately arrests the falling off, and affords such effectual nourishment to the roots, that persons giving it a fair trial may assure themselves of its speedily restoring it, even where it has become completely bald, however long it may have been so, and, if grey, gradually to restore it to its natural colour. The superiority of this preparation (the invention of a medical man) derives additional recommendation from its being, unlike other compositions for the hair, so extremely clean and agreeable, that its application is a real pleasure, and is only requisite to be generally known, to receive the preference of every article in use for similar purposes. To be had only of D. Peden, 15, Burlington Arcade, Piccadilly, in bottles 6s. each, or cases of four bottles for 1*l.*, forwarded to order, on receiving the amount, post paid.

HAVING heard loud complaints of there being no Establishment of Scientific Artists for cutting and dressing Ladies and Gentlemen's Hair, we have adopted a plan which we trust will be a successful medium of conveying to the fashionable world a style peculiar to ourselves and for which we have this week published an Engraving, copies of which will be presented to each of our visitors. The figure presents the last and newest Parisian Fashions, both for hair and costume; and will be succeeded every month by each revolution in the fashionable world. We beg to state that contrary to the general opinion of those who are unacquainted with our terms that our charges are moderate. Ladies and Gentlemen's Hair cut and dressed at our establishments, each 1s.; emiled only 6d. At their own residence, if not exceeding one mile of Temple Bar, or within a mile of Threadneedle Street 2s.; in addition to the attention we pay to our Clients' convenience, in having six different rooms replete with every comfort, and well aired, for their accommodation, every visitor receives from us instructions in French and English, for the management of their hair. We flatter ourselves both Ladies and Gentlemen can suit themselves with Perruques, Toupees, and all sorts of ornamental hair, of every shade and description, and all kinds of foreign perfumery, better of us than any place in England, in consequence of our connexions with Paris. Gentlemen are also invited by us to see the Patent Machines (never before introduced in this country) for ascertaining their weight, height and strength, in a saloon fitted up for their amusement and convenience. A Clerk attends to register each gentleman's height, weight, and strength, if desired, all free of expence.

MONEY & HIPPOLITE,

13, Fleet Street: 49, Threadneedle Street; and 30, Palais Royal a Paris.

BY THE KING'S ROYAL LETTERS PATENT, granted May, 1825.—PAYNTER and HAWKE respectfully solicit the Nobility, Gentry, and Public, to inspect their new-invented PATENT FIRE FEEDER, the novelty and utility of which will be found to exceed that of any other invention of late years. It supplies fires with coal or any other fuel for the whole of the day without the use of the coal-scoop, or the attendance of domestics; prevents dirt and dust, and also materially lessens the quantity of fuel which is required in the ordinary method. It is used with the greatest ease, and can be attached to any stove in common use without being exposed to view.—To be seen at their Manufactories, Nos. 178, and 282, Strand, near Norfolk-street, also at No. 7, Cheapside, corner of St. Paul's Church-yard, where it is kept in daily use.—N.B. Shower, vapour, warm, and cold baths, on entire new principles.

EMMETT'S QUEEN'S GOLD and SILVER-EYED NEEDLES.—T. Thimbles, gold, silver, metal, white steel, &c. steel thimbles lined with silver; bodkins, knitting-pins, meshes, cap-pins, quilters, &c. Improved travelling and dressing-cases, with complete fittings; work-boxes, reticules, and needle-cases in tortoiseshell, Morocco and Russia leather, &c.; cutlery; scissors, penknives, razors, tweezers, &c.; combs, fancy, gilt, and steel goods; beads, bracelets, buckles, centres, clasps, cork-screws, ear-rings, elastic girdles, neck-chains, necklaces, purse-snaps, reticules, slides, tassels, watch-chains, ditto guards, and every other article in the fancy line; gilt, silvered, and coloured lustre pins, hair pins, needle and brass points; brass, copper, and elastic wire.—A liberal allowance to merchants, captains, and others.

BURGESS' ESSENCE OF ANCHOVIES Warehouse, 107, STRAND, corner of Savoy Steps, London.—JOHN BURGESS and SON, being apprised of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the Original, to observe the Name and Address correspond with the above;—the general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection, J. B. and Son submit the following caution:—Some are in appearance at first sight "Burgess' Essence of Anchovies;"—others "Burgis's," and many more without address.—JOHN BURGESS and SON having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the labels previous to purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.—Burgess' New Sauce for general purposes, having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient sauce—will keep good in all climates.—Warehouse. No. 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy Steps.—(The Original Fish Sauce Warehouse.)

INDIA SHAWLS and SHAWL HANDKERCHIEFS Bought, Sold, or Exchanged, at EVERINGTON and GRAHAMS India Warehouse, 10, Ludgate-street, near St. Paul's.

LADIES and GENTLEMEN may rely on it, although there are Articles daily puffed in the newspapers for the Hair, but it is acknowledged as a fact, whoever makes a fair trial of the Origiual Thick RUSSIA OIL, has found it, through the Aromatic Oils it is prepared with, the wholesomest and best Oil for preserving and promoting the hair of ladies, gentlemen, and children, and if used constantly not a hair will fall off or turn grey, and is such a nourisher to the Hair, that if it has began to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour; will restore the hair on the bald part, if the least signs of roots are remaining, has been proved by hundreds.

A. PRINCE is proud to acknowledge the favour of his Gracious Majesty of Great Britain, in sending for six bottles of his celebrated Russia Oil. It ought really to be generally known—the principal Physicians have recommended those who wear false hair to rub their heads often with the Russia Oil, as, through the aromatic ingredient it is prepared with is wholesome and refreshing to the head. Observe, Mr. Marshal and other respectable Court hair-dressers, will not recommend any other article for the hair but the Prince's Original Thick Russia Oil, as they have experienced it is the best for dressing, preserving, and promoting the hair; but there are several hair-dressers, when Ladies and Gentlemen have their Hair dressed by them, they recommend Bears' Grease, or other Oils for the Hair, though they know it is a humbug.

Ask for Prince's Russia Oil—the Ounce Bottle 5s.; a large bottle containing Five Ounces, 1*l.* which is a saving. Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. PRINCE, No. 9, Poland street, Oxford street; Mr. Smith, Perfumer to His Majesty, 117, New Bond street; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders. Be particular, and observe his address, "A. Prince, No. 9, Poland Street, Oxford Street, London," on the cover of each bottle; without it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose.—Purchasers ought to be particular, as counterfeits are in circulation.—Also, Prince's RUSSIA DYE is so improved, as there is no doubt that it will change Red or Grey Hair on the Head, Whiskers, or any part to Brown or Black in a few minutes.—Directions sealed up with each bottle, at half a guinea, or two bottles for One Pound.

On Thursday the Privy council assembled to meet the Jury for the annual trial of his Majesty's coins in the Pix of the Mint, when the usual ceremonies took place, and the purity of the coins issued was proved by the evidence of the Goldsmiths' Company, &c. A certain quantity of the gold coin was melted down, to ascertain that the alloy was in the proper proportion. It appeared that the total amount of the gold coined by the Right Hon. Thomas Wallace, Master of His Majesty's Mint, from the 1st of July 1824, to the 1st of July, 1825, was £5,046,300. A similar account of the silver coined, after the rate of 66s. to the pound weight troy, of the standard of eleven ounces two pennyweights of fine silver and eighteen pennyweights of alloy. The amount of silver coined, including the smaller pieces, was £137,761 16s.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF CHANCERY—Friday.

Heat of the Weather.—The Lord Chancellor felt extremely sorry to have been obliged to have left the Court on Thursday so early, but he was really so exhausted with the heat as to have been almost unable to walk from the Bench into his room.—Mr. Horne said, not only did the Bar feel it very oppressive here, in the course of the day, but when they went to the Rolls on Thursday night, almost every Counsel in attendance had one after the other, to go out, to save themselves from fainting.—Sir Thomas Plumer converted that Court into a dwelling-house, as well as continuing it a Court, and if it were to be permitted to remain so, the whole Bar would be killed.

Gordon v. Gordon.—His Lordship, referring to this, which he designated as a most painful case, stated that the papers recently laid before him had in no other respect altered the view he had taken of the subject. If the party against whom his decree operated thought proper to take the case to the House of Lords, he should earnestly recommend its being heard and determined with as little delay as possible. It was deeply to be deplored that persons standing in the near relation to each other these parties did, could not be induced to compromise the differences between them, and manifest that disposition towards each other which became them as brothers. If he was in their situation he should feel most anxious for an amicable arrangement.—Mr. Heald then prayed for the further consequent directions for the purpose of winding up the cause. He should, on the part of his client, decline saying any thing on the subject of costs.—The Lord Chancellor, for God's sake! see if you cannot effect a compromise between these brothers! It would be exceedingly desirable for both parties.—Mr. Knight said no efforts with that view had been spared by him.—Mr. Heald observed that not more for his client's sake than his own, he had throughout the whole proceedings endeavoured to promote a reconciliation.—His Lordship heard and disposed of several cases of appeal.

Judgments.—His Lordship, with a view to his judgments, stated that he had in contemplation to propose sitting at eleven instead of ten, as he thought he could with more advantage to the suitors, devote that hour each morning to the consideration of the judgments it was his intention to give in succession, prior to the vacation.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.—Wednesday.

Buckingham v. Murray.—Mr. Hill opened the proceedings, and stated that this was an action brought by Mr. Buckingham, the well-known traveller in Palestine, against Mr. Murray, the respectable bookseller, and publisher of the Quarterly Review, for a libel which appeared in No. 52 of that work. The libel was contained in an article which professed to be a critical review of Buckingham's Travels in Palestine; but it was, he said, a gross attack on the veracity and respectability of the plaintiff. The Learned Counsel then read from p. 380 of the Quarterly Review, for March 1822, the imputed libel.

Mr. Scarlett then addressed the Jury, and observed upon the complicated nature of the pleadings, which were numerous. Mr. Buckingham, he said, was well known as having edited a newspaper at Calcutta, and having performed travels in countries hitherto but little known to Europeans, hence this work, Travels in Palestine. The defendant, in this case, as publisher of this Review, had lent himself to publish, against the plaintiff, that species of personal slander, which was stepping beyond all bounds of fair criticism, making the Review a vehicle of the basest and most slanderous imputations on private character, and such as could only emanate from personal malice, under the shelter of an anonymous signature. He (Mr. Scarlett) would say it was a much easier matter for a closeted Reviewer to throw missiles at an author, than to have furnished a work of much greater merit, and which the critic should be found himself incapable of executing. The object of Mr. Buckingham, in undertaking these Travels, he should state, was to facilitate the overland conveyance between this country and India, through the Isthmus of Suez, this being an object of great commercial importance to various merchants, both in England and Bombay. Here the Learned Counsel went through an historical sketch of Mr. Buckingham's journey and return to Bombay from Aleppo, and afterwards to Calcutta. The notes and observations of Mr. Buckingham, of these Travels, as recommended by the Bishop of Calcutta, for publication, were offered to Mr. Murray for publication, and he had actually agreed to become the publisher; but, for some reasons, Mr. Buckingham withdrew his MSS. and published the work on his own account; after-which followed this libellous attack. The charge and imputation cast upon Mr. Buckingham, by this Reviewer, was pretending to pity his ignorance, for omitting to notice certain historical facts relative to the ancient city of Ukhase, or Unchasc, which Mr. B.'s work would be found not to have omitted as charged; yet these were the misrepresentations this Reviewer had recourse to, in order to destroy the character of this work. Similar remarks were made in respect to other places, It is also asserted in the Review, that Mr. Buckingham's plates were pilfered from former travellers. Mr. B. complained that this critic had looked no further than the Index of his book, pretending to have not only reviewed, but visited those very countries himself, which he moreover denies that Mr. B. ever visited. The libel further charged Mr. B. with ingratitude to his employer, Mr. Bankes, who had paid his (Mr. Buckingham's) expences during a certain portion of these travels. He (Mr. Scarlett) would affirm, that no reviewer had a right (and no gentleman of honour or respectability could be capable of such an abuse of literary privilege), to introduce hearsay slander upon the private character of the author, whose work the anonymous critic reviews. In this case, he (Mr. Scarlett) demanded heavy damages, for the sake of fair and impartial criticism; for the sake of private character; and for the sake of that property the public had in works of merit, the characters of which were not to be blasted by anonymous slanders.—John Peterson examined by Mr. Brougham: Witness proved that he purchased the Quarterly Review, No. 52, containing the alleged libels, at the defendant, Mr. Murray's shop, in Albemarle-street, on the 31st December, 1823.—Here the book was handed to Mr. Abbott, the clerk, who commenced reading the passages, when Mr. Park rose on behalf of the defendant, and took an objection to the plaintiff's declaration, which charged certain unqualified expressions used in the libel, as being too indefinite.—The Counsel on both sides now conferred together; at length Mr. Abbott again proceeded to read the different passages, and after he had gone through several, the Attorney-General said he was instructed by his client to state his regret at what had occurred, and would submit to a verdict being returned against him.—The Counsel on the other side acquiesced to the above suggestion, and the Jury instantly found a verdict for the plaintiff—Damages, 50*l*.

Hill and Others v. Starbuck.—This was an action for damages, brought by the plaintiffs, who are ship-owners, against the defendant, who was formerly Captain of the vessel called the Aigle. In 1822 the defendant was sent out to the South Seas as master; the vessel was fitted out in the most approved method for the whale fishery, and he had instructions to prosecute the voyage with all despatch. Instead of doing this, however (according to the statement of Mr. Scarlett, who was for the plaintiffs) he had been allured by a syren, at the Sandwich Islands, where he passed much of his time and neglected his duty. She persuaded him to take her on board, where she remained about nine months, and then persuaded him to return to the Sandwich Islands, in order to be cured of certain swellings occasioned by the food which she had taken during the voyage. The consequence of all which was, that the young girl's appearance so much improved by the voyage, that the Captain became quite a favourite in the main island, where the king and queen resided, and was courted by all ranks and sexes, but particularly by the ladies. The queen took quite a fancy for him, and she likewise was determined to make a voyage in order to improve her looks, and learn wisdom by associating with Europeans. The Captain lingered in this island, which might be called another Circe, and, instead of catching whales, seemed only intent on catching women.—The Attorney-General, for the defence, produced witnesses in order to prove that the defendant had fulfilled the contract, and, in proof of it, that the plaintiffs had received a bounty of 500*l*. granted by Parliament to the owners of vessels which brought home the greatest quantity of fish.—After a great variety of details, which occupied the Court till eight o'clock, the Jury returned a verdict for the plaintiffs—Damages 210*l*.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

Abingdon, July 11.

Mr. Justice Bayley's Silver Cup.—John Hagan was indicted for stealing a silver cup, the property of the Hon. Mr. Justice Bayley.—Mr. James Bayley (son of the Learned Judge) said, I was at the last Ascot Races in a phæton, and in that I had some refreshments, and a silver cup. After the great race, the silver cup and refreshments were on the back seat, and while I was standing on the front seat with my back towards the cup, my coachman, who was standing close to the carriage, was addressed by another man, who called out, "Joseph, have you lost any thing?" and my coachman replied, "No, I am all right." My coachman afterwards asked me if I had got the silver cup, and I replied No; and he, on searching the phaeton, discovered the loss.—John Hunt said, I was on the course, and saw Mr. Bayley's carriage; I saw a person who was standing close to the near side of it; he put the end of a yellow handkerchief into his mouth, as if to hold it, and he then put his hand over the back of the dickey, and snatched from thence a cup; I had seen the cup there; the person then put the cup and handkerchief into the left side of his coat, and I saw him go away under the carriages. I gave a description of this person to Warren, a Bow-street officer. The man at the bar is the man, I am sure.—William Ayles said, I am the coachman of Mr. Tattersall; I was at Ascot races on the day in question, and saw Mr. Bayley's carriage; there was a person loitering about the carriage for three or four minutes, and then I saw him take something from the hind part of the carriage: I cried out, "Joseph, have you lost any thing?" and he said, "No;" I then asked if he had not lost something out of the carriage, and he said he had lost a cup. This was on the Thursday at the races; and on the Saturday I saw the prisoner at Bow-street, and recognised him as the person whom I had seen take the cup.—Mr. Justice Bayley's coachman confirmed the evidence of the preceding witnesses as far as their testimony regarded him.—John Warren, a Bow-street officer, said, in consequence of information I received, I took the prisoner into custody, and searched him; I found on him a yellow silk handkerchief; the prisoner then fainted; on his recovery I told him I took him about a silver cup which was stolen from a gentlemau's carriage; he immediately said, "I was not on the course;" I had not then told him that the cup had been stolen the day before.—The prisoner, on being called upon for his defence, said that he left his case to his counsel.—Mr. Baron Garrow summed up the evidence, and left it to the Jury to say whether they were satisfied of the guilt of the prisoner.—The Jury, after a short deliberation, found the prisoner Guilty.—Mr. Baron Garrow then sentenced him to be transported for seven years.

northampton, July 12.

James Dixon, a respectable looking man, aged 52, was capitally indicted for forging and uttering as true a forged bill of exchange for 498*l*. with intent to defraud Messrs. Smith, Osborn, Howes, and Co. bankers of Northampton.—Mr. Sergeant Addams conducted the prosecution.—Wm. Law said—I am clerk in the banking-house of Smith, Osborn, and Co. in this town. I know the prisoner at the bar. About ten minutes before five o'clock (the bank closes at five) in the evening of the 7th of Feb. last, he called at our house, and said, "my name is Dixon. I wish to open an account with you. I am the person who has the house of Mr. Witton, who now lives at Kingsthorpe, and am a corn dealer. I shall leave these two bills (one of 498*l*. and another of 20*l*.) in your hands." The bills now produced are the bills. I know them by the private mark upon them, by the number 9,881, and by the day of their being due, the 27th February, being written with red ink. That is the custom of our house, and I have no doubt they are the same. They were entered and marked immediately by Mr. Smith, one of the clerks. The prisoner said, "I wish to place these to my credit, but do not want any thing on them until they are honoured. In ten days or a fortnight I shall have a remittance of about 2,000*l*." He then endorsed the bills, John Dixon. He asked for a pass-book, which was given to him, his name being written in the usual way on the outside, and entry being made within of the bills. He then appeared to be going away, but suddenly turned round and said, "Oh, as I have been some time in Northampton, it is possible I may want a little money to pay my bills; you may therefore give me 30*l*. or you may say 33*l*. which will enable me to pay every thing till my next remittance comes." This sum I paid him in three ten-pound notes of the "Town and County Bank" of Northampton, and three one-pound notes. He then went away.—The prisoner being called upon for his defence, asserted his innocence, and affirmed that he had given value for this bill, there having been a bona fide transaction between him and Hugh Bold, the last endorser before him. He admitted that this person was not now forthcoming to corroborate his statement.—Mr. Justice Park charged the Jury in a perspicuous manner upon the accusation and the evidence, telling them that the main question for their consideration was, whether or not the prisoner knew this to be a forged instrument, when he uttered it as true? The charge of forging must be abandoned, as there was no evidence to substantiate it. Uttering with guilty knowledge was, however, equally a capital offence as that of forging or causing to be forged.—The Jury, after a short consultation, found the prisoner Guilty, and he was removed from the dock.—The unfortunate man seemed much affected.

William Lonslow and Thomas Lonslow, brothers, were capitally indicted for stealing 40 sheep at Clipston, in this county.—The number of sheep stolen by these wholesale rogues, gave their case an interest which does not always attend such trials. A clear case was substantiated against them. It appearing, however, by the evidence of the shepherd, that the animals stolen were what were called lamb-hogs, the prisoners' Counsel submitted that they must be acquitted, as the property was described as sheep in the indictment, meaning thereby animals which had been shorn. They contended that the animals which the prisoners had stolen were not those charged in the indictment.—The Court, however, declared, that if this point availed the prisoners, they should be re-indicted, and it was therefore abandoned.—The Jury found William Lonslow Guilty.—Mr. Justice Park immediately passed sentence on the prisoner, intimating at the same time that from the daring extent and nature of his offence, he must not expect any mercy.—Death.—The prisoner, who is a stout country-looking fellow about thirty, was much affected at hearing the announcement of his awful doom.

A Gentleman who has long been in search of Medical knowledge, by botanical discoveries and chemical skill, has at length found out a most incomparable secret, in the possession of the Proprietor, J. Robins, No. 1, Hanover-street, Hanover-square; which surpasses every thing that has yet been offered to the Public; it is a preparation for strengthening the Hair, making it grow beautifully luxuriant, and preserving it from changing colour in all climates; likewise cleanses the Hair from dandriff and all diseases that injure the roots thereof, which his Majesty has been graciously pleased to patronize, her Grace the Dutchess of Rutland, the Nobility and Gentry. This incomparable Cream is strongly recommended by the Faculty in the Nursery, for the use of children; is a most invaluable acquisition to the toilet, is perfectly innocent and pleasant to use, and will neither soil the bonnet nor head-dress after being well brushed; none is genuine but what is signed by the Proprietor, J. Robins, Meldovia Cream, No. 1, Hanover-street, Hanover-square; and may be had of Messrs. Bayley, Blew, and Chapman, Cockspur-street; Howell and James, Regent-street; Berry and Lloyd, 18, Greek-street, Soho; S. Grainge, 126, Oxford-street; S. and J. Rigge, 65, Cheapside; Hendrie, Tichborn-street, Piccadilly; Delcroix, Bond-street; and all respectable Perfumers in Town or Country—Method of using this surprising Cream with each bottle, Prices 4*s*. 6*d*. and 7*s*. 6*d*. each.

On Saturday se'nnight, some desperate and unfeeling incendiaries again set fire to the plantations of the Right Hon. Lord Clifford, on Haldon, in two different places, at least a mile distant; after the flames had raged for a considerable time, and nearly eight acres of the plantations had been consumed, his Lordship's keepers and workmen succeeded in extinguishing them.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We have received EMILIUS's six favours, and shall be most happy to hear again from him on all occasions.

The "Joke at the Masquerade" may be original, but it appears to us to be "no joke" at all.

The communication relative to the DUCHESS OF RUTLAND we were in possession of, but are equally obliged to our correspondent—we shall use it, but time!

We will make the enquiries alluded to by SPY, he may be assured.

There is an admirable couplet in POPE which QUIZ would do well to consult:

"Immodest words admit of no defence,
"For want decency, is want of sense."

PROJECTOR's scheme is not a bad one, but it will require more time than we can afford to devote, to render its execution perfect.*

A FRIEND is informed that we never heard of the paper he mentions, till the receipt of his letter, but he will perceive that we have answered the remark as fully as it is necessary.

NEDDY, FUN, A. B. C., DRAMATICUS, and CENSOR are all received.

THE AGE.

LONDON, JULY 17.

We have received a mass of important intelligence from Buenos Ayres. Besides the defeat of General OLANETA, in Upper Peru in the beginning of March, the Buenos Ayres Gazettes to the 5th of May, inform us that after the defeat by SUCRE, OLANETA endeavoured to escape with his shattered army, and was pursued by Colonel de MEDINA, who came up with the routed enemy near Tumusla, on the 1st of April. An engagement took place, in which the Spanish force, consisting of 700 men, was entirely defeated by that of the Patriots, consisting only of 300, and General OLANETA killed. Thus may the freedom of Peru be considered as accomplished, and the last hope of Spain for ever extinguished.

In addition to this news, the details of which will be found under the proper head, the Buenos Ayres Gazette contains accounts of various advantages gained over the Indians, who had invaded the territory of Buenos Ayres. We subjoin extracts from the Argos a Buenos Ayres paper, which details the above intelligence:—

BUENOS-AYRES, MAY 2.

BULLETIN (NO. 3) OF THE ARMY IN PERU.

"Salta, April 8, 1825.

"The following proclamation has just been issued:—

"Citizens!—The Government, desirous of communicating to you the joy which it feels, does not delay a moment to publish the interesting news contained in the despatch of the General-in-Chief, which it has just received.

"At four o'clock this morning I received a despatch, conceived in the following terms:—At this moment, being two in the morning, I received from General URDIMINEA the following despatch:—Marching towards Tumusla, to succour Colonel Don CARLOS MEDINA CELI, being now 12 at night, I received letters from him by his aide-de-camp, Don JOSE MARTINES, that at seven in the evening this day, 300 valiant Chickenos completely triumphed over 700 servile enemies at Tumusla. The number of killed and wounded is not yet known, except General OLANETA, who was the first that bit the dust. Above 200 prisoners were taken on the field of battle, including 20 officers. The firing began at three o'clock, and ended at the hour above-mentioned. All the military stores were taken, and a great quantity of baggage belonging to OLANETA. Please immediately to send this interesting and agreeable intelligence to the Government of Salta, till I can transmit the particulars of this brilliant action, which the victorious officer, DON CARLOS MEDINA CELI, has promised. "URDIMINEA."

Our attention has been directed by a correspondent to an obscure print, the name of which we never heard of before, in which "LORD ALVANLEY is exculpated from the attacks of the Age," by an assertion that "AT THE TIME alluded to, his lordship was in Spain." Though we disclaim having made any attack on this peppery lord, we have only to say, that in the joke we introduced, no TIME is mentioned, and moreover, that LORD ALVANLEY was never in Spain IN HIS LIFE!

We are apprehensive that our readers will find our paper of to day rather dull for us, but the degree of the thermometer (77 in the shade, and 110 in the sun) during the greater part of the last week, the extraordinary dearth of news, and general preparations for emptying the metropolis of all its fashionable votaries, must plead some excuse. Bare existence is as much as the human frame, in the present state of the weather, is at all capable of; or it may by possibility reach to such an exertion as the taking a little ice—lolling about in any umbragcous corner to be met with, yawning away a long day, and sleeping away a short night, but the idea of attaining any other point is quite out of sight or calculation, and as in the absence also, of important occurrences, insignificant ones become the subject of conversation and enquiry, our friends must put up with the common stupidity of the Times, and for once with the uncommon stupidity of the AGE, and be satisfied with what we give them. The prominent points which have constituted the topics of daily talk the last few days, consist of the marriage of ARTHUR ALGERNON CAPEL, Esq. to LADY CAROLINE BEAUCLERC, and which, in consequence of MRS. COUTTS's presence, and LORD BURFORD's giving away his sister, gave circulation all over town to a report of his lordship having legally prostituted himself by marrying the widow, more especially as the lady's carriage on the occasion to say nothing of herself, was in high favour—evidently with the hope of making the world believe it. Further news is, that SIR VINCENT COTTON has been completely ruined by CROCKFORD's gang—that LORD BINGHAM, like the renowned STURGEON, for "his marching and countermarching from Ealing to ACTON, and Acton to Ealing," has been made a Major,—and that ALVANLEY, being asked whether his appointment was obtained by love or glory, said "l' amour, l' amour, c'est tout l' amour—(quere, TU-LLAMORE?)—that BALL HUGHES has had four Patricians honouring his Plebeian table at Oatlands with their presence, during the poney and donkey racing there, which his advertizements in the Post have amply demonstrated, and, on the authority of that intelligent paper, "has become a decided favourite in that part of the country." If we were to follow the example of our cotemporaries, we could this week dole out to the town accounts of the most interesting murders! melancholy suicides!! dreadful accidents!!! calamitous fires!!!! and humane subscriptions!!!!! that have ever deluged the country, for certainly no week has ever been more prolific in that kind of attempts than the last. Such an awful gap in the fulfillment of editorial functions always occurs, on the breaking up of the Parliament, that a poor devil of a scribbler has no chance of cutting any figure, unless he collect together all the deaths and rapes that occurred while the session was sitting, and thus make a shew of the most appalling nature—and it is on this account that the reader has, for the last few days, been horrified by a recitation of the "cruel murder" of one person—of another taking in arsenic for physic, and being consequently taken off—of a third intimating his intention of cutting his throat, but thinking better of it,—a fourth blowing out his brains, or rather blowing off his head—of a man selling six pigs that had been bit by a mad dog, and the chief officer of UNION HALL expressing his determination, in consequence, not to eat pork for a month to come!—and of another receiving a verdict of *man*slaughter, for ill using his mother, (vide Post of Wednesday.) Now, without affecting any unnecessary squeamishness, we shall refrain from entailing on our readers accounts so completely out of season, for the greatest number of these are worn out stories, that now lose half their pith by being told at this particular crisis—for the account of a murder committed in February should be committed to paper also in February, as every one is aware that July is far too hot for any amusement of this description, and such things to be read with interest must be attended by the probability of temporary advantage and local circumstances. Although it is not our intention thus far to tread on the heels of rival journalists, it is nevertheless our determination to amuse the "gude folk" with the genius and talent of other people, when we have so little of our own this moment at command; and having paid every attention to the lucubratious of the daily press for the last few days, we cannot certainly do better than recapitulate some extraordinary instance of ability, information, and general truth which our principal papers have exhibited. By the display in the Times on Monday last, we began to suspect that something alarming was not very far off, as in fact turned out to be the case; for nothing short of a really critical juncture could have produced the following specimen of true wit:—

"AIR BALLOON AFRICAN PENETRATION COMPANY.

The interior of the immense continent of Africa has hitherto continued almost inaccessible to the mercantile and scientific world. Approach by water is precluded by the shallowness of the rivers; and access by land is liable to various uncertainties, which render it, at the best, precarious. The regularity of the trade winds ensures punctuality, safety, and despatch, by the only remaining mode of communication—namely, the air.

It is proposed to establish air-balloon offices at Sierra Leone and other convenient points for the conveyance of goods and passengers to and from the various districts of central Africa. The concurrence of the Dey of Algiers and the King of Congo has been already secured; that of the Emperor of Timbuctoo will, it is hoped, be speedily obtained.

A company has been formed with a capital of 500,000*l.*, in shares of 50*l.* each. All applications for shares must be made before twelve o'clock to-morrow, when the lists will be finally closed.

 Wanted a person well acquainted with the management of gas establishments to go out to Sierra Leone. Apply at the office of Messrs. Gammon, Humbug, and Gammon, solicitors, Air-street."

Now, lest it should have escaped the observation of the readers of this Cockney MILLER, we beg to apprize them that applications for any shares in this undertaking, are received, as is very common with advertizing papers, at the office of the Times, for the solicitors mentioned are the names of the very firm which conducts that paper. This was followed up on Wednesday by an increase in the size of their publication, in consequence of the repeal of a late Act of Parliament, which, by their own account, cramped their trade, and made every thing they wrote, "weary, flat, stale, and unprofitable," the three first of which every one knows to be true, and the last every one knows to be false. We are given to understand that "their fetters are now removed, and their paper has naturally expanded"—and as the expansion of their genius must as naturally follow that of their paper, God only knows what wonders the Cocknies will bring about.—The Morning Post has started off in great style, by favouring us with a dissertation on a Meeting of THE SOCIETY FOR THE SUPPRESSION OF VICE, held as late as the 30th of May—it further gives us a beautiful account of "the most popular Song of the present time," called the PROTESTANT'S SONG, the only beauty of which appears to us to lie in the embellishments by WHITING and BRANSTON, to which it alludes. We little thought, when buying this "most popular Soug of the present time" in the Strand, the other day, for ONE PENNY, that it would so soon make such a distinguished appearance in the shabby Post—it professes to be a musical attempt to driuk the DUKE OF YORK's health, for his manly opposition to the Catholic Bill, and each verse ends with this sublime couplet:—

"Your goblets fill with heart and glee—
"Let's toast brave York with three times three."

No man would go farther in commendation of this ILLUSTRIOUS PRINCE than ourselves, but the idea of "toasting brave YORK" in such weather as this, and not only toasting him, but toasting him with three times three, appears to us quite barbarous. There is a further account in the second verse of "brave York," standing in his breeches near the throne," which is rather a smart idea; and taken altogether, we have not been more amused for some time past. The account given in this sagacious Journal, of the "noble" company at Newmarket, is more than half-fudge, for we met the DUKE OF RICHMOND and others, in St. James's-street, the identical day it stated them to be there.—But the old Herald is as good fun as any; for it sets off with a blunder in enumerating the list of Magistrates who decided for MR. BAKER, on the late Pancras Election—and in a day or two afterwards, inserts a letter from MR. HANSON, purporting to put it to rights, which letter the following day's paper admits to be a hoax, but this old rogue is capital altogether; for in criticising the performances at the Argyle Room, for poor PLACCI's benefit, he speaks rather dispraisingly of MISS PATON's singing Di piacer, thinking she sang it more like a debutante, than one who had been so long accustomed to receive the public favour—now the fellow little imagined how near the truth he was, for he really believed it was the Syren of Covent Garden he was listening to, and not her youngest sister, who lately had a concert at these said rooms—funny blockhead!—It further said, on Thursday, that "MR. and MRS. Under Secretary DAWSON, had left town for Broadstairs"—now, although every one knows MR. DAWSON's official situation, we believe no one ever took the liberty of saying his wife had been "Under Secretary" before.

But there really is no end to the drolleries of these fellows, for almost every day furnishes us with some account on which there is no more dependance, than on the fluctuation of the wind, and, yet, so sure is it to be replete with genuine humour and pleasantry, that one is irresistibly drawn into a perusal of it—and really, taking into consideration the position on which we started—the extraordinary dearth of general information—what could be done, if the reading part of mankind had not some such sons of wit to look up to, as these LITERARY EVERGREENS!!

TOM RAIKES asked a friend the other day, if he could tell him how MR. CANNING's gout was—the reply was, "only so, so, I believe;" on which RAIKES observed, "I'm sorry to hear that, for I really entertained hopes he was well in to-to."

We have watched somewhat narrowly the proceedings of the Saints lately, in the expectation that some opportunity would present itself, which might enable us to offer a few comments on their general character, and particularly on the aim of all their actions, but really did not expect to meet with so fine a sample of their qualifications as an occurrence of this week offers to our view. In point of actual blasphemy, no circumstance within our recollection has equalled the Meeting of the GOSPEL TRACT SOCIETY held on Thursday week, at the London Tavern, and we cannot help thinking that the Legislature would be fully justified in interfering, for the purpose of preventing such assemblages; or, certainly, the circulation of their transactions, which under the specious appearance of inculcating the Doctrines of Divinity, are only invoking the awful blessings of Providence on a set of villainous jobbers, for the most part, carpenters, butchers, tinkers, or rather BRAZIERS, each with the assumed title of Reverend, trying who can pilfer the public pocket to the best advantage. The person by the name of PETO, who acted as Chairman on the occasion, is no other than the builder of the Custom House, the honesty of whose character has this year been the subject of Parliamentary discussion—and who, moreover, rebuilt the present Drury Lane Theatre, about three years ago,—yet, we will undertake to say that, if any one were to ask this hypocritical blockhead, glad as he was to work for the Playhouse, day and night to get it finished, he would not be seen in it, when done, and his work was PAID for, on any earthly consideration. But the principles of the Meeting, and of every Member who attended it, may be fairly estimated, by perusing the following speech :—

"The Reverend Mr. Francis said, the 'Whole Duty of Man' was lie from beginning to end. He once saw a book entitled 'Thirty-nine Criterions, whereby a Man may know whether or not he is in a State of Grace.' Now he (Mr. F.) would fling thirty-six of these reasons overboard. There was an old woman whom he knew—she had travelled from 'Dan to Beersheba,' by a short cut, after the Lord had delivered her!! (Laughter.) People might smile, but 'let them laugh as wins.' She found out her Sinnership and her Saviourship too!!! He recollected a text of Scripture, where it was said that Jehovah would 'break the neck of the ungodly;' and he supposed it meant putting an end to their jaw, as was the case with the impudent rascal who had interrupted them to night!!!"

Another of these Meetings was held on Friday evening at the Assembly Rooms, Hampstead; and neither in the pretensions of blasphemy, impudence, or ignorance, is it much inferior to the one before alluded to. St. BUXTON was in the Chair, backed by St. STEPHEN and other mongrels, and a Mr. THADDEUS CONNELLAN, was introduced, merely to give the concern that air of ridicule which the others had failed sufficiently to do, and in default of which, assemblages of this kind would pass off without exciting a moment's interest, or obtaining any pecuniary assistance. Our object in mentioning these two cases of absolute immorality and larceny, has been for the purpose of bringing forward another of a far more dangerous and disgusting description, which is the procession of a certain set of saintly mountebanks, on Wednesday last, to lay the foundation stone of a New Chapel for the display of MR. ALEXANDER FLETCHER'S clerical powers, who—to prevent the possibility of any mistake on the part of our readers, we beg to apprize them—is the man lately convicted in a court of law for A BREACH OF PROMISE OF MARRIAGE, and, who was in consequence expelled from Albion Chapel by the "Presbyterian Synod of Scotland." The account given by this FLETCHER of his expulsion, is equally irreligious and ridiculous, for he says "the Synod laid hold of his private concerns, with which they had nothing to do, and of which they could not make a handle! and they inveigled his flock to join with them!"—he then goes on to say "RIVERS of oil can never wash out their trangressions till," —— till what is the question, ——"till they make him a restitution!" he then begged them to sing another psalm, as he was so excessively hot—after which they should see the stone laid, and might put their offerings of —— gold and silver in it!" In the interregnum of FLETCHER'S oration, a man from Penzance, yclept the Reverend MR. SMITH, who, by his own account, was originally a common sailor, harangued the people, telling them of his affection for FLETCHER, owing to FLETCHER'S affection for sailors, and wound up by giving them a naval anecdote, illustrative of the designs of "his friend FLETCHER" on their exchequer:—he observes,

"I stood on the quarter deck of Lord Nelson's ship the oth[er] day, and read the inscription 'England expects every man to do his duty.' The flag lieutenant told me that when Lord Nelson was preparing to go into action, he first gave out the signal 'prepare to anchor!' My brother Fletcher has at last brought himself to an anchor, I see after all his storms—and now sends round the signal for you to 'do your duty,' though I'm not his flag lieutenant, but only an impressed seaman.—The gunner of the Victory told me that his wife had been of great use in the action of Trafalgar, by handing powder to the men. I saw the heroic damsel, and she confirmed the truth of the story. It reminded me of a young boy to whom the Captain said, 'You must go down to the cockpit; you are not strong enough to carry a cartridge.' 'No,' says the powder monkey, 'I'm not;' but then I can drag one after me.'—So, I say to the ladies here, they can hand round the cartridges, and can help my friend to load his guns against the enemy!!!"

and after this depredation was committed, and another touch given by FLETCHER, the stone was laid with this inscription:

"'This stone was laid on the 13th of July, 1825, by the REV. ALEXANDER FLETCHER, for the accommodation of his loving and steadfast Congregation,' who were deprived of Albion Chapel, Moorgate, by the Tyranny, Injustice, and Oppression of the Scottish Secession Synod. 'The LORD of Hosts is with us; the GOD of Jacob is our refuge.'" and the whole party immediately repaired—of course—to a substantial dinner!!

It is not necessary to enlarge on such a subject, for the reader will at once draw his own conclusion—here is a man committing a gross immorality in the eye of God, whose Minister he dares to stile himself—and a violent breach of the laws of man, convicted and condemned by those very laws, after having been openly and disgracefully expelled from the congregation over whom he was permitted to preside, has the audacity to beseech the blessings of that God whom he has offended in a double capacity, and to make a further inroad on the respect of society, which he has already so infamously outraged. The world must see these things in their true light—but whether or not, we shall renew our exertions on any fresh innovations of these "Scribes and Pharisees," to convince every sceptic that their ENTIRE AIM is self-interest and their WHOLE RELIGION—hypocrisy!

BALL HUGHES, who, since his marriage with the beautiful MERCANDOTTI, has become a capital French scholar, was enquiring the other day into the general character of that nation, when a gentleman observed that every other man, in his opinion, was a complete charlatan—"well then," said BALL, "I am glad we did not go to Rheims, as I have no desire to see a Charley ten crowned."

The reception MISS FOOTE has experienced in Dublin has occasioned as much sensation here, as any thing relative to that unfortunate lady now can excite, even among her warmest admirers, and the gallantry of the Irish has been very strongly called into question, in consequence. Our sentiments respecting this female are tolerably well known by this time, and without at all recurring to any former expression of them, we shall confine the few remarks we have to make, to the subject before us, and on a full consideration of the matter, cannot withhold the meed of approbation from our opposite neighbours, for the consistency, at least, they have manifested in the respective receptions of MR. KEAN and MISS FOOTE, so directly at variance with the conduct adopted by the London audience. In the eyes of all rational people, neither of these players ought to have been seen for a full twelvemonth after their disgraceful exposure, particularly the lady—because the indemnification the law awarded her would far more than compensate for any professional compromise she might make; whereas KEAN would have been a double sufferer—but in one of those unmeaning and beastly humours the liege subjects of Cockaigne are now and then afflicted with, they applauded the one "to the very echo," and overwhelmed the other with the most relentless persecution; while ST. PATRICK on the other hand views the conduct of both in the same light, and visits them both at first with the same marks of his displeasure. The appearance of MISS FOOTE has been, very enviously we beg to observe, contrasted with the late appearance of MADAME VESTRIS in the same theatre, and a surprise expressed at the very different reception experienced by the latter lady; than which nothing to us is clearer—for, whatever imputation the tongue of slander may cast on MADAME VESTRIS, it can only be looked upon as calumny—because no one, but an individual on whom that fascinating lady may have placed her affections, can truly impugn her reputation; and he, it is to be hoped, would not have the dishonor to do it—whereas the other female, in order to create a professional and personal interest, which her abilities could never command, has in the most public manner exposed the errors of her life in a court of justice: and out of those very errors, now, in an equally public manner, seeks the favor, and braves the opinion, of the people. It has appeared to us all along a most extraordinary and rather equivocal thing, that a lady in MISS FOOTE'S critical situation should select for her debut in every theatre, a character bearing the ominous title of Hardy, in a play with the equally ominous name of the BELLE'S Stratagem—but that is "Mademoiselle la fille's" own affair altogether, and we can do no other than shew, in the following extract from the Dublin Evening Star, how far the stratagem she has been hardy enough to try, in this instance, has succeeded:—

"The scene which occurred last night was a disgrace to the age in which we live and to humanity; and we sincerely hope, for the credit of the Irish nation, we shall not have to record its repetition. Long before the rising of the curtain, it was evident that a disposition existed in some portion of the audience, to oppose the fair debutante.—On a person, in the gallery, calling for "a clap for Miss FOOTE," hisses and groans were heard; they were instantly, however, overpowered by the general approbation, which that expression drew forth. The persons, who have thus disgraced themselves, and their country, were nevertheless, pertinacious in their opposition, and displayed it on every convenient opportunity throughout the evening. When Miss FOOTE first appeared upon the stage she was evidently labouring under great anxiety, and the strong disapprobation which instantly burst from her persecutors, completely overpowered her feelings. She was so far overcome, as to find it necessary to avail herself of the aid of a chair, which was most considerately placed for her by Mrs. VAUGHAN; when seated, her sobs were audible. She was not reassured by the indignation expressed by the sensible and humane part of the audience, and it became necessary for the manager to relieve her from her embarrassment, by conducting her from the stage. She was led off by Mr. ABBOT, who instantly returned, and, with great animation, addressed the house in the following terms:—

"LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—I confess I did not calculate that this appeal would be necessary.—(Cheers.)—Without reference to statements made elsewhere, whether true or false, I think I can make an appeal, no Irishman will withstand, when I make it to the feelings, or on behalf of an unprotected woman; that I am sure is one an Irishman cannot resist."

"The general enthusiasm with which this address was received appeared to guarantee the restoration of order. It was not however, so completely restored at any time as to relieve Miss FOOTE entirely from her embarrassment. Still the opposition was confined to a few individuals, and those not of the most respectable classes, as the hissing chiefly proceeded from the galleries. It would be impossible to form a just estimate of the abilities of this fascinating woman, for such she undoubtedly is, from the performance of last night. She was evidently deeply affected, and incapable of infusing into the character that sprightliness which she is no doubt competent to assume when not labouring under agitation. In the little song which she introduces, she was loudly encored, and in the masquerade scene the elegance of her person, and the gracefulness with which she swam through the mazy dance in a Pas de deux with Master ST. CLAIR, were the theme of universal admiration. The announcement of her appearance on to-morrow night, as Lady Teazle, was enthusiastically received, still interrupted, however, by the partial hisses of the individuals who absurdly imagine that the cause of morality is to be aided by an inhuman persecution of a defenceless woman.—The House was crowded to excess in every part."

In addition to this information, the Morning Post of Friday furnishes us with the following squib—

"Thursday night, during Miss FOOTE'S performance in Dublin, Peace Officer Galogly took into custody a young man of genteel appearance, named J. RUSSEL, living at Summer Hill, on a charge of using obscene language to Miss FOOTE. The prisoner entered into recognizances to abide his trial before the RECORDER."

But whether this is another specimen of this droll paper's information, or a puff of NINNY'S, to blind the real state of things, we do not pretend to determine—and as such, we leave the whole of this important affair to the more wise decision of our readers.

THEATRE.

Mr. PLANCHE'S "devil to do," in the shape of the French Coronation, has been produced at Covent Garden Theatre, and has answered our expectations just about as much as we anticipated, fulfilling to the very letter the old joke of "great cry and little wool." In every instance wherein the genius of its artists, or the industry and ability of its managers are called into question, this Theatre has always maintained a proud superiority over its rival, and certainly in this exhibition has lost little of its character on that score, but the error has been in deputing a little Cockney to go abroad, for the first time probably in his life, to collect information on a subject of which he must be decidedly ignorant and not at all competent to judge. It has amused us vastly to see the struggles of the two Theatres "Gog and Magog," to convince the people that each was right. Covent Garden starts off by saying, it possesses "facilities which could be obtained from no other source." Drury Lane says, "no facilities were found necessary for the able draughtsmen they employed," and that their neighbour does not spell MONSIEUR HITTORF'S name right—and further publishes the account of the "real Simon" as given in the Etoile, by the side of their own account, to set the matter quite to rights. But the people, however, in spite of all these violent contentions for propriety, have treated the thing by far too lightly, and exhibited a most thorough contempt for the whole affair, by staying away altogether. But to Covent-Garden: we think their procession by no means so imposing as the one in Russell-street, and their scenery far inferior—but their dresses are more gorgeous, though not one iota more correct, and their introductory piece (although its clever author may pique himself on having done better things) much smarter. This is about a fair estimate of the respective merits of both, but with reference to the latter, we cannot abstain from noticing a most consummate piece of quackery, below the dignity of such a Theatre, in asserting that "the whole of the company, without a single exception" passed in the procession," when we will SWEAR that on the nights we saw it, neither MR. YOUNG, MR. SINCLAIR, MR. PEARMAN, MISS CHESTER, nor MISS PATON made their appearance. We would not be thought to countenance for one instant, the principle of degrading people of such talent by putting them in the light of mere supernumeraries, because we think MR. KEMBLE has set an example, derogatory to his name, his abilities, and the rank his family maintained in their profession, by crossing the stage as an actual puppet. But really within these few weeks the course of things at this Theatre has altogether changed, for the exhibition of the Mountaineers on Tuesday (barring C. KEMBLE'S admirable delineation of Octavian) was literally disgraceful—Virolet, MR. MASON; Sadi, MR. DURUSET; Floranthe, MISS KELLY; Agnes, MISS HENRY; after what we have seen on those identical boards—the principal performers are now degraded into mere showmen, walking in processions on platforms, and the principal characters entrusted to persons fit for nothing but processions. This is merely a specimen of that disgusting meanness which has crept into the counsels of this Theatre, since that Scotch Captain has had any controul over it, and which must prove fatal to all MR. KEMBLE'S intellectual arrangements—the success a Theatre has received, owing to the moral derilection of one of its members, is no criterion of its managerial tact—to permanently succeed, it must support the general character of its company—not lose a leading performer for a trifling excess of income, and, above all, not try to gull the town with processions and tinsel, and with a company, saving a few exceptions, "not a jot" better than GYNGELL'S Bartholomew Fair one.

The principal gratification, on the whole, that we have derived from the production of the French Coronation at Covent Garden Theatre, has been the witnessing CHARLES KEMBLE in some of his leading characters—for to enjoy so much real pleasure as his Orestes, Young Mirabel, Octavian, and Charles Surface have afforded us, we would be doomed to set out things a thousand times worse than this continental importation.

The English Opera House is enjoying the advantages of judicious management, by the continued success of Broken Promises—for, indeed, without flattery this is the best conducted theatre we have—ARNOLD is a very able director, has an admirable company, a judicious stage manager, clever authors, and a treasurer, worth all the money he has to count. We regret that we cannot say as much for the Haymarket, for the foolerics going on there are becoming really serious, and to add to all the other sins of the season, a farce entitled the Rival Valets has appeared within these few days, which, but for the admirable acting of LISTON, WILKINSON, MRS. WAYLETT, and MRS. JONES, must have been consigned at once to "the tomb of all the Capulets." The most charitable thing to say of MASTER DAVID DAW, is—that he is mad—for no one in his senses would assign the part of Nell to MADAME VESTRIS, charming as she is, when his theatre possessed such a resplendent genius as MRS. DAVISON—if DAW hath what one SHAKSPEARE calls "an itching palm," DAW should exhibit it outside the walls of the Haymarket. We shall devote a few lines to the praise of the undefinable and incomparable LISTON, when it pleaseth KING DAVID to bring his talents forward in something more worthy of them, than the Rival Valets.

FASHIONABLE MISCELLANY.

The KING arrived at the Royal Lodge on Thursday evening at half after ten o'clock, accompanied by the Marquis CONYNGHAM, in his travelling carriage and four with outriders and an escort of the 1st regiment of Life Guards. His Majesty is expected to make a considerable stay at the royal lodge.

Thursday, at eleven o'clock, was married in St. James's Church, Arthur Algernon Capel, Esq., to the Lady Caroline Janetta Beauclerc, third daughter of his Grace the Duke of St. Albans.—The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Lord Frederic Beauclerc, brother to his Grace.—The bride was given away by her brother the Earl of Burford.—There were present at the ceremony:—

The whole of his Grace's lovely family, the Countess of Essex, Admiral and Mrs. Bladon Capel, General Capel, Lady Frederick Beauclerk and family, Mrs. Cuthbert, Mrs. Coutts, Miss Twisleton, Miss Cuthbert, and Count Gersdorff.

The bride and bridegroom left town in their travelling carriage, and the rest of the party partook of a sumptuous breakfast given by the Dowager Countess of Cork, at her house in Old Burlington-street.

THE ARMY.

The 3d Regiment of Dragoon Guards have marched from Cahir to Dublin.—The remainder of the 6th Dragoons has received orders, on being replaced at York by the 7th Regiment of Light Dragoons on the 19th, to march to Manchester.—The 14th Regiment of Light Dragoons has marched from Cork to Dundalk.—The 2d Battalion of the 60th has moved from Barbadoes to Berbice; the 65th Regiment of Foot from Athlone to Mullingar; the head-quarters Division of the 84th Regiment of Infantry from Clonmel to Mullingar.

NEW COMBINATION LAWS.

We really congratulate the manufacturers on the very salutary effects already brought about by the late revision of the COMBINATION LAWS, and with an equal view to the guidance and satisfaction of masters, and to the conduct of servants, we think it highly essential to lay before the public the following opinion and prompt decision of the magistracy of Bow-street:—

Nearly every day this week the magistrates here have had a good portion of their time occupied in hearing complaints of master manufacturers and tradesmen against refractory workmen. Mr. Canning, a coach-harness maker, in Cross-lane, brought up six of his men for leaving their work on Tuesday, and on Thursday Mr. Bushnell, the coachmaker, in Oxford-street, brought seven or eight of his journeymen to answer for similar misconduct. These last had gone away suddenly, and left a carriage belonging to Lord Mountcharles unfinished, and another belonging to Sir D. Baird, finished, but in so bad a manner, that Mr. Bushnell was obliged to send it to another house to be retouched. In these and other cases the men, when the law was explained to them, and they were threatened with the tread-mill, consented to apologize to their masters, and return to their work, and the magistrates being, as they said, always reluctant to disgrace a hardworking, and perhaps ingenious mechanic, by sending him to a prison, to herd with felons and the worst of characters of all sorts, discharged them. In the case of Mr. Bushnell's men, however, which was heard on Thursday evening, the magistrates took occasion to observe, that the spirit of insubordination appeared to be spreading to such an extent, that in all future charges of this kind, the act would be enforced.

Friday, a young man, named Robert Ford, a journeyman shoemaker, was brought up on a warrant charged, under the New Act, with endeavouring by threats and intimidation, to prevent one George Turner, from returning to his work.

It appeared that all the men in the employment of Mr. Ashenden, a boot and shoe-maker, at Hampstead, struck for wages about a fortnight ago. Among the rest were the above-named Ford and Turner. The latter, however, was compelled by the rest to strike against his will; and when the whole party were assembled at a public-house debating the matter, he said he was sorry he had left his work, and would return to it; upon which Ford, who was one of the most active promoters of the "strike," swore, that if he did he would drag him through a pond. This was the "threat and intimidation" complained of.

Ford, in defence, said he made use of no threat. The words he made use of were these:—"If you return to your work, you ought to be dragged through a pond."

Mr. HALLS said, Turner had sworn otherwise.

Mr. Ashenden said, he should not have brought the prisoner here, but this was not a solitary instance of his having used threats to other men.

Mr. HALLS said, he certainly should put the act in force against the prisoner. Even now he did it with reluctance, but some check must be put upon the dangerous spirit which seemed to prevail. For the instruction of those whom he saw within hearing he would read that part of one clause of the recent act, which applied to the present case. It stated, "that if any person shall by violence to the person or property, or by threats or intimidation, or by molesting or in any way obstructing another, force or endeavour to force, any journeyman, manufacturer, &c. to depart from his business, or return his work before it is finished, or preventing any person from returning to his work, &c. every person so offending, or aiding, or assisting therein, shall be imprisoned for any period not exceeding three months." The act left it in the discretion of the Magistrates whether the hard labour should be added to the imprisonment. The prisoner was sentenced to one months' imprisonment, but not to hard labour.

Two elderly men of the craft called out that they wished to appeal to the Sessions against the decision; but the defendant being advised by his friends, said he had no such wish. Mr. HALLS told the two men that they were mischievous fellows, and desired them to walk out of the office.

After the prisoner was locked up, a respectable man who knew him said he was a raw lad lately come from the country, and bore generally a very good character. Upon this representation, Mr. Halls reduced the period of imprisonment to 14 days.

SHERIFF'S COURT, JULY 9.

A commission having been issued, directing certain commissioners to ascertain whether Antonio Pontoni Romano, formerly of Mount-street, Grosvenor-square, wax-chandler, was an alien, a jury was summoned to ascertain that fact; and also whether, at his death, he was not possessed of certain freehold, leasehold, and copyhold property, which had become forfeited to the King.—The Chief Commissioner observed, that if an alien became possessed of such property, it devolved to the Crown, as he could not legally hold it in this country. If he were a legal tenant, it devolved to the Crown; but if he held it in trust, it required some legal proceedings before the Crown could take possession of it.—Mary Ann Colesley, who lived in Mr. Romano's family many years, said she heard Mr. Romano say that he was a native of Spoleto, in Italy, and that his father was an Italian. Several persons who were attesting witnesses to certain deeds of conveyance, were called to prove the signature of the grantor and who had conveyed certain property to Mr. Romano. The result was, that such property was declared to have been vested in Mr. Romano, and it was therefore forfeited to the crown.

The next case which was brought before the jury was respecting the property of a young man named George William Hipkins, who was convicted at the Old Bailey Sessions in April, 1825. It appears that Hipkins and another youth having received information that a gentleman and his son, possessed of considerable property, had engaged apartments at the Dundee Arms, Wapping, previous to their departure from London, Hipkins and his companion also engaged lodgings in the same house, and in the middle of the night they entered the gentleman's room and robbed his pockets of 227*l*. The young men were tried for the offence and transported for seven years. It further appeared that Hipkins's father, by his will, left him 500*l*. and, provided the death of a natural child took place, he was to receive 500*l*. more. The child died when six months old, and thus this property, which the Crown now claimed, became vested in the convict, and by the verdict of the jury it was awarded to his Majesty.

An inquest was held on Saturday week at the Cobham Arms Tavern, Clerkenwell, on the body of Godfrey, the police-officer, the circumstances of whose death has been already related. The verdict of the jury was, that the deceased destroyed himself under the influence of "Temporary derangement, arising from dejection of mind, produced by being discharged from his situation."

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

LEEDS.—On Thursday evening a gentleman arrived at the hotel in this town by the Newcastle coach, and asked for a bed-room; on being informed that all the sleeping apartments were engaged, except a double bedded room, he seemed somewhat disappointed, but, after a moment's pause, said, "Well, it will do for one night," and he desired to see it: the chambermaid showed him the room, and nothing further was heard of him till a quarter past 11 o'clock, when the chambermaid, entering the room to light a person who was to occupy the other bed, found him lying upon the bed with his throat dreadfully cut, and in a dying state. Mr. Chorley, surgeon, was sent for; he found the unhappy gentleman alive, but in the agonies of death, and perfectly insensible. Upon examining the wound, he found that the wind-pipe, and the carotid artery, on the left side of the neck, were divided. Mr. C. tied up the artery, and stopped the further bleeding. The previous effusion of blood had been extremely great: the person of the deceased, the bed, and floor, were nearly covered with it. He expired in about a quarter of an hour after the arrival of Mr. C. The dreadful act had been committed with his own razor, which was lying open, covered with blood, upon the dressing table: he had taken off his coat and hat, which were laid upon the other bed, and his neck-handkerchief, which was upon the table near the razor. An inquest was held upon the body on the following day, when it appeared that the deceased had left Newcastle on Thursday morning, but that he was entered in the way-bill of Tuesday, as having paid his fare to London; and he accounted to the guard for not having come on that day by stating that he had been taken ill. On his arrival at Leeds, he made no inquiries, nor gave any directions about his luggage, but retired to his bed room. In his waistcoat pocket were found two sovereigns, and in his pocket-book two £1. provincial notes; he had also a silver watch, made at Newcastle. It seemed, from some letters and other papers that were found in his pocket-book, that he had been employed as a teacher of the Italian language, and that he had resided sixteen weeks in the present year at Newcastle. He had a leathern portmanteau, filled with wearing apparel, and his dress was that of a person who had seen better days. In his pocket-book was found a certificate of arrival from the Alien Office, in which his name is given as Jacqs. A. Bertolino. His own signature is Giacomo Alessio Bertolino; and he is described as being of the age of 32 years, 5 feet 7 inches in is described as being of the age of 32 years, 5 feet 7 inches, dark hair, eyes, and complexion, a native of Italy, known height, to no one in this country, an attorney at law, and as having arrived in London from Ostend on the 26th of May, 1823. The jury found a verdict of "Lunacy."—Leeds Mercury, July 9.

MANCHESTER.—Accidents by Machinery.—A young man in the employ of Mr. J. Walker, of Lee-street, Bank-top, got entangled in the machinery on Saturday, and was instantly crushed to atoms.—On Thursday at noon, a man employed in whitewashing about the machinery at Smith's factory, in Butler-street, got the sleeve of his jacket entangled in the cogs of a wheel. His arm was instantly drawn into the machinery, and dreadfully lacerated, more particularly above the arm-pit, which was so torn as completely to expose the important organs in that part.—At Liverpool, on Tuesday, a man, who, it was supposed, was examining the paddle-wheel of the steam packet Hibernia, which was in motion, fell into the wheel-box, which he had opened and was killed.

PAISLEY.—About 17 years ago, Mr. John Cullen, manufacturer, Glasgow, became unfortunate in business, in consequence of being deeply involved with a London house. He then paid a dividend of 5s. per pound, for which he received a discharge in full from all his creditors. On Saturday morning a house in Paisley received from Mr. Cullen a letter enclosing a bank bill to the amount of upwards of £600, being the full amount of their debts, principal and interest.

RIOTS.—Several disgraceful acts of popular outrage have been perpetrated in Bristol and its neighbourhood during the past week. A number of Irish labourers have been working, it is said, in the Bedminster tan-yards, at prices less than customary given for such labour; this excited the animosity of those usually employed in these yards; and the popular ill-will was further increased by a pitched battle on Pie-hill, on Monday evening, between an English lad and a young Irishman, during which it is said the countrymen of the latter interfered improperly. A general battle between the Englishmen and the Irishmen was the consequence, which ended in the retreat of the latter, who took refuge in a row of houses in Brown-street, Bedminster, the windows of which were demolished by the Englishmen. On Tuesday evening, a numerous body of the latter marched into Bristol from Bedminster, and attacked the dwellings of the poor Irish in Marsh-street. Here, not contented with breaking the windows and endangering the lives of the inhabitants, they plundered two shops of their contents. The greatest alarm prevailed in the neighbourhood until the arrival of the police, headed by the Mayor, when order was restored and the mob gradually dispersed, vowing vengeance against the Irish. On the following evening (Wednesday) more than 3,000 people were congregated in Corn-street, Clare-street, and Marsh-street; but the presence of the city constables, and the knowledge that a squadron of the 10th hussars were in readiness at the guard-house to act at a moment's notice, kept the populace in awe, and prevented farther mischief. In the affray on Tuesday night, seven Englishmen and two Irishmen were badly wounded, and conveyed to the infirmary.—Bath Journal.

SINGULAR COINCIDENCE.—On Wednesday evening, about half-past six, one of the coaches which pass between this town and Beverley stopped at Brook-street-end, on its return from the latter place, when a woman, residing in North-street, in her hurry to dismount, fell from the roof, and was severely hurt. About half-past nine, another coach, also returning from Beverley, stopped at the same place, and, from the same cause, a woman residing at the Pottery, met with a similar accident. Both the females fainted, and both were taken into the neighbouring shop of Mr. Munn, grocer.—Hull Advertiser.

A most diabolical murder was committed at Nottingham, on Saturday se'nnight, about 11 o'clock. A female of the name of Mary Austin, a married woman, and who had resided at Leicester with her husband, by whom she had two children, in consequence of some disagreement, left him some time ago, and went to Nottingham, where she took lodgings on the river Beck side, opposite Snow-hill. In an adjoining apartment lived one Thomas Dewey, a framework-knitter, together with his wife. It seems that a criminal connexion took place between Dewey and Mary Austin; she had one child by him, and was pregnant of another. One of her sons, by her husband, was apprenticed at Nottingham; but absconding from his master, he was taken and lodged in the House Correction. This induced Mary Austin to go to Leicester, in order to prevail with her husband to return to Nottingham to effect the lad's liberation, which he did, and they both travelled by the Leicester coach, on Saturday evening. The unfortunate woman went shortly after to her lodgings, where she was met by Dewey, who shook her by the hand, and gave her a kiss, and retired into his own apartment, where his wife was at the time: shortly after he took a knife, such as butchers usually kill pigs with, and returning into Austin's room, plunged the weapon into the poor creature's side, so as to reach her heart; she gave a loud scream, which brought in Dewey's wife, who found the poor woman on the floor, bleeding profusely, and expiring, with the knife striking in her side. The murderer then kissed the deceased, went to his wife's father and mother, and told them what he had done; he was soon after taken into custody, and on Saturday an inquest was held at the Neptune Tavern, and a verdict of "Wilful Murder" returned against him. At 6 o'clock on Monday morning, he was taken on the Coroner's warrant, to the town goal, preparatory to undergoing his trial at the Assizes.—Lincoln Mercury.

ISLE OF WIGHT.—On Thursday se'nnight in the evening, at Cliffe-house Academy, St. Margaret's, the pupils being nearly all gone home, and the house being infested with rats, with a view to destroy them, some bread and butter was steeped in arsenic by Mrs. Temple, who, unfortunately, only put it out of her hands for a few seconds, preparatory to placing it in the rat-holes, when three or four of the lads, who were waiting for their friends to fetch them, accidentally going into the room, conceiving the bread and butter was left there for their supper, partook of it, and were taken ill; on the discovery of what had happened, every remedy which medical advice and assistance could suggest, were had recourse to; but, we regret to add, that one fine little boy, named Fuller, of London, fell a victim, and to add to the distressing scene, his father arrived to take him home, in about an hour after the unfortunate event had taken place. The other boys who partook of the bread and butter are likely to recover.

A commercial gentleman, travelling for a spirit and vinegar firm in London, yesterday morning, whilst bathing in a hot bath, at Mr. Maypee's, at Exmouth, suddenly expired;—he had requested the attendant, at the expiration of a quarter of an hour, to call him, on doing which he was found a corpse. The unfortunate gentleman had arrived from London only on the preceding evening.—Exeter Paper.

On Sunday evening last, as two of the men in the Preventive Service were on the look-out for smugglers, near Lulworth, they were surprised by a party of men, between 60 and 70, who immediately deprived them of their swords and pistols, and carried them to the edge of the cliff, where they were placed with their heads hanging over the precipice, with the comfortable assurance that if they made the least noise, or gave alarm, they should immediately be thrown over. During this time, a smuggling vessel landed her crop (100 casks) which the shore gang placed on their horses, and carried off in triumph. After the crop had been fairly disposed of, the preventive men were removed from their perilous situation, and taken by the smugglers (who stood guard over them) into an adjoining field, where they bound them hand and foot, in order to prevent them from giving alarm to their brother officers, and in this state they were found the following morning.—Dorset County Chronicle.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE AT EAST ACTON.—Thursday afternoon, about half-past one o'clock, a destructive fire broke out on the estate of S. Marriott, Esq. M. P. at East Acton, Middlesex, owing to a very large hay rick igniting, in consequence of its being overheated. Messengers were instantly sent to town for the different fire engines, but, before their assistance could be procured, nine other ricks, of equally large dimensions, were included in the devastation, and burnt with unprecedented fury, till the whole of the valuable property was reduced to the earth. Each of the ricks that have been consumed contained forty loads, and the loss is estimated at £1,500 and upwards. Notwithstanding the villagers rendered every assistance in their power, they could not rescue one of the ricks from the devouring element.

Monday, a battle, for one guinea aside, was fought at Westerleigh, in Gloucestershire, by two labourers, named Lawrence and Tyley, to decide a quarrel. In the fifth round Lawrence received a blow in the stomach, which proved instantaneously fatal.

MISPLACED CONFIDENCE IN A BOUGHT WIFE.—Bugg and Constable, two men residing at West Berghot, were on the 4th instant apprehended and committed to Chichester Castle, upon suspicion of having stolen, from the vicinity of that town, some of the pigs and sheep of which so many have of late been missing. Bugg, it appears, was lately a party to one of those disgraceful scenes, which, from the improved state of the morals of the people, we are happy to say is now rarely exhibited. This man purchased the wife of an equally, it may fairly be presumed, indifferent character, and received her with all the graceful forms of the contract—at the end of a halter. In a woman, who thus breaks through a marriage vow, and deserts her husband, confidence will, as in this case, be found to be misplaced; the halter must be strong indeed that binds such a wife, and the sequel of this union may serve as an example, of what may be expected from so immoral and criminal a connection. Harmony was but of short duration; of affection there was none. Disputes produced hostility, and hostility perfidy. On Sunday last this faithless woman, deserted her new partner, strongly protesting that she would hang him, as she was in the secret respecting the sheep he had stolen—no doubt but poor Bugg at these words recollected the halter. The woman instantly paved the culprit's way to the gallows by causing information to be given to Mr. Partridge, of Breewood Hall, in Horkesley, who had lost five sheep in as many weeks. The prisoners reside near to each other; in their yards five skins were found buried: to some of them Mr. Partridge has sworn, and likewise to one out of two pigs which the prisoners had in their sties. It appears that the sheep were taken about two miles from the prisoners' cottages, and that they have butchered one a week for some time past.

ACCIDENTS, OFFENCES, &c.

FATAL BOXING MATCH.—On Saturday last, two men, of the names of Platt and Leonard, were sitting in the Red Lion public-house, Finchley, and some words arose about the prowess of each, when Platt sneeringly observed upon Leonard, and who retorting, the violent language increased, and was eventually heightened by some observations upon a female of Leonard's acquaintance. At length they agreed to fight for a purse, and on Monday morning met by appointment in a field near Finchley, attended by seconds and bottle-holders, and all the usual ceremony of the prize-ring. They commenced fighting, and continued for nearly an hour with mutual advantage, until both were bruised in a desperate manner. At last Platt received a tremendous blow, and sunk to the ground. On being lifted up he was insensible, and the other, amidst the usual yelling, was declared the victor, and was taken off the ground in triumph. But not so with John Platt. Every effort was made to restore sensibility, and a medical man rendered prompt assistance, which was of no avail. The unfortunate man breathed his last in a few minutes. He never spoke or moved after receiving the blow which had killed him. On the business being made known to the parish-officers, Leonard was taken into custody, and underwent an examination before the magistrate, but was remanded to the watch-house, to abide the result of the coroner's inquest, which sat yesterday. The jury returned a verdict—"That the deceased died of inflammation of the bowels caused by the blows received in a fight from Thos. Leonard Jordan, while standing in his own defence."

Wednesday evening a fine boy, of the age of 18 months, the son of Charles Taylor Watson, Esq. of Berners-street, was left alone in the nursery by the servants, got playing with the fire, and, by means of a small broom, which he succeeded in lighting, his dress took fire, and in an instant the poor infant was enveloped in flames. His cries brought the domestics to the room, and the flames were quickly extinguished, but not before his hands, arms, and legs, were burnt and scorched in a distressing manner. Every medical aid was procured, and the usual remedies were applied, but of no avail whatever. He endured the most dreadful turture for nearly two hours, when death put an end to his misery.

BRUTAL ASSAULT ON A LADY.—Tuesday night, about twelve o'clock, as Mrs. Lucy Ryals, wife of Mr. Jos. Ryals, one of the corps dramatique of Covent Garden Theatre, was proceeding through St. John's-square, Clerkenwell, to her residence in St. John's-street, she was seized by a ruffian in the shape of a human being, and most cruelly and indecently used, which caused her to fall into hysterics. The fellow actually tore the sleeves from her pelisse, and injured her apparel in many places. Fortunately two gentlemen, neighbours, came up and rescued Mrs. Ryals from further violence, and gave the fellow into custody.

Wednesday morning about four o'clock, a young lady, not more than 20 years of age, attired in white, with a crimson silk pelisse, Leghorn bonnet, white silk stockings, and white kid shoes, proceeded down the stairs of Waterloo Bridge, on the Strand side, and threw herself into the river, but it being low water, she stuck in the mud, from which situation she was rescued by a waterman named Kemp, who happened to be cleaning his boat at the time; but no sooner had she been taken out, then she made an attempt to mount the ballustrades of the bridge, in which she was also foiled by the interference of Kemp, and she was at length given to the watchman, who carried her to the watch-house, where, in about an hour after, she was claimed by her friends, who live in the neighbourhood.

On Friday an inquest was held at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, before Thomas Shelton, Esq. on the body of Thomas Rose, a merchant's ticket porter. By the evidence of William Cartwright, a man in the same employment, the deceased, who was 65 years of age, was discoursing with his companions at the door of the Brown Bear public-house, Eldon-street, Moorfields, on Tuesday fortnight, on the strength evinced by a man whom the deceased had just witnessed unloading some sacks of flour, which being disbelieved by one of them, the deceased attempted to shew him the means the man had used, by taking him round the waist and endeavouring to lift him from the ground, but in so doing overbalanced himself and fell backwards, drawing the other upon him, and received an internal injury, that rendered it necessary he should be taken to the Hospital, whither he was conveyed in the greatest agony. Mr. William Birch, house-surgeon of St. Bartholomew's, saw the deceased when brought to the hospital; he was then labouring under symptoms of injury to some internal organ. Every attention was paid to his case, but he, notwithstanding, became worse, and expired; Thursday, on opening the body, the bladder was found to have been ruptured, which was the cause of the deceased's death—Verdict—"Accidental Death."

POLICE.

MANSION-HOUSE.—Row at the London Tavern.—Saturday, Mr Eades, of Coleman-street, one of the Gospel Tract Society, appeared before Alderman Thorp, who sat for the Lord Mayor, charged by Mr. Rolph, of Crutched Friars, under the following circumstances:—He had on Thursday evening attended a meeting at the Gospel Tract Society, at the Old London Tavern, and had not sat long, when a gentleman who was next to him rose to speak, but was objected to by some of the meeting, while others expressed a wish to hear him. Witness said, "Hear, hear!" and an uproar arose, which lasted a considerable time. At length a party of the Gospel Tract Society bore down upon the gentleman and the witness, and forcibly turned them out of the room. The defendant was amongst the breakers of the peace, and used as much violence as he was capable of using on the occasion, in assaulting not only the gentleman who wished to speak, but the witness who wished to hear him. Had not the owner of the tavern interfered, the witness would, he believed, have certainly lost his life, as he must have tumbled from the top to the bottom of the stairs.—Mr. Tyrrell, a Roman catholic clergyman, stated, that in consequence of having seen an advertisement in the newspapers, inviting all persons to attend at the Old London Tavern, and having read, only a few days before, that Mr. Butterworth asked, in a meeting, why there were not any popish priests to answer him, he thought fit to attend this meeting, in order to auswer any charge that might be made against the clergy of the Roman catholic church. Several assertions were made, one of which, he believed by a Mr. Hope, was, that the Pope was a man of sin. He (witness) stood up, in order to make a few observations, as he thought he had a right, in a public meeting to reply to a public accusation, more particularly as an impression might go abroad, that if charges of that kind remained unanswered, it might be supposed they were incapable of being answered. He had, at the same time, no idea of saying a word in opposition to the Gospel Tract Society, to which he had no objection to make. He had, however, scarcely got up when a number of persons bore down upon him, and endeavoured to prevail upon the officers of the police to take him in charge. The officers, however, refused, and in a very gentlemanlike manner endeavoured to protect him. At length the party used violence. He received several blows, but he could not see from whom, and was finally shoved out of the room. The landlord of the tavern witnessed a great part of the transaction, but he was unwilling to call that gentleman, as his situation was rather delicate. —The defendant solemnly denied that he was at all engaged in the row. He was one of the committee, and had taken his seat on the hustings, where he remained till all was over. He never moved—he never stirred.—Thomas Russell, of No. 31, Little Britain, stated that he sat on the hustings near the defendant, and was convinced that the gentleman never left his place till all the confusion subsided.—A police officer said, he had been called to take Mr. Tyrrell into custody; but, as he did not see the peace broken, he refused to interfere.—Mr. Rolph declared most positively again, that Mr. Eades was his and Mr. Tyrrell's assailant. He had reason to recollect him, for he was quite ill after such violent treatment. He would swear that Mr. Eades struck both, and was in the midst of the party that expelled them.—Alderman Thorp asked how long this extraordinary row lasted?—Mr. Rolph said, it continued for twenty minutes.—Several of the Gospel Tract Society expressed their readiness to come forward and swear that the whole was a mistake, as Mr. Eades was sitting quite quiet when the disturbance took place.—Mr. Rolph said, he had no vindictive motives for complaining. He merely wished to aseertain whether, at a religious meeting of this nature, a man might not speak without being subject to violence and insult.—Alderman Thorp said, the evidence of one party was so directly opposed to that of the other, that he could not take upon himself to decide upon the merits of the case, and would leave it to the decision of a jury, if the complainants should think proper to prefer an indictment.

GUILDHALL.—On Wednesday, a carter in the employ of Mr. Randal, coal-merchant of Queenhithe, was brought before Sir C. FLOWER, the sitting Alderman, at the instance of R. Martin, Esq. M.P., on a charge of brutality to one of his horses.—Mr. Martin, in making his complaint, said, "now, Sir Charles, I was coming alonga street, close by this place, when I saw this fellow (pointing to the defendant) beating and slashing one of the fore horses in his team worse than ever I saw a horse beaten in all my life, nor could I ever have thought a human being could have behaved with such severity to a poor creature, who really appeared to be one of the most tractable animals I ever saw. Sir, the horse was so fine a creature that he could do any thing but speak, and was going on in a steady straight forward manner, as you know a horse should do, when this wretch, who was a long way behind, because the fine creature did not by insinct, and as if by inspiration, turn the way this man wanted to go, he began laying on the whip with a ferocious dexterity that made one shudder to see; and the thong of a whip in such a fellow's hand as this, for he knew how to apply it well, may be used with more violence than a bludgeon would in another man's hands. Upon my honour, I thought the man's ill-usage to the poor creature was so cruel and shameful, that I determined to punish the rascal; and that I might be certain that it was not the horse's fault, I made it my business to see the owner of it, and he told me that there was not a finer or a better tempered horse in London than it was, which made me resolve to punish the fellow for using such unnecessary brutality.—The defendant said that the horse was not tractable, and that he was compelled to be severe with him, to keep him in order.—Mr. Martin—Sir, the horse is a fine tempered creature; and it is only your brutal disposition that is to be blamed.—An altercation then took place between the carter, the carter's friends, and Mr. Martin, which was stopped by the Alderman's interfering, and imposing the mitigated penalty of ten shillings on the defendant, and also the costs.

BOW-STREET.—On Tuesday John Dodd, the man who charged Sir Richard Birnie, with assaulting him in Pall-mall, came to the office, and having stated that he had ascertained beyond doubt that it was Mr. Lee, the High Constable of Westminster who had struck him, requested to have a warrant.—Mr. HALLS said, he thought it would be unnecessary to send a warrant against a man so well known as Mr. Lee. He would send an officer to require his attendance, and if the message was not obeyed, he should of course grant a warrant. The officer who was sent to Mr. Lee's house, stated on his return, that the latter was out of town, but would receive and of course obey the order of the Magistrate as soon as he returned.—On Wednesday morning, Mr. Lee made his appearance, and John Dodd being sworn, stated that he was the man who had assaulted him.—Mr. MINSHULL—Are you quite sure: because you know you said the other day it was the Chief Magistrate of this office?—Dodd—O yes, Sir, this is the gentleman, and no one else. The complainant then stated the manner in which the assault took place nearly in the same words as he had before described to the Magistrates, and again repeated that Mr. Lee was the assailant.—Mr. Lee questioned Dodd as to the precise time and place at which he was assaulted, and the latter said it was a little before two, he believed—at all events, it was between one and two in the morning, and the place was within about twenty yards of the Palace.—Mr. Lee was asked what answer he had to make to the charge, and said that he never saw the complainant before; and that he never in the whole course of his life struck a man with his staff but once, and that was a notorious thief whom he saw in the very act of taking a gentleman's watch from his pocket, "and on that occasion (said Mr. Lee) I certainly could not resist the temptation which I felt to knock him on the head."—Mr. MINSHULL asked Dodd if he had any witnesses? and he said he had his wife and niece with him at the time, but they were not now present, his wife being ill, and his niece engaged in attending upon her. He, however, would take a coach and fetch them at all hazards.—Dodd started off for that purpose, and while he was gone, Mr. MINSHULL arranged that some ten or a dozen of the officers, with Mr. Lee amongst them, should mix together, and enter the office while he was examining the witnesses. When Dodd returned with his wife and niece, the former stated, that the person who assaulted her husband was on horseback, and had a long silver staff in his hand. She thought she should know the person again.—Mr. Lee and the officers being congregated below the bar, Mrs. Dodd was desired to go amongst them, and see if she could point the individual out. She wandered in and out amongst the groupe for some time, looking stedfastly at most of them, and then smiling and shaking her head, in a way that created great laughter in the office; but it was remarked that she never got a full front view of Mr. L.'s face, he always happening to have his side face towards her when she passed him. She at length singled out Herring, an officer of the establishment, who is a stout, comely, and ruddy complexioned person, and said she thought he was the man, but she would not swear.—Dodd's niece was next examined, and said she did not see the assault committed, but saw her uncle immediately afterwards, and every body about said it was Mr. Lee, the High Constable, who had done it. She had seen a Gentleman about on horseback, with a long silver staff or mace in his hand, several times in the course of that night, and she thought that she should know him again. The witness being sent round the bar, fixed upon Mr. Lee with very little hesitation as the person whom she saw on horseback with the silver mace, and Mrs. Dodd having her attention thus drawn to him, exclaimed, "O, now I know you, Sir. You are the gentleman; I know you by your fat jolly cheeks."—(A loud laugh.)—Mr. Lee being asked if he had any thing further to say, again questioned Dodd as the time and place, and repeated what he had before advanced. Mr. MINSHULL asked Dodd if he wished to go on with the charge? —"Why, Sir, (said Dodd, who is a very droll sort of person,) I have no wish to proceed with severity against any body—it was the most disgracefullest thing for him to assault me in that manner, and though as I said I ant malicious in my disposition, I think I have a right to claim protection."—Mr. MINSHULL—I shall call upon Mr. Lee to find bail. Knowing Mr. Lee's respectability, I should, if he appeared here merely as a private individual, be satisfied with his own recognizance; but in order that it may not be supposed that any favour was shewn to him because he was a public officer, I shall call upon him to find two sureties in the usual way.—Mr. Lee bowed in seeming assent to the justice and propriety of this course, and having immediately put in bail, he left the office.

Extensive Fraud and Forgery.—A very respectable-looking, well-dressed, middle aged man, named Henry White, was brought before Sir Richard Birnie, charged with obtaining a sum of £29 10s. under false pretences, from the commissioners of the Stamp-office. The circumstances were these:—The prisoner applied to Mr. Samuel Truman, a clerk in the legacy-office at Somerset-house, for the return of the legacy duty, amounting to £29. 10s., which had been paid on letters of administration, purporting to be taken out on the estate of John Markham Covenant. He produced the usual affidavit, stating that he was entitled to the money demanded, and also a receipt. A warrant was given, empowering him to receive the money at the Receiver-General's Office. The receipt produced by him was signed William Smith. Charles Norman, the chief clerk in the Receiver-General's Office, produced the warrant under authority of which he had paid the sums in question. That money was paid to whoever produced it, but witness could not remember the person of the individual.—Thos. Gwynne, esq., Solicitor of the Legacy Duties, said, that this was all the evidence he was at this moment prepared to produce, and that at a future period he should be enabled to prove that these letters were fictitious. Mr. HARMER, who attended for the prisoner, said that this was undoubtedly a prima facie case against his client. This empowered the magistrate to hold him to bail, and that any further testimony, which the prosecutors might be enabled to produce, would be deferred till the case came to be heard at the quarter sessions.—Sir R. BIRNIE said, that were this the only case against the prisoner, and no attendant circumstances within his own knowledge, he should have no objection to treat it as Mr. Harmer advised. But it was a different case from a mere fraud on a shopkeeper. It was a fraud of a most dangerous description, where the public interest was concerned, and where, from the character of the persons, whose situation enabled them to practise frauds, detection was always extremely difficult.—Some conversation then took place between the Magistrate, when—Ralph Dunn, esq., the solicitor of the South Sea Company, came forward. He was desirous that the prisoner should be detained on other grounds; not merely for a fraud, but for a forgery.—Thos. Wright Ellis, a clerk in the Transfer-office, at the South Sea House, stated, that the prisoner had come to him a few days since, and claimed certain unpaid dividends standing in the name of John Markham Covenant, deceased, late a captain in the honourable East India Company's service. He received forty-seven warrants for different sums, and afterwards was paid the money due on them, to the amount of some hundreds of pounds. To entitle him to obtain these warrants he produced a warrant of attorney, signed "William Smith." He then went in the name of Henry White. The witness did not know of his own knowledge that the power of attorney was forged.—Mr. Dunn said, from information he had received, he had no doubt that the warrant was forged and counterfeit.—Sir R. Birnie, on this evidence, ordered him to be committed for further examination.—We understand the unfortunate prisoner is a surgeon, and formerly enjoyed an extensive practice in Spring Gardens.

Two gentlemen who gave their names and address "Messrs. Dixon and Hall," were brought before SIR RICHARD BIRNIE, from St. Clement's watch-house, on Monday morning, under the following circumstances:—It appeared by the evidence of a woman of the town named Mary Robinson, that between two and three o'clock on Sunday morning, she saw these two young men ringing at the door-bell of a house in Crown Court, Temple-bar. They were accompanied by a lady and a little girl, who did not appear to be more than ten years of age; and witness thinking they intended the Child to accompany them into the house, determined to prevent it—the house was closed and when the servant came to the door, the woman called out, "Don't let them in, for they have got a little girl not ten years old." A mob soon collected, and as usual on such occasions, they attacked the gentlemen, who to escape from their fury called a coach, from which they were forcibly expelled by persons who stated they were police-officers, and were ultimately taken to the watch-house—Sir RICHARD BIRNIE, after a patient investigation of the business, declared that he was perfectly satisfied that the young men were entirely exonerated from any intention of so revolting a character as that ascribed to them by the witness Mary Robinson.—Several morning papers having given very inaccurate reports of the case, Messrs. Dixon and Hall addressed the following letter to them, and Sir RICHARD BIRNIE is ready at any time to vouch for the truth of the contents.—

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR.—We have strongly to complain of a statement, under the Bow-street Police Report, in your Paper of yesterday, wherein a charge of assault upon a police officer is made a vehicle for a insinuation against us of a very grave and revolting character. Had your reporter been present when Sir Richard Birnie resumed the consideration of the business on Monday evening, we are sure the report you have given would not have appeared. Sir Richard then, after a full investigation of the affair, stated most distinctly and publicly, that there was no ground whatever for the above insinuation alluded to, although he took cognizance of the common assault; and we have now Sir Richard's authority, personally communicated to us this day at the Office, to declare, that he (Sir Richard) is quite satisfied the insinuation against us is wholly unfounded, and that he will himself satisfy any one of this fact who will have the goodness to apply to him.—We trust to your candour to insert this in your Paper of to-morrow, and remain, Sir, your very obedient servants,

T. H. DIXON,
New Boswell-court, July 13, 1825. JAMES HALL.

TOWN HALL.—On Friday, Mary Welsh, a pretty young woman, with an infant at her breast, charged her husband David with beating her most cruelly.—The complainant had been married on the death of a former wife, with whom she had lived servant; and she now stated, that on Saturday last, without provocation of any kind, he struck her so violently, while sitting in a chair nursing her child, that she fell to the ground. He seized her by one of her legs with one hand, and twisting the hair of her head round the other, dragged her across the floor, repeatedly striking her head against the boards and the wall, notwithstanding the child she bore him was still in her arms. Returning in about an hour, with the salutation of "well devil, are you there yet?" he turned her and her infant into the street, to wander for upwards of two days; when the pangs of hunger forced her again to appeal to the Magistrate for protection.—The prisoner, a cadaverous-countenanced man, and apparently old enough to be the complainant's grandfather, said, in reply, that she had on Saturday prayed aloud that a curse might descend upon him and his elder children by a former wife, to the seventh generation; upon which he arose, and laying his hand upon her child's head, prayed in return that the curse might pass from him and his, and rest upon her head and that of her offspring (of which he was the father.) It was in the attempt to get from her the key of the house door that he had taken hold of her leg.—"I never cursed you," exclaimed the complainant, "though God knows you have given me cause every hour since we were united."—Alderman J. J. SMITH said it was high time to put an end to the atrocities of such a husband and father, and ordered the defendant to find good bail till the Sessions, and in the mean time make a provision for the complainant and her child, with both of which complying, he was allowed to go at large.

MARLBOROUGH-STREET.—John Stevens was charged with having annoyed several persons, particularly the Duke of Gloucester, with begging letters upon false pretences. He was committed for a month to the House of Correction. It appeared in the course of the examination that those kind of letters are written by a man who obtains a livelihood by the practice.

MARYLEBONE-OFFICE.—CHARGE OF ARSON.—Tuesday a young woman, named Julia Doyle, was charged with having attempted to burn the house of her master, Mr. George Palmer, coal and corn merchant, in Marylebone-lane. The prisoner, who appeared not the least dismayed by her situation, said she knew not how the fire originated, and was opening the parlour shutters when Mrs. Croft gave the alarm; she rendered her every assistance; and, on being accused of setting the place on fire, she left the house and went to her father's. She was committed to Newgate accordingly.

CURIOUS CASE.—Friday Moses Harris, an aged and worn down looking Israelite, appeared before Mr. HOSKINS, under the following circumstances:—About eight months since, the house of Mr. Lowther Chiswick, was broken into and robbed of a great quantity of valuable property, among which was a considerable portion of Mrs. Lowther and her daughter's wardrobe, and although every inquiry had been made, no clue whatever could be obtained of the thieves or their booty. About a month since, Mrs. Lowther, and her daughter, a young lady of the age of 14 years, were walking in Hyde Park, when the young lady observed, "Oh, Mamma, that girl before us has my frock on!"—at the same time pointing to a young girl walking with a lady a few paces before them. Mrs. Lowther, on looking closely at the frock, which was silk, was also struck with the resemblance it bore to the one stolen, and taking an opportunity, which occurred in a few minutes, addressed the lady politely, and stating her motive, begged to know how her young companion had become possessed of the frock. The lady, Mrs. Gemine, of Henrietta-street, Cavendish-square, very willingly, although much surprised, said she had bought that frock, as well as other things, from an aged Jew, named Harris, who had lived in the neighbourhood of Houndsditch, and who was in the habit of going round by her house frequently, but she had since disposed of the most part of those articles of that particular purchase. Mrs. Lowther came to the office, and directions being given to the police, Gibbs, an active constable, soon found out Harris, but he denied at first ever having sold Mrs. Gemine any thing, but on the officer taking him to that lady's house, he suddenly recollected the business, and came before the Magistrate, when he positively and solemnly said, that he had bought the apparel, &c. at the Jews' Fair, in Cutler-street, but he could not recollect from whom.—The case could not be carried any further upon the evidence, and Harris was allowed to depart, on giving an undertaking to look for the man from whom he had purchased them.

The Ticket, No. 3613, drawn on Friday a Prize of £21,055 was shared and sold in one half, one quarter, and four sixteenths: also, 8,687, a Prize of £2000 in a whole Ticket, by J. and J. SIVEWRIGHT, at their Offices, No. 37, Cornhill; 11, Holborn; 38, Haymarket, where the fortunate holders may receive money on demand.

Friday the Lottery finished drawing, when, with their usual success, the following Capitals were all sold to the by RICHARDSON and Co., No. 60, Charing Cross, viz:—

Nos. 9,776 . . . . 20,000 Guineas.
8,598 . . . . 1,000 Guineas.
and 8,598 also entitled to Sixteen Pipes of Port Wine.

The fortunate holders of the above, may receive their Prizes on demand, and an order will be given by RICHARDSON and Co., Charing Cross, for the Wine, on any Wine-merchant they prefer. —Tickets and Shares for the new Lottery to be drawn 31st August, are on sale at the above fortunate Office.

The recent discovery of the Miltonian MS., in the State Paper Office, attracted the notice of his MAJESTY, under whose auspices the work so long lost to the world, is about to be published.—We understand, in consequence of this and other interesting discoveries, made within the last few years in the same quarter, his MAJESTY has been pleased to appoint a Commission to examine the documents in that valuable depository of the records of former times, with a view to printing the most important of them. The Commissioners named are, the Speaker of the House of Commons, Mr. Secretary Peel, Mr. C. W. Wynn, Mr. Croker, and Mr. Hobhouse. Mr. Lemon, the Deputy Keeper of the State Paper Office (by whom the MS. above-mentioned was found), has been appointed Secretary to the Commission.

The Royal Mineral Spring in Windsor Great Park continues to add every day more and more to the general attractions of that town; and during the present week we have had the pleasure of noticing a great number of the most fashionable visitants, not only from the town and its neighbourhood, but several from the Metropolis, who have come for the express purpose of drinking the waters, and have derived great benefit therefrom. From 12 to 1400 pints are drank every morning.

WAREHAM, JULY 13—On Monday last an inquest was held at the Town-hall in this borough, before the Coroner, Henry Everingham, Esq. on the body of Peter Barrett, who lost his life while bathing in the river Trent. The deceased, who was 16 years of age, on leaving his work at dinner time, bathed in the river, and was suddenly seized while in the water with the cramp, or a fit, which attack may have been produced by his inadvertently plunging into the stream while warm. The body lay in the water about 15 minutes, and more than a quarter of an hour was suffered to elapse before it was removed from the bank. Medical assistance was then procured, but too late to avail, and the Coroner commented in strong terms on the imprudence of the parties, who, instead of seeking proper advice, rolled the body on a fallen tree, and adopted no doubt with the best intentions, the very method to extinguish the last spark of life, namely that of holding the body by the heels, by which the blood and water being forced upon the lungs, render suffocation almost inevitable. It is singular that this silly practice should still be resorted to, notwithstanding the repeated cautions in the newspapers. The Jury returned a verdict, "Accidently Drowned." Too much praise cannot be given to the medical gentlemen, for their prompt, humane, and persevering attention in endeavouring to restore animation. Every means was resorted to, nor did they cease their labours until the corpse was quite cold.

CORONER'S INQUEST.—Monday morning, at 11 o'clock, an inquest was held at the King's Arms public-house, Prince's-street, Vauxhall, before Richard Carter, Esq., coroner for the county of Surrey, on view of the body of George Cook, a child ten years of age, who came to his death under the following circumstances:—Hugh Hodges, of No. 1, Princes-street, Lambeth, deposed, that on Wednesday evening last, about eight o'clock, he was sitting outside the King's Arms public-house, and saw a coach coming from Vauxhall-gardens. The coachman, when he neared witness, turned round; witness heard a noise like the crack of a whip, which was instantly followed by a loud shriek; the deceased ran round the coach and leaned against some garden pales. Witness immediately ran to the assistance of the deceased, examined him, but did not discern the slightest injury. The deceased had been riding behind a carriage, and was sliding from behind it, when he was jammed against a post whilst it was turning round; the deceased lingered until Friday morning. Robert Abbott, of 28, Glasshouse-street, deposed, that he went to the assistance of the deceased, who was leaning against some garden palings, bent almost double; witness took the deceased in his arms, and carried him home. He said he had been riding behind the coach with several other boys, that the coach backed and jammed him against the post. The deceased was ten years of age. The Jury retired to view the body, and returned a verdict of "Accidental Death."

Thursday the Lord Mayor held a Court of Conservancy for the county of Essex, at the Swan-inn, Stratford, and afterwards proceeded to Greenwich, to hold another court for the county of Kent, when the juries made their presentments of divers nuisances, &c.; and the Kent Jury alluded in their presentment to the great good that had been done by the partial clearing of Yantlet Creek, and begged to impress on his lordship's mind the very great utility it would be to the owners of small craft, and to the public generally, if that creek could be sufficiently opened to allow such craft to pass through in stormy weather, which, if completed, would be the means of saving many valuable lives, and prevent the distress that so frequently followed to the wives and families of the sufferers. The Jury in their progress went through the creek.

COMBINATION AND SHOCKING MURDER.—Yesterday morning, about nine o'clock, a crowd of working men, from 30 to 40 in number, were seen assembled dear the draw-bridge, leading to Ringsend, and divided into groups of six persons each. In a few moments two lads, Richard Neill, and Andrew Marchant, apprentices to Mr. Morton, ship-carpenter, of Ringsend, on their way to break fast, arrived opposite the gas factory; one of the groups, of six persons, armed with a "slating bludgeon," ran at Marchant, and laid him prostrate by a blow on the head; and with such furious force was the blow given, that the ruffian who levelled it was propelled some paces beyond the unfortunate victim of atrocity. This wretch, however, without changing his position more than turning himself half shoulder forward, inflicted a second blow on poor Marchant's head, with apparently still greater force. He then passed on, and was succeeded by a second death-dealer, at the moment of whose arrival Marchant was heard to supplicate the first assassin, calling on him by name to spare his life; but, as will readily be anticipated, the persons who could associate for such a purpose were insensible to the feelings of humanity, and the unhappy Marchant received another blow from the second monster. Their thirst for blood was not yet satiated, and a third miscreant put an end to the miserable apprentice's sufferings, by a blow also on the head, after which Marchant was never seen to move. Another group had attacked Neil, but by the time Marchant was despatched, the whole party were obliged to fly, in consequence of the appearance of the workmen from the gas factory, who were coming out to breakfast, and with some of whom the combiners came in contact. A bludgeon was rescued from one of the assassins, by the gasmen. Neill, although very seriously hurt, is not in a quite hopeless state. Marchant was conveyed to Sir Patrick Dun's Hospital, where every attention was paid to him, but without effect, the combiners having done their horrid work effectually. An elderly man, a ship carpenter's joiner, was also beaten, and had both his legs broken, yesterday. He was conveyed in this miserable state to his place of abode. The whole party who had attacked the apprentices were seen to run off in different directions, throwing away their weapons. An investigation into the circumstances of this atrocious murder was held yesterday before the magistrates of College-street Police-office; but we are not at liberty in this stage of the proceeding to go into details.—Freeman's Journal, July 7.

On Thursday last, an inquest was taken at the Duke of Clarence public-house, Rotherhithe, before R. Carter, Esq., Coroner for Surrey, on the body of Richard Painter, who met his death by falling down the shaft of the Thames Tunnel. It appeared from the evidence, that about one o'clock on Wednesday morning, the deceased, who was employed upon the tunnel, whilst walking on the curb of the shaft, slipped and fell to the bottom of the tunnel, a distance of upwards of 50 feet. Both the bones of the deceased's right arm were broken, and he was dreadfully bruised about the head. He lingered until 11 o'clock, when he died.—Verdict—Accidenal Death.

FIRE IN COW-LANE, SNOWHILL.—About 11 o'clock on Saturday night a fire broke out in the upper part of the house of Mr. Smith, portable desk and fancy cabinet-maker, No. 45, Cow-lane, and instantly communicated to his extensive workshop, which, from the nature of the materials, burnt with an alarming fury. In a short time the flames acquired an ascendancy that defied every exertion to preserve his house and property, and but for the substantiality of the adjoining houses, which, with Mr. Smith's, were only rebuilt five years ago, (a fire about that time having taken place on the same spot,) the whole neighbourhood must have been destroyed. Mr. Kennaby, of No. 44, cork-manufacturer, and Mr. Flint, No. 46, boot and shoemaker, had their houses considerably damaged, and were obliged to have a part of their property removed. Green Dragon-court, (densely inhabited,) immediately behind the houses mentioned, narrowly escaped destruction, owing principally to the plentiful supply of water and the excellent conduct of the firemen generally, (but particularly those who first arrived,) which, as usual was beyond all praise. The first engines on the spot were the Sun, (where Mr. Smith's property was partly insured,) the Hope, and the Alliance Assurance offices. No serious accidents took place at the fire; but from the immense crowd congregated in the vicinity, being Saturday night, we heard of two persons being hurt by the engines driving rapidly up to their post, and carried to St. Bartholomew's Hospital. It cannot be ascertained how the fire oringinated.

Bed Ticks sold at prime cost to purchasers of Feathers.—Feathers and Bed Ticking sold to any quantity.—Old Feather Beds dressed, and Mattrasses re-made, or taken in exchange.

 Bedsteads made to order, but no fixed price, as the Proprietor is determined not to sell trash of any description, and knows, as a man of business, that it is impossible to make Bedsteads at the price some tradesmen advertise.—Schools liberally supplied.

It is the Proprietors particular request that those families who honour him with their commands, will send their servants, or some trusty friend, to see the Feathers put into the Ticks, and by that means prevent any possibility of being deceived, and have the great advantage of buying their Feathers by weight, so that it will remain entirely with themselves what price they give for Beds.—Persons fearful of not having their Feathers quite dry, may see them put into their Ticks hot from the Stove.

HAVING heard loud complaints of there being no Establishment of Scientific Artists for cutting and dressing Ladies and Gentlemen's Hair, we have adopted a plan which we trust will be a successful medium of conveying to the fashionable world a style peculiar to ourselves and for which we have this week published an Engraving, copies of which will be presented to each of our visitors. The figure presents the last and newest Parisian Fashions. both for hair and costume; and will be succeeded every month by each revolution in the fashionable world. We beg to state that contrary to the general opinion of those who are unacquainted with our terms that our charges are moderate. Ladies and Gentlemen's Hair cut and dressed at our establishments, each 1s.; curled only 6d. At their own residence, if not exceeding one mile of Temple Bar, or within a mile of Threadneedle Street 2s.: in addition to the attention we pay to our Clients' convenience, in having six different rooms replete with every comfort, and well aired, for their accommodation, every visitor receives from us instructions in French and English, for the management of their hair. We flatter ourselves both Ladies and Gentlemen can suit themselves with Perruques, Toupees, and all sorts of ornamental hair, of every shade and description, and all kinds of foreign perfumery, better of us than any place in England, in consequence of our connexions with Paris. Gentlemen are also invited by us to see the Patent Machines (never before introduced in this country) for ascertaining their weight, height and strength, in a saloon fitted up for their amusement and convenience. A Clerk attends to register each gentleman's height, weight, and strength, if desired, all free of expence.

ALBION CLUB

FOREIGN LOTTERIES, PRIVATE LOTTERIES, LITTLE GOES AND RAFFLES.

Lottery Office, Somerset-Place. 20th July, 1825.

WHEREAS by several ACTS of PARLIAMENT passed respectively in the Reigns of George the First and George the Second, the offence of selling Foreign Lottery Tickets, or publishing proposals for selling the same, is punishable as a misdemeanor, and persons guilty thereof are subject to the penalty of £500 for each offence. And by the annual Lottery Act, the offence of selling Tickets in any Lottery not authorised by Parliament (which has been held to include all Foreign and Private Lotteries and Raffles), or publishing proposals for the same, has subjected the persons guilty thereof to be punished as Rogues and Vagabonds, and made them liable to the penalty of £50 for each offence.

And whereas the offences above described, having become so frequent as to require immediate attention to put a stop to them, Notice is hereby given, that all persons offending in the above particulars, whether before or after the English State Lottery shall be discontinued, will subject themselves to the above mentioned pains and penalties. L. HESSB.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MAJESTY.

ROYAL GARDENS, VAUXHALL.

THE PROPRIETORS of VAUXHALL, in consequence of intimations they have received from many of the Highest Classes of the Nobility and Gentry, who purpose re-visiting Vauxhall previous to leaving town, most respectfully state their intention of giving THREE MOST SPLENDID GALAS during the NEXT WEEK, viz:—To-morrow Evening, MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, and FRIDAY, for which preparations are making on a most novel and extensive scale. The Concert and the Entertainments generally will be expressly arranged for the occasion, with peculiar claims on public attention: a New Ballet Dance, of unusual interest, produced; the Gardens will be illuminated in the highest degree of ornamental taste and elegance; and the Fire Works, for brilliancy and variety of design, surpass any yet introduced, even at Vauxhall, it being the determination of the Proprietors to render the whole every way worthy the August and distinguished Patronage they have so flatteringly received.

Doors open at Seven o'Clock.—Admission, 3s. 6d.

THE EGYPTIAN TOMB, discovered by the late Mr. BELZONI.—The Exhibition of the Egyptian Tomb, with a variety of Models of Temples and Pyramids explored by the late Traveller, is now open at 28, Leicester-Square. Admittance, 2s.; Children, 1s.

INFANT LYRA, 94, PALL-MALL—CHANGE OF PERFORMANCES.—The Nobility and Gentry are respectfully informed that a New Selection of most popular Airs, &c. will be performed by the INFANT every day; and for the better accommodation of the numerous visitors, there will be four Performances each day, which will take place at the following hours:—At two, half-past three, at five, and at eight in the evening. In the course of each entertainment, there will be introduced Performances on the Sanotinesta Piano-forte, by a celebrated Professor.—Admission, 2s. 6d.; Family Tickets to admit Four, 8s.; Children half-price.—Tickets to be had at the doors.

ATHENS.—A view of this interesting City, comprising the Acropolis, the Parthenon, the Grove of Academus, and several other objects equally fraught with classic associations, is now exhibiting at the Cosmorama—this view and the Panorama of Edinburgh, at Leicester square, will enable the public to judge of the resemblance said to be observable between those two Cities—the Cosmorama having undergone a total change, contains also Views of Grand Cairo, the Pyramids, the Sphinx, and other magnificent antiquities of Egypt, and some very extraordinary objects in Italy, Spain, and India, 209, Regent street, Oxford street.

THE AUTOMATONS.—The Musical Lady and Ten other Automatons, including the Walking Figure now exhibiting in the Gothic Hall, 7, Haymarket, (next the Little Theatre, which by the power of mechanism, at a cost of more than 16,000*l.* display, by their perfect imitation of animated nature, the highest achievements of human skill and ingenuity. The spacious and richly decorated Hall is surrounded by a noble collection of Ancient Armour, the whole forming the most magnificent and gratifying exhibition ever opened to the Nobility and Public.—At 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 o'clock will be introduced Performances on the Sostenente Piano-Forte, by a celebrated Professor.—Open from Ten till Six.—Admittance 2s.—Children 1s.

THE TOMB OF BUONAPARTE, at ST. HELENA, with the whole Ceremony observed at his Interment, displaying upwards of 2,000 Figures, is now added to the New PERISTREPHIC PANORAMA, Great Room, Spring Gardens—representing all the interesting events that occurred to that individual, from his defeat at Waterloo till his death; Thirteen views of St. Helena; the Battles of Gennape, Trafalgar, &c. The Figures and Ships of War being on the largest scale, and accompanied by a full military band give a complete sensation of reality.—Day Exhibitions, from 12 to 5; Evening ditto, by gas, at 7 and half past 8 o'clock.

CORNWALL AND DEVONSHIRE MINING COMPANY.

NOTICE is hereby given to the Holders of Scrip Receipts for SHARES, in the Capital of this Company—That the DIRECTORS, have resolved to make a call of £10 per Share, to enable them to carry into effect the engagements entered into, to set the Principal Mines in full operation, conformable to the Report of the Deputation; and which call must be paid on or before the 30th instant. And—They have also Resolved, to issue Shares in lieu of the Scrip Receipts. The Holders of Scrip Receipts, are therefore requested, either personally, or by their Authorized Agents, to attend at the OFFICES of the COMPANY, No. 26, LOMBARD-STREET, London, on any day, (Sundays excepted), from the 18th to the 30th instant, between the hours of Twelve and Four, to pay to a Committee of Directors, who will attend at the offices, the amount of the call on the Shares held, to sign the Deed of Settlement which has been approved by the Board of Directors, and then receive Shares in exchange for the Scrip Receipts. Holders of Scrip Receipts, who cannot personally attend, may appoint any person to sign the Deed for them, by Power of Attorney, printed forms of which may be had on application to the Secretary. But Shares in Exchange for the Scrip Receipts, cannot be obtained until the Deed of Settlement be first signed.

By order of the Board of Directors,
JOHN WOOD, Secretary.

CASH UPON VALUABLE SECURITIES, TO ANY AMOUNT.—The Advertiser, having the immediate command of a Capital, will Negociate with any Lady, Gentleman, Tradesman, &c. that may require Loans, upon deposits of valuable Property, viz. Plate, Jewels, &c., and the Loan had for any length of time. As this emanates from the principal, secrecy may be depended upon. No letter can be attended to that does not contain real name and address; and all letters must be free of postage.—Address, B. B. C., Read's Coffee-house, No. 102, Fleet-street.

PERRING'S PATENT DOUBLE EDGED SILK HATS.—PERRING (original inventor of this justly celebrated Hat,) invites the members of fashion, taste, and fancy, to his establishment, 413, Strand, and at Hammersmith. The Peer, the Gentleman, the Man of Fashion, the Tradesman, and the Sportsman, here find a Hat suited to their wants, and worthy their peculiar notice. Little need be said respecting the qualities or advantages of the Hats in questioo; suffice it to say, they possess what every good manufactured Hat ought to do. Public estimation is the best criterion to preference, and it is fully borne out in the universal satisfaction and esteem in which these inimitable Hats are held. The double-edged Silk Hat differs from all others in possessing an extra quantity of napping on that part of the crown most exposed to wear, thereby removing that long existing prejudice against them. Price 17s.—Best Superfine light Beaver Hats, in a variety of modern shapes, warranted to retain their shape and colour in any climate, 23s.—Youth's Silk Hats, Gentleman's and Youth's Seal and Fur Forage Caps, Young Ladies Hats and Bonnets. Hats covered with Silkand double edged, 12s.—Best Superfine light Beaver and Drab Summer Hats.

Gentlemen residing in the country may meet with early attention to their orders by stating the number of inches round the band of the Hat, and inclosing a remittance.

BURGESS' ESSENCE OF ANCHOVIES Warehouse, 107, STRAND, corner of Savoy Steps, London.—JOHN BURGESS and SON, being apprised of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the ORIGINAL, to observe the Name and Address correspond with the above;—the general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection, J. B. and Son submit the following caution:—Some are in appearance at first sight "Burgess' Essence of Anchovies;"—others "Burgis's," and many more without address.—JOHN BURGESS and SON having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the labels previous to purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.—Burgess' New Sauce for general purposes, having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient sauce—will keep good in all climates.—Warehouse No. 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy Steps.—(The Original Fish Sauce Warehouse.)

Cologne, the 25th February, 1825.

DEPOT FOR THE REAL EAU DE COLOGNE. In order to prevent trouble and additional expense to those parties who have been hitherto supplied direct from this place, with our EAU DE COLOGNE, and to promote the sale of it in general, we have been induced to establish a depot at Messrs. ASCHROTT'S and Co. London, where the genuine article is always to be had at the original prices. R. F. & M. FARINA.

In reference to the above Advertisement of Messrs. R. F. and M. Farina, of Cologne, ASCHROTT'S and Co. respectfully beg leave to recommend their extensive Stock of Genuine EAU DE COLOGNE, which may be had Wholesale at the Original Prices, directly out of bond, or duty paid at their warehouses, Sun Street, Bishopsgate; and have likewise appointed Mr. J. C. HOSE (late Kinnard), Druggist, as their wholesale and retail Agent for the same; where all orders directed for him at No. 309, High Holborn, will be immediately attended to.

REAL Italian Leghorn and Paris Chip Hats.—Messrs. ELLIOTT et TINGCOMB ont l'honneur de faire Savoir aux personnes du bon ton, qu'ils viennent d'engager pour leur Magasin de Modes, deux modistes Francaises du premier merite, tant pour les modes les plus elegantes que pour tout ouvrage d'alguille. Their Manufactory for STRAW and ITALIAN LEGHORN HATS is detached from the Shew Rooms which now form a magazine of novelty for the season. Children's Leghorn Hats of choice fabric, as imported. French Flowers and Trimmings. Ladies Leghorns continue to be bleached in the Italian style, 344, Strand, nearly opposite Waterloo Bridge. Millinery and Dresses in the Parisian style.—N. B. GENTLEMEN'S SUMMER HATS IN GREAT VARIETY.

GUN and PISTOL REPOSITORY, 42 and 43, Oxford-street.—D. GASS respectfully informs the Nobility, Gentry, and Sporting Gentlemen, he has added to his choice and well-selected stock of New and Second-hand FLINT and DETONATING GUNS, the principal part of Mrs. Wilson's, late of Vigo-lane (retired from business); Guns by Manton, Purdey, Forsyth, Smith, Nock, Moore, Egg, Mortimer, and other Makers, at half their original cost, warranted; Rifles, Air Guns, and Canes, by Staudenmayer and other Makers; Duelling, Holster, and Pocket Pistols, in great variety; an assortment of Plate and Plated Articles, very low for ready money. Guns and Pistols bought, or taken in exchange. Merchants and Captains supplied.—42 and 43, Oxford-street, near Berners-street, London.

LADIES and GENTLEMEN may rely on it, although there are Articles daily puffed in the newspapers for the Hair, but it is acknowledged as a fact, whoever makes a fair trial of the Original Thick RUSSIA OIL, has found it, through the Aromatic Oils it is prepared with, the wholesomest and best Oil for preserving and promoting the hair of ladies, gentlemen, and children, and if used constantly not a hair will fall off or turn grey, and is such a nourisher to the Hair, that if it has began to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour; will restore the hair on the bald part, if the least signs of roots are remaining, has been proved by hundreds.

A. PRINCE is proud to acknowledge the favour of his Gracious Majesty of Great Britain, in sending for six bottles of his celebrated Russia Oil. It ought really to be generally known—the principal Physicians have recommended those who wear false hair to rub their heads often with the Russia Oil, as, through the aromatic ingredient it is prepared with is wholesome and refreshing to the head. Observe, Mr. Marshal and other respectable Comt hair-dressers, will not recommend any other article for the hair but the Prince's Original Thick Russia Oil, as they have experienced it is the best for dressing, preserving, and promoting the hair; but there are several hair-dressers, when Ladies and Gentlemen have their Hair dressed by them they recommend Bears' Grease, or other Oils for the Hair, though they know it is a humbug.

Ask for Prince's Russia Oil—the Ounce Bottle 5s.; a large bottle containing Five Ounces, 1*l.* which is a saving. Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. PRINCE, No. 9, Poland street, Oxford street; Mr. Smith, Perfumer to His Majesty, 117, New Bond street; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders. Be particular, and observe his address, "A. Prince, No. 9, Poland Street, Oxford Street, London," on the cover of each bottle; without it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose.—Purchasers ought to be particular, as counterfeits are in circulation.—Also, Prince's RUSSIA DYE is so improved, as there is no doubt that it will change Red or Grey Hair on the Head, Whiskers, or any part to Brown or Black in a few minutes.—Directions sealed up with each bottle, at half a guinea, or two bottles for One Pound

SODA WATER.—WM. CLARK, No. 21, MAIDEN-LANE, Covent Garden, Soda Water Manufacturer to the Royal Family, most respectfully informs the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public in general, that he Manufactures the above article of a very superior quality: it is warranted to be free from all metallic impregnations in consequence of its being prepared in glass machinery.—N. B. Superior Jamaica Ginger Beer, and Fine Sparkling Lemonade, (in glass bottles). They are warranted to keep good to twelve months.

AMPLE COMMAND OF MONEY:—While one hears this exclamation on every side, thousands feel the pressure of want, and deride the mockery of the cry. It may be that this plentiful command exists among a few leading capitalists, and that the city men who draw their resources from their ink, may boast of their facilities to create artificial riches, but there is no real and general plenty, and the truth becomes manifest enough by the difficulty every person finds in borrowing money when he wants it, unless he has some Government or Mercantile security to offer, or a Landed Estate of twice the value of the sum he would wish to raise. The writer professes however to procure Loans upon every description of Convertible Security, upon Terms fairly apportioned to the risk which may be incurred of delay or loss as to the repayment, and he may be communicated with personally, or letter, post paid, addressed to E. H. G. at Letter A, No. 8, Carlton Chambers, Regent Street; but he will only treat with people of consideraton, and not upon trifling subjects, or about Loans of less than £100.

EMMETT'S QUEEN'S GOLD and SILVER-EYED NEEDLES.—T. EMMETT, (late Trott,) Pin, Needle, and Fish-Hook Maker, (by appointment,) to their Majesties, wholesale and retail, No. 27, HOLBORN-HILL, London. AN INESTIMABLE AND CERTAIN RELIEF

FOR ALL KINDS of SPRAINS, BRUISES, recent WOUNDS, RHEUMATISMS, LUMBAGO, SCIATICA, Contraction, Distortions, Weakness in the Joints, and Malformations arising therefrom, Swellings, indurated Tumours, Cores in the Breasts, Rickets in Children, &c. &c. MASON'S ARABIAN BALSAM is now fully confirmed to be the most effectual Remedy ever submitted to the public, in any of the above cases. Its application is perfectly easy and pleasant, being used externally as an embrocation to the parts affected two or three times in the day.

Sold in bottles at 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each, stamp duty included, by C. MASON the sole proprietor, at his establishment, No. 10, Calthorpe Place, Gray's Inn Road, and all respectable Druggists in Town and Country.

KITCHEN RANGES, with C. Ricket's late Holmes's Patent Conducting Ovens; it is a fact well known that all Ovens hitherto contrived for the use of Families, which are attached to Kitchen Ranges, owing to the Flues, occasion a considerable loss of Fuel as well as diminution of Heat. To obviate these great disadvantages has been the study of the Inventor of the Patent Conducting Ovens, which are without Flues, and which instead of diminishing increases the Heat without the least additional Fuel.—References to Families of the first respectability will be given, where Ovens may be seen in use, and also at the Manufactory, Castle-Court, near Bedford-street, Strand.—N. B. The Society of Arts did Mr. Holmes the honour of voting him a handsome premium for his Invention.

REDUCTION in NUTMEGS at HOLLINS's old-established Tea, and noted Spice Warehouse, 22, St. Martin's Court, Leicester-square; viz. Sixpence per Ounce, or 7s. 6d. per lb. Also very superior Teas in Original China Packages, from 2s. to 11s. each.

THE EAST INDIA HOUSE, No. 91, Cheapside, London—M. WHITBREAD and Co. are now supplying the Public with Teas, exactly at the wholesale prices; Black Teas, Good Congou, 5s. 4d. and 5s. 8d. Strong Congou, 6s. Fine Congou, 6s. 4d. Superior Congou, 6s. 8d. Good Souchong, 7s. Fine Souchong, 8s. Superior Souchong, 10s.; Green Teas, Twankay 7s. Bloom Hyson, 8s. Fine Hyson, 10s. Young Hyson, 10s. Finest Hyson, 12s. Gunpowder, 12s. 14s. and 16s. Prime Mixed Teas, 6s. 4d. Jamaica Coffee, 1s. 6d. Dutch ditto, 2s. Fine Berbice, 2s. 4d. to 2s 8d. Mocha, 3s. 4d.

TO THE EPICUREAN ADMIRERS OF FINE SAUCES.—N. B. GILBERT begs to inform the Public, that he has prepared a new and highly superior ESSENCE of the ANCHOVY, possessing in an eminent degree all the real and peculiarly fine flavor of the GORGONA FISH, which has been pronounced by some of the best Judges to surpass any thing of this description hitherto submitted to the Public; and it is warranted to keep in all Climates.

N. B. G. also begs to recommend his ROYAL METROPOLITAN SAUCE, which has been universally approved of for purposes of general use.

To be had in London, at the original Fish Sauce and Italian Warehouse, 451, Strand, opposite Villiers-street; and of J. C. HOSE, late KINNARD, 309, High Holborn.

HAVING heard loud complaints of there being no Establishment of Scientific Artists for cutting and dressing Ladies and Gentlemen's Hair, we have adopted a plan which we trust will be a successful medium of conveying to the fashionable world a style peculiar to ourselves and for which we have this week published an Engraving, copies of which will be presented to each of our visitors. The figure presents the last and newest Parisian Fashions, both for hair and costume; and will be succeeded every month by each revolution in the fashionable world. We beg to state that contrary to the general opinion of those who are unacquainted with our terms that our charges are moderate. Ladies and Gentlemen's Hair cut and dressed at our establishments, each 1s.; curled only 6d. At their own residence, if not exceeding one mile of Temple Bar, or within a mile of Threadneedle Street 2s.; in addition to the attention we pay to our Clients' convenience, in having six different rooms replete with every comfort, and well aired, for their accommodation, every visitor receives from us instructions in French and English, for the management of their hair. We flatter ourselves both Ladies and Gentlemen can suit themselves with Perruques, Toupees, and all sorts of ornamental hair, of every shade and description, and all kinds of foreign perfumery, better of us than any place in England, in consequence of our connexions with Paris. Gentlemen are also invited by us to see the Patent Machines (never before introduced in this country) for ascertaining their weight, height and strength, in a saloon fitted up for their amusement and convenience. A Clerk attends to register each gentleman's height, weight, and strength, if desired, all free of expence.

SUPPLEMENT TO THE LONDON GAZETTE,

PUBLISHED, WEDNESDAY, JULY 20.

India Board, July 19, 1825.

Dispatches have been received at the East India Hnusc from the GOVERNOR-GENERAL in Council at Fort William, in Bengal ; with inclosures, of which the following are copies and extracts ;—

Extract from a Letter from the GOVERNOR-GENERAL in Council to the Secret Committee of the Court of Directors, dated Fort William, 25th and 28th of February, 1825.

Since the date of our last address to your Honourable Committee, of the 31st ultimo, relative to the Birman war, we have received some interesting reports of the operations of our troops in the different quarters, copies of which we lose no time in submitting for your information, briefly referring to their contents in this place.

From Assam we have received the gratifying intelligence of the defeat of the Burmese in the neighbourhnod of the capital, Rungpore, where they had collected their scattered parties with the intention of making a stand ; but after the gallant attack and capture of their stockaded position on the 29th ult. they despaired of success ; and it appears by the dispatch from the agent of the Governor-General, that, on the 2d instant, the fort of Rungpore was surrendered, and the principal Assamese and Burmese commanders were in our camp.

On the south east frontier, we have received reports of the evacuation of Mungdoo and Lowadhung, on the troops under Brigadier-General MORRISON passing the Naaf and entering the province of Arracad.

The official dispatches announcing the capture of the capital of Assam, the expulsion of the Burmese, and the complete subjugation of the coudtry having been received, copies are translated as numbers in the packet.

Copy of a Letter from Lieutenant-Colonel RICHARDS, commanding in Assam, to the Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant-General, Eastern Division, dated Camp, Moura Mookh, the 13th January, 1825.

SIR—I had the honour to report to you, in my letter of the 9th instant, the march of several detachments against the enemy ; I have now the honour to transmit copies of letters from the different officers, who have all returned to the fleet, detailing the particulars of their operations ; I feel much obliged to the officers and men who have been employed. The object for which they were detached has been completely fulfilled. I am happy to state, that, notwithstanding the fears of the inhabitants of those places visited by my detachments, I do not think the enemy will dare to venture to molest them again, after their late defeat at all points. The detachments under Capt. M'LEOD and Lieut. N. JONES having joined me this forenoon, I have to report my intention of advancing to-morrow morning upon Ioor Haut, at which place the enemy are concentrated and stockaded.

I have, &c. A. RICHARDS.

Extract from a Letter from Captain MARTIN, commanding a Detachment of the 57th Regiment N. I. to Brigade-Major BAYLDON, dated Camp Deeorgong, 10th January, 1825.

About eleven o'clock P.M. the detachment under my command moved silently forward, and as we approached the stockade of Deeorgong, Capt. NEUFVILLE led us by a considerable detour to the right to avoid two advanced posts, and to get into the rear of the stockade.—We were now in the sanguine hopes of effecting a complete surprise, but the enemy must have had scouts on the plain, as we were challenged by both out-posts. At a short distance from the stockade signal-lights appeared from both chokies, and the alarm had evidently been taken ; at this moment a small party of men that had broken from the rear, by mistake, suddenly appeared in front, and a few shots were fired, but immediately stopped.

The detachment now pushed on rapidly, and entered the stockade as the last of the fugitives were quitting it on the opposite side ; they were pursued to the jungle ; six men were killed and seven taken. The only casualty I have to regret on our part is the death of one sepoy by an accidental shot. This stockade consisted of a double fence of bamhoos, but without a ditch. The amount of the enemy's force within it could not, I imagine, have exceeded two hundred men.

Extract from a Letter from Lieut. WALDEN, commanding a Detachment of the 46th Regiment N. I. to Brigade Major BAYLDON, dated Moora Mookh, January 13, 1825.

Having ascertained that the enemy, to the number 100 or 120, were in a stockade, distant four or five coss, and judging from the time they had been absent that it might be more, I immediately ordered the men under arms, leaving a small party to guard the knapsacks, and proceeded over a very bad road, which greatly distressed the men. A little before daybreak I crossed the Dhonseera again, (about a mile below the stockade,) and proceeded along its right bank, and reached the stockade about sun-rise ; a fog allowing me to come up unperceived, the enemy were completely surprised, and about twenty were killed, amongst whom was a Phokun and five Usseel Mauas ; 13 prisoners were taken.

Copies of the following dispatches, regarding the operations in Assam, are herewith published for general information :—

To Captain SHULDHAM, Deputy Assistant Adjutant General, Eastern Division.

SIR—I have the honour to report for the information of Brigadier General SHULDHAM, commanding Eastern Division, that at half an hour after ten o'clock this morning, many hundreds of the enemy attacked my advanced position at Namdong Nulla, over which there is a fine pucka bridge, and where Captain M'LEOD commanded with the Rungpore light infantry. The bridge is distant from my present camp about three-quarters of a mile on the high road to Rungpore. On hearing the firing, I ordered the troops under arms, and moved on to the support of Captain MAC LEOD with two companies of the 57th regiment, and the Dinagepore local battalion, leaving the remainder of the former corps under Captain MARTIN, to defend the camp, as the Hurcarrahs informed me that the enemy meant to attack in three divisions. On my reaching the scene of action, I found that gallant officer, Captain MAC LEOD, and his little band, defending the position in a steady soldier-like manner. As I perceived the enemy were collecting and spreading to the right and left in a very heavy jungle, in which it was impossihle our troops could act with effect, and that those in our immediate front were keeping up a very sharp fire of jingals and muskets, I ordered the party on the bridge to retire to the front division and to lay down and cease firing. The enemy thought this was the prelude to a retreat, and set up a shout and came forward ; but our fire from the advanced division soon made them retire ; after this the enemy were apparently gaining confidence, and began to show themselves boldly ; I therefore gave them half an hour to collect, and to induce them to suppose we did not meditate an attack. At the expiration of that time I directed Captain MAC LEOD to charge their position with the Rungpore light infantry, followed by the volunteer cavalry, in number twenty-eight, under Lieutenant BROOKE, sub-assistant commissary-general ; this was performed with the utmost gallantry, and the enemy fled after giving their fire, but were overtaken, and Captain MAC LEOD reports that full sixty were killed in the charge, among whom were three Phokuns, mounted on horseback ; their horses were taken, as also 41 muskets and 36 spears, and four prisoners. The number killed in the charge is independent of those that were killed in the first attack, who were all immediately carried off as they fell, and it is supposed they must have lost near one hundred killed, as the attack lasted one hour and twenty minutes. On our side I regret to say, Lieutenant and Adjutant KENNEDY, Rungpore light infantry, was wounded in the head (slightly.) The other casualties are, one sepoy of the same corps, and one horse attached to the cavalry wounded. The conduct of the Rungpore light infantry, and the volunteer cavalry, which belongs to the same corps, merit my warmest approbation. To Captain MAC LEOD, commanding the Rungpore light infantry, and Lieut. BROOKE, who commanded the volunteer cavalry, and whose conduct is reported by Captain MAC LEOD to have been most conspicuous, my best thanks are especially due ; as also to Lieutenant FLEMING, officiating Sub-Assistant Commissary-General, who joined the Rungpore light infantry in the charge, and to Lieutenant and Adjutant KENNEDY, and Mr. THOMPSON, Surgeon of that corps, for the zealous assistance afforded by them during the action.

I trust the guns, spare ammunition, and supplies, will arrive in camp in the course of the night or to-mnrrnw morning, which will enable me to move forward to the attack of Rungpore on the day follnwing.

I omitted tn mention in my letter of yesterday's date that 46 prisoners have been taken subsequent to my former letter of the 19th instant. I have, &c.

To Captain SHULDHAM, Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General, Eastern Division

Sir—In continuation of my letter of the 27th instant, I have to acquaint yon, for the information of Brigadier-Gen. SHULDHAM, commanding Eastern Division, that I was joined by Lieutenants BEDINGFELD and BURLTON, with two howitzers and two 12-pnunder carronades, on the same evening, and having arranged every thing for our advance tnwards Rungpore, I marched at day-break on the 20th, in the following order ;—1st. The detachment 64th Regiment (light Company leading) the advanced guard from which an Havildar's party was sent 100 paces on in front. 2d. The Volunteer Cavalry. 3d. The Brigade of howitzers, drawn by elephants. 4th. The 57th Regiment right in front. 5th. The two 12-pounder carronades on elephants, with ammunition attached. 6th. The Dinagepore Local Battalion. 7th. The Rungpore Light-Infantry. 8th. The spare Ammunition.

I was aware that the enemy had a stockade across the road, near Rungpore, as Lieutenant NEUFVILLE, Deputy Assistant Quarter-Master-General, had gone out to reconnoitre on the morning of the 26th, and got to it without being perceived. He reported that it was defended by 200 men and some guns, and that he was fired upon from a fortified Tank, a little in advance on the right, and which appeared to command the before mentioned stockade, and a gun was also fired from the left, which he considered must have been from the Fort of Rungpore, as he observed the tops of pucka buildings and mosques in that direction, distant about three quarters of a mile ; and he also stated that the whole country he traversed was a deep jungle.

Before advancing I gave directions to Captain WALDRON, commanding the advance guard, to storm the stockade across the road if he thought he had a chance of carrying it, but if not to turn into the jungles, right and left, and act as a covering party, which latter plan he adopted, as the fire of the enemy was extremely heavy. It may be here proper to remark, that the Stockade had been greatly strengthened and reinforced since Lieut. NEUFVILLE was there, and that the first discharge from the enemy, who were entrenched, brought down more than half of the leading division, which caused a momentary check. At this time the guns and column were abnut 200 paces in the rear. On th first shot being fired, I gave directions for the elephants to be cast off from the howitzers, and prepare for action ; whilst this was performed, I advanced near to the Stockade to examine it, and immediately returned to the head of the column, and ordered a couple of shells and a round or two of grape to be thrown in, and for Captain MAC LEOD to prepare to assault with the right wing of the 57th Regiment, which was accordingly done in the most gallant style, assisted by the detachment of the 46th Regiment, who rushed forward to support him, and I had the pleasure to see the enemy fly at the moment our troops began to scale and break down the Stockade. At this period I was unfortunately wounded, hnt gave orders for the guns and column to advance, and sent for Majnr WATERS and gave him directions to carry the stockaded tank on the right, or any other outworks the enemy might have, and I would be up so soon as my wound had been dressed. Herewith I have the pleasure to enclose a copy of that officer's letter, stating what occurred from the time he assumed the command until I joined, which I was able to do in a dooly in about twenty minutes. Captain MAC LEOD, with the Rungpore Light Infantry, took possession of a mosque on the left, about 400 yards from the fort, and another party was detached to occupy another mosque on the right side, by which means the south side of the fort was invested and the enemy driven in at all points. As the fort appeared an extensive place, and full of guns and men, who showed themselves on the walls and gateways, I deemed it advisable to order the camp to be pitched, and to have the place reconnoitred, which was done the same evening, and it was considered necessary by the artillery officer, that two more guns should be ordered from the fleet, and that people should be sent immediately to cut and collect materials for a battery, which was complied with. In the course of the day we fired a few rounds of shells, carcases, and round shots at the fort, to give them a specimen of the means we had of annoying them, which they returned by constant discharges of cannon.

I am sorry to say that our loss, in wounded, is very heavy, but from the nature of the service, and the troops being for a time unavoidably exposed to a cross fire of twenty pieces of ordnance—all of which were captured, and a large body of men, armed with muskets, it is providential that we suffered so little. I have particularly to lament the severe wound that enterprizing Officer, Lieutenant BROOKE, Sub-Assistant Commissary-General, received at my side, at my first advance to the stockade, hut I trust that as the surgeon's report of his case is favourable, he will soon be restored to health and service. I have not been able to ascertain the loss the enemy sustained in this affair, but it cannot, I have every reason to believe, be less than one hundred men killed and wounded. To the whole of the troops employed on this occasion my best thanks are due for the zeal they evinced ; but I feel it incumbent on me to bring to the nntice of the Brigadier-General commanding the division, the gallantry and steady conduct of the following Officers who had the good fortune to be more immediately engaged—viz. Major WATERS, my second in command, for the judicious arrangements which he adopted, after I had been disabled ; to Captain WALDRON, commanding a detachment 46th regiment ; Captain MARTIN, commanding 57th regiment, the right wing of which carried the stockade by assault ; Lieutenant BEDINGFIELD, commanding the artillery, as well as to Lieutenant BURLTON, attached to the same ; to Captain MACLEOD, commanding Rungpore light infantry, for taking possession of a commanding position before the enemy were aware of its importance ; and to Lieutenant NEUFVILLE, Deputy-Assistant Quarter-Master-General, for his gallant conduct in leading the advance, and for the correct intelligence he gave me, by which means I was enabled to form the plan of operations with such success, and I trust that our attack on the Fort will be equally fortunate, the result of which I hope to have the pleasure of reporting in a day or two.

I cannot close this dispatch without recording my approbation and thanks to Captain BAVLDON, Major of Brigade ; Lieutenant NEUFVILLE, Deputy-Assistant Quartermaster-General ; Lieut. BROOKE, Sub-Assistant Commissary-General ; and Lieutenant FLEMING, officiating Sub-Assistant Commissary-General, the staff attached to this force, for the prompt and great assistance I have at all times received from them in the execution of their respective duties.—I have, &c. To Captain SHULDHAM, Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General, Eastern Division.

SIR—In continuation of my dispatch of the 29th ult. I have the honour to acquaint you for the information of Brigadier-General SHULDHAM, commanding Eastern Division of the Army, that on the moon setting, on the morning of the 30th, the enemy in small parties came out and attacked the picquets, but were soon compelled to retire, with the loss on our side of two sentries killed, and on their part, as far as is known, of one man killed. The firing from the Fort continued during the whole of the night and morning at intervals ; but as they had not the range of our camp, I did not return a shot, as the place is too extensive to have made any great impression, and our supply of ammunition being but small, I was anxious to reserve it for the day of attack. About ten o'clock on the morning of the 30th, a flag of truce was seen coming from the Fort, and I sent out Captain BAYLDON, M. B. and Lieutenant NEUFVILLE, Deputy-Assistant Quartermaster-General, to receive it. Those Officers having met the Herald, and conducted him to the outer picquet, reported to me that he represented himself to be a native of Ceylon, by name DURMADUR BHURMACHAREE, many years resident in Bengal and the Eastern Islands, in the employment of various well-known public servants, and conversant with our manners and customs, at present Raja Gooroo or Chief Priest to the Saum and Burmese Authorities in Assam, and an accredited messenger from Saum and Baglee Phokuns to me. I accordingly directed him to be admitted under the usual forms of precaution. After his introduction, he said that he was deputed by the Phokuns to enquire what were the objects of our present advance upon Rungpore; to which I replied that my instructions were to clear the country of Assam of all opposing forces, and to occupy it on the part of the British Government, for the protection of the inhabitants ; that I was surprised at the question, since I conceived the Phokuns must have been already apprised of our intentions by Mr. SCOTT's (A.G.G.) communication in reply to theirs.

The Gooroo expressing his total ignorance of the receipt by the Phokuns of Mr. Scott's letter, I explained the general tenor of the contents, which he promised faithfully to deliver to the Phokuns, and to return in the course of the day with their reply. I also took the opportunity of bringing forward a messenger of the Phokuns returning with despatches from Mr. Scott, who had arrived in camp the same morning, and of delivering the letters to the Gooroo for transmission to the Phokuns. These proved to be the delayed communications above adverted to.

Within the period stipulated in the Armistice the Gooroo returned, stating that he had not met with any opportunity of delivering the letters privately, which it was necessary to do, to avoid the jealous suspicions of the numerous conflicting factions into which the enemy were divided ; that he had every reason to believe the two great Chiefs Saum and Baglee Phokuns to be unanimous and disposed to enter into treaty with us ; that he trusted much to his own sacred influence over them and all the others to bring matters to an amicable adjustment ; and requested a continuance of the truce till the morrow. He also asked for some definite explanation of our wishes.

To this I acceded, adding, that he was authorized to say to the Phokuns, that if they decided on making terms of alliance with us, I was ready to meet them ; if on fighting, I was equally ready ; and if they wished to retire out of Assam into their own country, I was willing to permit them to do so, provided that they took the directest route, committed no ravages on the road, and carried away none of the inhabitants now in their possession by compulsion. To this latter alternative I was induced, by finding from the Gooroo the impracticability of a plan proposed by me to separate the two factions by admitting the friendly disposed portion to the benefit of terms, provided they would come over and abandon the others to their fate in a continuance of hostilities with us. This he declared impossible, since the latter considerably preponderate in strength over the former, though headed by the chiefs, and that the slightest suspicion of such an inclination would entail bloodshed and destruction, not only on their families here, but in their own country. I was also compelled reluctantly to reflect on the total want of means in my power to prevent their escape, or to pursue them, in which case all hope of rescuing the captive Assamese inhabitants must have been abandoned. It was at the same time clearly pointed out to the Phokuns, and understood by them, that any act of plunder or aggression committed by the retiring party in progress through Assam, or in the territories of our allies would be tantamount to an infringement of engagement, and again draw down on them our arms.

The following morning the Gooroo returned, accompanied by two inferior Phokuns, (the brother of Saum Phokun and Hatsse Phokun,) with a friendly offering, and a letter from the Chiefs of which No. 3 is a translation. After much resultory conversation the Gooroo returned with my reply, and an exchange of presents. On the following morning a message was brought from the Gooroo by his brother, Rutun Pal, stating that in compliance with my terms, one portion was preparing to evacuate the fort for their own country, and that the remainder were ready to surrender ; also that the Chiefs were anxious to wait on me to adjust the various points of capitulation.

I accordingly invited them to a conference and directed the officers of my staff to proceed to meet them and conduct them to me.

The principal Chiefs Saum Phokun, Sheick Phokun, and Nabaroo Phokun (Ranglee Phokun, having joined the other party and quitted the Fort) having been introduced, we proceeded to arrange the terms of treaty, of which the principal are as follows:—

On the part of Saum Phokun, &c., that all his followers should deliver up their arms and warlike stores of all descriptions, and that possession of the Fort be given to us the moment the evacuating party should have quitted it.

On our part, that their wives and personal property should be guaranteed ; their wives and children, and all who may be voluntarily attached to them, secured to them, in conformity with instructions from Mr. Scott, A. G. G. that they should remain in every respect in their present situation until the arrival of Mr. Scott, or instructions from him respecting their ultimate destination; and that having once entered into the bonds of friendly alliance with us they shall not eventually be delivered over to the King of Ava in case of a peace, should he make such a stipulation, of which they entertained great dread, and were most anxious to receive positive assurances.

These points being settled, the Chiefs expressed their willingness to surrender without delay, and I accordingly directed Major Waters to take a party and receive charge, when I had soon the satisfaction of seeing his Majesty's colours flying on the top of the Palace in the inner Fort, under a salute from the battery in camp.

The examination of the Fort fully justified the opinion I had formed of the importance of the acquisition by the mode adopted, and of the utter inadequacy of my means of preventing the escape of the greater part of the garrisnn, should we have proceeded to the assault. The place is of very great extent, and surrounded by deep swamps and jungle, with a ditch; the sorties to three gates were strongly defended; and on them and the walls were more than 200 pieces of ordnance, ready for service. The garrison was reported to consist of 10,000 of all classes, of whom perhaps one-third were fighting men, of these 700 have surrendered with the Phokuns. I have the honour to commit a return of the ordnance, arms, and military stores captured.

By the acquisition of Rungpore I may now consider myself in entire possession of Assam: and it is a source of great self-gratulation to me, that that important point has been accomplished with so little loss on our side, considering the means of annoyance possessed by the enemy, in defending a country peculiarly unfavourable to regular military operations.

My total dependence for supplies in the fleet, which is 20 miles distant (at the mouth of the Dikho River, now not navigable), would have rendered it impossible for me to proceed farth r, under any circumstances, until the arrival of land carriage from the provinces, and I therefore consider the prospect of peaceable evacuation of the remaining portion of the country as an object gained of the most vital importance, while the possession of the capital secures a key to all points from whence any future irruptions may be attempted from the eastward.

I have, &c.

(Signed) A. Richards, Lieut.-Col. Comg. in Assam.

GENERAL ORDER BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL IN COUNCIL.

Fort William 25th Feb. 1825.

A royal salute and three vnlleys of musquetry to be fired at all the stations of the land forces in the East Indies, in honour of the surrender to the forces nnder Lieutenant-Colonel A. Richards, of the Fort and Capital of the kingdom of Assam, the expulsion of the Burmese from that country, and its entire subjugation by the British arms.

By command of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council.

Geo. Swinton, Secretary to the Government.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

YORK.

Clarkson v. Harding.—This was an action brnught by the plaintiff, a widow lady residing at Richmond, in the county of York, against the defendant, a carpenter, to recover the amount of 12 months board and lodging, besides several other sums expended for the use and on the behalf of the defendant.

Mr. D. F. Jones stated the case to the Jury, and called the following evidence in support of it:—

John Myers examined—I am an officer in the excise; I know the plaintiff; she is a widow living at Richmond, in this county; I took a lodging at her house in the month of November 1823; the defendant, Harding, was not then a lodger there, though I understood he had been at a previous period. While I was there, however, he returned and remained for several weeks. On one occasion I asked the plaintiff if she had received the money; to which she replied, "Yes;" and upon that they both went up stairs to a room adjoining mine. I followed up stairs and went to my own room, where I heard some expressions which awoke my curiosity. I heard a good deal about a sum of 100*l.* which I understood was to be advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant. He told her she had been a good friend to him, and he would shortly prove to her his honesty and his gratitude. At another time, the defendant handed the plaintiff a memorandum-book, which he desired her to look at; but what it contained I cannot tell. Also, on another occasion, when plaintiff and defendant were together, I heard the plaintiff sobbing; excited by curiosity I went to the door of plaintiff's room and listened. I overheard plaintiff requiring from defendant a bill for what he had obtained from her; he said he did not think it at all necessary, as it was set down in his own book, and as stamps were very expensive. I think that a charge for board and lodging, after the rate of from 14s. to 15s. a week would be quite moderate.

Cross-examined—I know not whether the room in which I heard the conversation is the bed-room of the plaintiff. I cannot swear it was on my oath; and on my oath, I cannot say how long I listened; it might be a few minutes.

Mr. Scarlett, was your eye or your nose at the key-hole of the door, or what? I cannot exactly say, sometimes one and sometimes another.—Then how long did you remain in that interesting posture? Some minutes.—Now, Sir, have you stated all you know upon that subject? All I noticed: perhaps I did not see all, as I was not very particular, only to gratify my curiosity. Pray Sir, what do you think was going on there; what were your thoughts on the subject? Why, I really cannot tell you, Sir; but it is very probable you may be able to form a good guess yourself. Did you put your eye or your ear to the key-hole when you heard the plaintiff sobbing in the manner you have described? Not then, I did so before that time, merely to gratify curiosity.—For no other purpose? For no other purpose that I know.—Now is that so, upon oath? Why, if you must know, I had a mind to know what they were about.—I thought so. Now Sir, I ask you what business you had to meddle or pry in this manner? I don't know, only that a great many people say and do things they have no right to say or do; that's all.—How old is the plaintiff; I don't k ew, but I suppose she is about forty years old, or more.—How old is the defendant? Better than twenty.—Did she ever tell you that she wished very much to have a young husband, though she might pay something to get one? I never thought any thing about the matter the one way or other—Are you, or were you then, a married man? I was then married.—Was your wife with you? No, not then; she was in the country.—Then you did not want to get the old lady and her money? Why should I, for I was a married man.—If you had conferred favours upon her would you have taken any remuneration? If she offered it to be sure I should.—Mrs. Jane Hutchinson was merely called to prove that the defendant had boarded and lodged with the plaintiff for upwards of a twelvemonth.

Mr. James Carter examined—I am Adjutant in the North York militia; I live near Mrs. Clarkson's. After the defendant had married I went to him on behalf of the plaintiff to demand her money, or a nete by way of security for it. This, however, he refused; alleging that he had received no money from her, or if he had that she could not prove it. I then said, she would take the money by instalments; but this he also refused. I know that at the death of her husband she had £130. I know this because she asked me to take care of it for her.

Another witness was called to prove an admission from the defendant, that he had received a sum of £113 from the plaintiff.

Mr. Scarlett for the defendant, contended that a great deal of suspicion attached to this case, and that as to the evidence of the witness Myers, it might be altogether put out of the case. A man who would stoop to do the acts which he himself admitted to have done—a man who could pimp and listen at a key hole, was not the species of witness to which a Jury would lend their attention. The defendant positively denied that he had boarded and lodged with the plaintiff, or that he received money from her which was to be returned. True, the plaintiff thonght she would have secured a husband in the defendant, but again, the defendant denied that he had ever held out to her any such hopes. But how that matter really was he could not pretend to say.

Mr. Justice Bayley here suggested a reference as the best method of settling a case like the present, which was agreed to.

A young woman of the name of Mary Senior, aged only 18, stood capitally indicted with having, on the 10th of April last, or early on the following morning, feloniously and burglariously broken out of the dwelling-house of William Monkman, a furrier residing in this city, in whose family she lived servant, and stolen therefrom one muslin gown, one shawl, seven caps, one petticoat, and other articles of wearing apparel.—The prisoner, an interesting young woman, pleaded guilty to the indictment, but was humanely advised by the learned Judge to retract her plea. She did, on his Lordship's informing her it was a capital offence, and sentence of death must be passed upon her, if she persisted in that plea. The prisoner wept the while, and hung her head down—It appeared from the examination of the wife of the prosecutor, that the prisoner had been apprenticed to them by the parish, and had lived five years in their service, and during all that time had conducted herself honestly till the time of the commitment of the burglary with which she stood charged. It further appeared that she had formed a connexion with a person of the name of Tanfield, and with whom she had left this city with the clothes in question, as they were afterwards pursued and overtaken at a public-house at Bradford. This man was admitted an evidence against the poor girl. The property being identified, the Learned Judge charged the Jury, and dwelt particularly as to the hour that the robbery was committed, and said it was particular for them to know if it was done at such a time of night as to preclude the possibility of day-light to intervene, which the law required should be proved, in order to constitute the capital part. His Lordship then dwelt on the breaking out of the house, which alone the indictment charged her with, and said, that they must be satisfied in their minds that she had slipped the bolts with a burglarious intention; for if she had not, then it would amount to theft, and they must acquit her of the capital charge; on the contrary, they would find her guilty of both.—The Jury found her guilty of stealing only.—The prosecutor immediately recommended her to mercy, and hoped his Lordship would take care of her, as he had no doubt she would return to virtuous principles, which had been corrupted by the witness Tanfield.—On his Lordship's making inquiry from Mr. Kelly, the keeper of the prison, it appeared that since her commitment, Mrs. K. had taken her into the house, where she had conducted herself with extreme propriety. His Lordship on passing sentence upon the unfortunate prisnner, said, that the very circumstance of her being found guilty might be to her a blessing, and that an atonement for her past offences might insure her happiness during the remainder of her life, and what was infinitely of greater importance, in that which was to come! The judgment then of the Court for this offence was, one year in the House of Correction. Several persons shed tears during his Lordship's feeling address.

CHELMSFORD, July 19.

Walter Nunn was indicted for stealing, at Epping, on the 14th of April, a bay mare, the property of the Right Hon. Frederick William Earl of Bristol.—Mr. Jessopp conducted the Prosecution, and Mr. Dowling, the Defence.—It appeared that the prisoner had formerly been a labourer in the employment of the Earl of Bristol. In the night of the 14th of April the mare in question was stolen from a yard belonging to his lordship's house, near Bury St. Edmund's. Next morning the animal was found in the prisnner's possession at Epping, completely knocked up from fatigue, having travelled 58 miles.—The Jury found the prisoner Guilty.

Thomas Simmonds, who had been confined since last Summer Assizes by ill health, in consequence of his having taken poison, was also tried on a charge of stealing a horse, the property of a farmer in Norfolk, named Gunton. The case was clearly brought home to the prisoner, and he was found Guilty.—Mr. Mirehouse for the defence, was instructed to set up a plea of insanity, which, however, failed in proof.

SALISBURY.

Calley, Esq., v. Cannon.—Mr. Merewether npened the pleadings.—Mr. Sergeant Pell, who conducted the plaintiff's case, said, the plaintiff was a gentleman of considerable property in this county, and was the owner of Burdrop Park. The name of the defendant was Thomas Cannon; and he was described in the declaration as "an idle and dissolnte person," and not an apprentice, in company with his master who was qualified to kill game. It would be natural for the jury to ask, who was the man who had been thus brought under their cognizance as "an idle and dissolute person?" His real name was Thomas Cannon; but he also went under the more high-sounding title of "The Cannon of Windsor;" or "The Windsor Great Gun." He was an individual of no inconsiderable notoriety, and perhaps at the time he was speaking, was pronounced the pugilistic champion of England. The plaintiff had merely to prove two plain propositions: first, that in November last, the defendant had committed a trespass on the property of the plaintiff, by going into a certain wood, in his possession, and there killing game, he not being qualified so to do. The second point was, that the said defendant came within the words of the statute, he being an idle and dissolute person, who had neglected his employment, who had wasted his time in the manner there described. The plaintiff had for a considerable time great reason to believe that the defendant, and other persons of the same sporting character, had trespassed on his property, and had done that which no gentleman would tamely submit to. For his own protection, therefore, he had instituted the present action. Before the period when the different trespasses had taken place, he had let out Burdrop Park to a Mr. Hayne. That individual thought proper to invite down to Burdrop Park, the defendant Cannon, and other characters of an equally respectable description. These individuals had molested the plaintiff most seriously. They had gone to these parts of the plaintiff's estate which were not let to Mr. Hayne, and which they had not the least shadow of pretence for entering. The plaintiff remonstrated with the defendant upon this conduct; and the answer of the latter, accompanied with an oath, was, that he would shoot when he pleased, and where he pleased. He had otherwise behaved himself in a coarse, vulgar, and offensive manner—a manner perfectly befitting his profession, as it was ludicrously called. He should prove these facts, and having done so, he would be entitled to a verdict.—Mr. Manning, for the defence, said, they had heard, from his learned friend, that the plaintiff was a gentleman of considerable property in Wiltshire. It appeared, however, that he had fallen into embarrassments since the mansion and grounds were let to Mr. Hayne. While Mr. Hayne was in possession of this property, he had a number of visitors; and amongst the rest, the defendant Cannon. It appeared from the evidence, that the defendant had gone out with Mr. Hayne's servants, and shot some pheasants. Now the learned counsel apprehended, that if Mr. Hayne had a legal right to employ any one to kill game, he certainly had a right to employ Cannon for that purpose. Mr. Calley had, in fact, no more interest in the game than any one of the jury.—Mr. Justice Gaselee charged the jury. He observed that the statute upon which the action was brought had been passed to protect the property of land-owners from trespass, and also to protect men of low conditinn from the folly of wasting their time in pursuits above their station, instead of employing it for the benefit of themselves and families. That statute, however, was now out of the question. The points for the consideration of the jury were these—whether, at the time of the trespass (which was not denied), Mr. Calley was in possession of this wood? And again, whether Mr. Hayne had a right of shooting on it? The plain question was, whether the plaintiff was, or was not, in possession of the wnod? If he was, he must have a verdict. If he was not, the verdict must be for the defendant. If the jury gave a verdict for the plaintiff, they wnuld consider all the circumstances of the case, and say to what amount of damage he was fairly entitled.—The Jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, with one shilling damages.

Robert Jones, John Smith, Joseph Clements and George Gardner, were indicted—Jones and Smith for having feloniously stolen two geldings, the property of Joseph Foley, on the 6th of July, at King's Norton, in the county of Worcester, and Clements and Gardner for having feloniously received the said geldings, at Milford, in the county of Wilts, knowing them to have been stolen. Smith and Jones were also indicted for having feloniously stolen a chesuut gelding, the property of Thomas Willetts; and Clements and Gardner for having received the gelding, knowing it to have been stolen.—A great number of witnesses were called to prove this case, and the Learned Judge having summed up, the Jury returned a verdict of Guilty of stealing against Robert Jones and John Smith; and Guilty of receiving, knowing the horses to have been stolen, against Joseph Clements and George Gardner.

George Billett and Edward Billett were indicted for feloniously stealing a mare, the property of William Hale, at Shipston-upon-Stour, on the 23d of December last. The Jury, without hesitation, found both the prisoners Guilty.—Judgment of death was then recorded against them.

William Withers was indicted for feloniously assaulting William Webb, on the King's highway, and forcibly taking from his person a metal watch, and other articles, his property, at Broughton-Giffards, in this county. The prosecutor, an infirm old man, was prnceeding homeward on the evening of the 1st of June, when the prisoner darted from the ditch, in which he had concealed himself, struck him a violent blow, and robbed of the property laid in the indictment.—Guilty.—Judgment of death was recorded against the prisoner.

Summer.—The influence of the sun on the Skin in fine weather, when Travelling, Promenading, or enjoying Aquatic Excursions is often subversive of comfort in producing Sun-burns, Freckles, Face Heated and Rough; Lips Parched and Swollen. To oppose these innovations, the most infallible specific is Rowland's Kalydor, which immediately allays the smarting irritability of the Skin, producing a delightful and pleasing Coolness, truly comfortable; it also removes Freckles, Pimples, Spots, and all Cutaneous Eruptions; thus prevents those disorders which disorganize the beauty of the Female Countenance. It imparts a luxuriant and matchless beauty to the complexion; affords soothing relief to Ladies nursing their offspring. To Gentlemen after Shaving, it allays the irritation and smarting pain, and renders the Skin smooth and pleasant. That Rowland's Kalydor elicits these felicitous results one trial will suffice to prove, and satisfactorily establish its reputation.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENES.

We have made those emendations, omissions, and additions, as our invaluable correspondent P. has suggested, and cheerfully find room for his welcome communication.

A correspondent from Paris, says, among other remarks, we "can have but a faint idea of the heat of the weather there,—to which we can only reply, that no weather can give us a better idea of faint than what we have had in London.

Two Verses will find themselves omitted, merely because they refer to "a tale twice told," which on the authority of Shakspeare, "grows tedious in the telling."

To W. W. we have only to give the following couplet:—

"Adieu my dearest W. W.
"We never more will trouble you, lrouble you."

We thank T. A. S. and shall avail ourselves of his information.

The favour of Emilius is most welcome, and extremely clever!

We could answer P. B.'s enquiries about Miss Love, but time will shew.

We have made arrangements for the future insertion of the Promotions in Saturday's Gazette in our paper.

THE AGE.

LONDON, July 24.

If there is one thing we detest more than another, it is the task of speaking about ourselves, coinciding entirely with Lord Byron's trite remark, "that self is a subject on which all men are supposed to be fluent, and none agreeable;" but, in the same degree we object to it on a general principle, so do we consider that there are instances in which silence would amount to a compromise, and forbearance to actual meanness. It was not to be supposed that a Paper which, in the space of 11 weeks, has attained a sale nearly equal to any contemporary, and which, with one solitary exception, has excited an interest beyond all precedent, should escape a very general scrutiny, or be free from all those aspersions and petty machinations, which narrow minds and envious dispositions are so apt to disseminate, but it could never have been contemplated that any establishment would become subject to a system of espionage, which may, with perfect applicability, be designated a species of Inquisition.—During the last week, the Office of the Age has been broken open, and in addition to a few Pounds belonging to our Publisher, and incautiously left there by him, Papers of very considerable importance have been Stolen, a circumstance which, joined with preceding occurrences, has placed the disposition and determination of our antagonists so far beyond doubt, that every faint suspicion is confirmed, and every conjecture established. It must be apparent to the meanest intellect that the office of a paper is a place of all others the least likely to abound with money, inasmuch as it can only be considered the mart of information and publication, and the very last spot a treasurer would select for the deposit of a weekly proceed equal to ours, and the trifling sum now lost was merely the value of a few advertisements received in the course of the day; it would therefore be absolute folly to suppose the object of this burglary was pecuniary gain. No such thing—it was the furtherance of that planned enquiry by which we have for so long a time been molested, and which has at length assumed that alarming shape, demanding at once all our vigilance to expose, and all our energies to stop. We have seen our paper burnt under our very nose—watched it in other instances literally hid, nay stolen—we have heard little Angelo Taylor flounce into Crockford's with the velocity of a squib, and making fully as loud a report, on the subject of our paper, and all its shameful attacks, making himself a more conspicuous blockhead, if possible, than he does in parliament—we have been told by another what a stupid journal it was, and that its Editor was laughed at all over London, and we could have told this noble individual, that was the very thing he wished to be. All this we have heard, and passed it by with that contempt to which it was entitled, but events of a more serious aspect have at length demanded a much more serious attention.—There is not a publisher or printer, of the lower description of character, men at all likely to accept a bribe, who have not been suborned, for the purpose of furnishing their noble employers with every information as to ourselves and our writings,—in some instances the servants of the news venders have been tempted to obstruct the direct sale of the paper,—the persons employed at the Office, watched about for hours, and the residence of our most respectable publisher blockaded, as well as the necessity of preventing detection would admit, the Government offices have been searched, and the securities required from us by the Crown, who have no more to do, beyond that responsibility, with the concerns of the Age, than with those of his Majesty's Privy Council, have been wantonly maligned, suspected, and grossly insulted, and been subject to an institution of scrutiny and examination of the most impudent quality, to which, as perfectly aloof from us, they ought never to have been mean or foolish enough to have submitted. To us this latter position is a matter of perfect indifference, as respects them, but as far as the parties themselves are concerned, "who set it on," we beg leave not to be quite so indifferent, for knowing as we do, the very persons, the sole agitators, and movers, the almoners and grand inquisitors of this contemptible and insolent proceeding, we feel bound to address them with less ceremony, if possible, than they have adopted towards us, but with a force, the extent of which if applied, they will regret as long as they live. To those who may be disposed to complain of the severity of our remarks, or of any malignity in the tendency of our writings, we beg to observe, that our primary object has been to reduce to a proper level, that general tone of conduct which at present characterizes the higher circles of life, outraging at once the respectability, nay the morality of the nation, by painting it to the public gaze in its proper and natural colours, and certainly not with the view, as ascribed to us, of unnecessarily wounding the feelings of any one; and, in the spirit of this determination, we positively state, that if the injurious system of which we have herein complained were of a more general nature, or one in which ourselves were not so immediately involved, we would submit in this present number, without a particle of reserve, the names of every individual concerned in this paltry traffic, an exposure, compared to which all our previous remarks would be deemed merciful. We abstain from this course on the sole principle of keeping our columns free from the very imputation cast upon them by these identical persons, and in a desire not to agrieve any one for any excess committed towards us, unless by so doing public society is to be the direct gainer; for although we could, by a few words, hold up to the extremest height of the world's ridicule, two of the first Lords of the Land, by proofs brought to us by some of the very agents employed, and obtained from those sources of information which they must know are at our command, of their attempts to injure our property by the prevention of sale, and to molest ourselves, by an impertinent interference in the conduct of our undertaking, we will not do so, yet: but we will tell these mistaken Peers what we will do—we will persevere in the fulfilment of our duty with the same unshaken nerve we hitherto have done—fear no antagonist, and shrink from no exposure, that may come to our knowledge, satisfied with the flattering popularity we now enjoy, and we further will not hesitate to visit, from this hour, with a system of torture from which they shall never recoil, any persons hereafter detected in following a pursuit not more injurious or annoying to us, than it is derogatory to the rank they hold in society, and to the line of conduct they ought to maintain in it.

To such a pitch has the genius of Ball Hughes arrived, in his acquisition of the French language, that in translating, the other day, Cibber's Comedy of Love's last shift to his wife, he styled the play "La derniére chemise de l'amour." As Mr. Mathews says, "That boy will be the death of me."

The Calcutta paper just arrived to the 3d of March, furnishes us with the particulars of a series of Stockade fighting, in which the Company's forces under the command of Colonel Richards, have taken possession of Rungpoor, the Capital of Assam, by Capitulation, and by the permission extended to the Burmese troops, to withdraw to their own Country, the whole of the Assam Kingdom has become subject to the British Arms.

It was in 1820 that the Burmese took Rungpoor, and it was the spirit of aggression which they displayed on that occasion, and the disputes consequent upon the flight of some of the Assamese Princes into the Company's territories, that formed one of the causes of the war. At Rangoon, the troops were "about to move" forward. The last plan was said to be, that a small body should proceed onwards, trusting to the weakness of the Burmese, and the disaffection to the Ava Government of the people of the district. There were new reports at Rangoon—but received with caution—of the massacre of the King of Ava by his brother-in-law. The country was also represented to be in a most distracted and disturbed state. Brigadier-General M'Creagh had arrived at Rangoon and was to command there while Sir A. Campbell advanced with the first division. The news from thence is of February the 4th. At Mergui and Martaban, the Siamese have made tenders of their aid against the Burmese, in which the ancient inhabitants of Pegu have also joined.—An attack was made upon the Burmese in Ramre Creek, near Cheduba, on the 2d of February; the British forces retreated with the loss of thirty-two men through the treachery of a guide.

The following extract is from a Dublin paper:—

"On Wednesday night, a gentleman was robbed by a Lady of the Town, of 275*l.* in ten pound notes, also a leather purse containing some silver and a snuff box, with the letters T. H. on the case."

Dublin Morning Post.

The Irish are an ingenious and a very humourous description of people, but we had no idea that any one among them could be found ingenious enough to lose two hundred and seventy five pounds, in ten pound notes, or humourous enough, to carry his snuff-box in his purse.

The last week has been so fertile in general information and events, that we should be neglecting an imperative duty if we did not place them upon record, and having commented upon the only political occurrence which has excited the slightest bruillerie, in another part of our Paper, we reserve a short space here to introduce the extraordinary domestic incidents which have taken place within these few days, and resounded from one end of the empire to the other. The most important circumstance, is the case of a Lancashire barber, who it seems, has been fined by a Magistrate of that County in the sum of Five Shillings, for shaving his brother on the Sabbath, and the said brother in the sum of One Shilling for being shaved, on the said Sabbath, which we take to be about the dearest shave "the brother" ever had in his life—but without going farther into the merits of the case, we cannot help thinking that the Magistrate is quite as close a shaver as the barber in this instance; and as it appears really to have cut the feelings of the poor hair dresser, we beg to suggest to him that on the first professional opportunity which presents itself, he will not fail to cut the Magistrate. Another event of equally vital import, is the apprehension of a Mr. Christmas, late clerk in the Banking-house of Messrs. Hoare and Co. for a trifling misapplication of their property, to the amount of 1000*l.* or so, which it appears he has found it necessary to do, for the purpose of keeping up a very splendid establishment at East Acton, and sundry other keepings, equally essential to his respectability and comfort. This gentleman is rather well known, than otherwise, by his attachment to Mrs. Chatterley, the actress, between whose mother and Mr. Christmas's lawful wife, there have been sundry pugilistic encounters, which have afforded considerable amusement at our Police Offices; and, indeed, from all we have heard upon the subject, even poor Mrs. Chatterley's life has been regularly once a year in a somewhat awkward and critical situation. It is not for us, in the present state of the business, to prejudge Mr. Christmas—God forbid we should—but even supposing his affection for Mrs. Chatterley to have been more violent than it has been described, we have no hesitation in saying, that in the event of his committal, he stands a capital chance of being transported beyond any thing he ever was in his life before—thus far as regards the gentleman—and with reference to the lady, she will certainly have to regret—if things take this turn, not only the loss of Christmas, but her annual Christmas-box.

Our Irish neighbours who would die for any body and for any cause, have lately had a capital subject, for the experiment of all their eccentricities, in the person of Sir Walter Scott, who has had to go through the routine of public gazings, private invitations, and the general paraphernalia of a Stranger's visit. The account of his appearance at the theatre is really funny, for it is said, somewhat quaintly, that towards the evening there was a report spread that the distinguished Baronet would be present, and the audience was consequently a very numerous one; that a very general mention of his name became prevalent all over the house, and even in the applause attendant upon it Sir Walter heartily joined, which was only suspended for a few moments by the appearance of Mr. Abbott, the Manager, enquiring the cause of the apparent disturbance; the whole of which, from beginning to end is a mass of the completest humbug ever put upon paper, for it surely requires very little circumspection to know that the Manager of a Theatre would lose very little time in letting the public into any secret, that presented a prospect of filling his house, and consequently could never have the audacity to come before his audience and ask the origin of a complimentary noise, which he himself had been nstrumental in making, in addition to which Sir Walter Scott is in reality so very modest a man, hat he would not be likely so far to commit himself, as to bin in the applauses of a place of public amusement, which his usual reception in such situations must have coninced him were meant for himself; in short it is, in the sual style of our Hibernian friends, a complimentary libel n this mighty genius. The late fight between men, and he ensuing one betwcen a lion and dogs, have also furnished fund of very extensive conversation since our last number, nd in addition to these interesting subjects, we have to noice another beast quite as extraordinary as either of the wo last mentioned—we allude to Mr. Long Wellesley, whose treatment of his amiable wife has furnished "food or talk," and whose subsequent refusal, for the fourth time, o "come to the scratch" with a Mr. Bligh, who has expressed himself anxious to have as much satisfaction as possible, smacks somewhat of "the better part of valour—liscretion." We however only mention all these things en passant, being perfectly assured there is something more n all of them than occurs at this present writing to our numble imaginations; but leave so important a conjecture, to the more fertile imaginations of our readers.

FASHIONABLE MOVEMENTS.

Air "Ye shepherds who live on the Mountains."
Old Song.

Attend ev'ry votary of Fashion,
Take one other peep at the Age,
Though it throw you perhaps in a passion,
'Tis folly to publish your rage.

There's simple "sweet William" of Gloucester,
Since April, has puzzled his brains,
To find out with Higgins and Foster,
How the deuce the Sun shines, when it rains.

And, since Coburg gave his last dinner,
He's lived on the remnants, (says Cust;)
So no wonder young Seaton gets thinner,
For at Claremont he can't get a crust.

The Grand Master's gone down with Shelley,
To study projectiles and learn,
How the Blues can manœuvre, and how they
A right flank, or left flank can turn.

John Walpole, that selfish self lover,
No longer "au palais" mounts guard,
For he's scarce time to fire and recover,
Little *'s duty's so hard.

So Frank primus, now "nulli secundus,"
Is placed in the Guards in his stead:
Tho' the Coldstream are not quite jucundus,
To see such a youth at their head.

There's Uxbridge for Windsor has left town,
To take the command of his corps,
Forgetting the weight on his own crown,
When he quizzes poor dear Tullamore.

There's Berkeley most loth, in his fury,
With his winnings at Crockford's to budge,
Has left town to pay for his Jury,
And, what's rather new, for his Judge.

You know that Flint thought 'twas his duty,
To hand the Sieur Begrez down stairs,
So my Lady now plays with Velluti,
Who consoles her—at least with his airs.

Have you heard of the work that's intended
Shall shortly come forth from the press?
'Tis Johnston revised—not amended—
Curante Lord Brudenell "I guess."

Tom Duncombe, who's grown a sad punster,
Therefore dines now and then with old Cork,
Gave a toast—'twas thus told by Count Munster
"Here's de Lane, vat is high road to York!!"

In the Papers, it also is stated,
From Cambridge, that "Whylley, M. A.*
To a living's been lately collated,
'Tis somewhere in *Bed*ford they say.

Lady Normanby's now got no dobbins
To her Coach or her Britchka to put,
As my Lord rides and tyes with George Robins,
Though he'd much rather go upon foot.

George Anson, that gallant deceiver,
Now votes pretty Smith a great bore,
Since Bob, like a jealous retriever,
Nosed his game, and then showed him the door.

There's Drummond at Twickenham is fishing,
Where the nasty man swam on his back,
Tho' Talbot (for max alone wishing),
Declares he'll catch nothing but Jack.

Ball dropped the new pun which Raikes gave him,
So new, it made Valletort stare,
For he swore that a lady had told him,
That Hertford had chosen her Mayor.

Tom Raikes, for the good of the Nation,
Is writing on "beauty and grace,"
Recommending we see vaccination,
As a Sine qua non for the face.

Sir George, who can't stomach our papers,
Has purchased at Clifden, the Spring,
Where he'll gorge him on turbot and Capers,
Whilst Rowland of Kitty will sing.

Lady Peyton has vowed "by Old Harry"
She ne'er will receive Mr. B—
So if Jemmy don't hasten to marry,
The bloom will soon pass from Tree.

Lord Chesterfield always loved dealing,
So he's lately turn'd "Marchand en Gros,"
And Madame, who thinks it no stealing,
Merely retails a little or so.

Sawnie Forbes has set off for the country,
Where he swears in broad Scotch, "twa na farce"
When Bradshaw, with gentle effrontery,
Begged he would make himself scarce!!

Of Dullish, de Roos and John Lyster,
And others, we've plenty to state,
But the heat makes one's fingers so blister,
We beg 'till next number they'll wait.

THEATRES.

The two winter establishments have terminated their campaign in consequence, as we are given to understand, of the intense heat of the weather, in the actual truth of which the wags are of course rather sceptical—and, although, we certainly have heard of houses being too hot to hold one, of people being burnt out, and so on, yet, we should rather say that the actual cause of this hasty retreat has originated in the miserable attendance to witness their French Coronations. Be that as it may, our business is no longer with that subject, and the only truth which now remains for our fulfilment is a general comment on the past events of the season. By a much more organized system of operation, Covent Garden commenced its career in due time and took the lead of its rival, and the success which fashion invariably gives every thing, afforded this Establishment an unusual degree of popularity, which was afterwards maintained through the Season by the appearance of Miss Foote, who became an actress from vice, which she never was from virtue. In this degree of security the Managers have appeared to us to proceed throughout the year without making an effort entitling them to the least dramatic respect, and have terminated their exertions by a general degradation of their Company, in reducing them to the disastrous necessity of appearing as downright puppets, but while we think it proper to pay every proper eulogium to Mr. Kemble's exertions, and express our fullest reliance on his judgment and zeal, we cannot too strongly deprecate that pernicious system of meanness and avarice which has actuated the conduct of that Scotch mountebank, Captain Forbes, who, permitted by the gold in his purse and the brass in his face to exercise an undue authority over concerns of which he must be ignorant as the ropes he has been accustomed to handle, has at once passed an insult on the profession he has intruded into, which the profession ought to resent.

The late period at which Drury-Lane opened, and the immediate failure of an expensive spectacle, tended to damp the prospects of its season; but by a continuation of energy it rose above the consequences of an early error, and we are induced to hope, has wound up with a balance in favour. We cannot permit this opportunity to pass by, without again recurring to the gross inconsistency and almost fatal pre-judgment, exercised by the London audience generally during the year, for, while the whole town, led on by that libellous Cockney who controuls the Times, was assailing poor Kean in so merciless a manner, the same set of fellows were upholding Miss Foote, and are to this hour supporting persons worse if possible in fulfilling the general dictates of virtue. Our limits will not now admit of that extension of remark it is our fixed determination to pay, with a view to forwarding the general interests of the Patent theatres, and we shall therefore resume the subject at a more seasonable opportunity, trusting that as far as the evils they are now subject to are brought on by themselves, they wil be by themselves rectified, and hoping their directors will feel assured that as far as the public are concerned, we, as a portion of their advisers, will use every means in our power to properly direct their taste. The only jokes among this interesting part of mankind which have this week come under our knowledge, are that Mr. Liston, whose weekly salary is, we hear, above 50*l.*, played two or three evenings lately to the sum of 20*l.* and that Mrs. Faucitt has, during the last week, made very heavy complaints of her suffering under an oppression of Fahren heat.

FASHIONABLE MISCELLANY.

On Tuesday a Privy Council was held at Windsor Castle, which was attended by the Earl of Westmoreland, the Earl of Liverpool, the Earl of Harrowby, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the Hon. W. Fremantle. After the Council, his Majesty inspected the progress in the renovation of the works at the Castle, and returned to the Royal Lodge by the Little Park.

Monday was the day appointed for laying the first stone of the intended splendid Mansion-house for the Duke of York, in the precincts of the King's Palace, in St. James's, commonly called the Stable-yard. The necessary arrangements were made for the ceremony. A temporary platform was erected, covered with green baize, to descend to the spot where the stone was laid, which was on the west side of the garden, nearly opposite to the entrance of the residence of the Princess Augusta. About half-past five o'clock in the afternoon, the Duke of York and the Duke and Duchess of Rutland entered the garden from St. James's Park. They were received by Mr. Phillip and Mr. Benjamin Wyatt, the architects appointed to erect the building. After waiting a short time, the distinguished personages were conducted to the spot over the platform as above described, the Duke of York leading the Duchess of Rutland. There were no spectators admitted into the grounds. On the arrival of the Duke of York at the spot, where the stone was drawn up by a windlass, all present and the workmen took off their hats. The stone being adjusted by a plum rule and a square, one of the architects presented the Duchess of Rutland with a silver gilt trowel made for the occasion, with which the Duchess proceeded to spread the mortar under the stone, previous to its being laid, with her lovely delicate hand; and afterwards, on the stone being laid, the noble Duchess struck it with a mallet prepared for the occasion. After this proceeding a square white glass bottle was placed in an aperture in the stone prepared for the purpose, in which was put a sovereign, a half-sovereign, a crown piece, a half-crown piece, a shilling, a sixpence, a three-penny piece, a two-penny, and a silver penny piece, also a copper penny, a halfpenny, and a farthing, all of his present Majesty's coinage. A plate was also let into the stone, with an appropriate inscription, describing for whom the edifice was erected, naming the Royal Duke's titles, rank, &c. as given from the Herald's College. As the royal Duke was retiring from the ground, the workmen cheered his Royal Highness with the most rapturous and gratifying huzzas. The Royal Duke, previous to his leaving the ground, ordered every man employed on the occasion a liberal donation. The erection of the mansion will proceed with all possible speed.

Death of the Duke of St. Albans.—Died on Sunday morning, at his house in St. James's-square, the Most Noble William Beauclerc, 8th Duke of St. Albans, Hereditary Grand Falconer of England, in the sixtieth year of his age; he is succeeded in his titles and estates by his eldest son, William Aubrey de Vere, Earl of Burford, now Duke of St. Albans.

Rossini, the great composer, has been seriously indisposed at Paris since last Saturday. It was expected, however, that no serious result would ensue. On Tuesday, Madame Pasta was taken suddenly ill, and the opera of Othello in which she was to appear was changed for La Donna del Lago.

Generals Count de Segur and Gourgaud have had a meeting, notwithstanding all the efforts of the police to prevent it, and both of these Officers have been wounded. It is supposed by some people that the matter will not rest here, notwithstanding that the seconds in the affair have decided that the matter ought not to proceed any farther. The duel was decided a la Francais, by the sword, and not by pistols.

Vauxhall.—The present season has been a more propitious one than the spirited conductors of these Gardens have experienced for some years, and it would be neglecting a very proper sense of duty to deny that they are entitled to every patronage they enjoy. Throughout the week, this agreeable scene has been attended by many of the principal votaries of fashion, and on Tuesday in particular a very brilliant assemblage of society made their appearance, in compliment to the celebration of the Coronation Anniversary.

Our limits will not admit of our entering into any analysis of the general merits of the Cosmorama, but we are free to say that we think it one of the most interesting exhibitions now in the metropolis.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE

The following letter has been put in our Editorial box, evidently under an impression of the bearer that it was a general post-office; but as the direction would have defied the research of all the postmasters in Europe—as it was unsealed, and also as the inside presented no address by which the writer could be traced, we transcribe it verbatim et literatim, that it may reach his eye. We recommend the subscribed George Keacy to Mr. Brougham's serious attention, as Lexicographer to the Patent Cockney School, for any thing of a more literary, humourous, yet pathetic, and at the same time original character, it has seldom been our lot to peruse.

THE ARMY.

Major-General Woodford, it is understood, will be appointed to Malta, vice Lieutenant-General Sir Manley Power, K.C.B.—The 79th (Cameronian Highlanders) Regiment, now stationed at Kilkenny, has received orders to prepare for embarkation for Quebec.—The 37th (North Hampshire) Regiment of Infantry is ordered, on being relieved at Quebec by the 79th Foot, to embark for England.—The 72d (The Duke of Albany's Own Highlanders), now in Edinburgh Castle, is ordered to proceed to Portpatrick, to embark for Ireland.—A Detachment, belonging to the 1st Battalion of the Grenadier Regiment of Guards, marched this morning from Windsor to the Tower, for the purpose of mounting guard in that Fortress to-morrow, in order to enable the 2d Battalion of the same Corps to proceed from that station, on Monday morning, for Paddington, to embark on board Canal-boats for Liverpool, en route to Dublin.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

The Boston Palladium of June 20, contains a long account of the ceremony of laying the first stone of the intended monument on Bunker-hill, to commemorate the celebrated battle on that spot at the commencement of the revolutionary war. The grand procession was composed, first, of a military escort; then followed the survivors of the battle :—

These worthies were in eight barouches and carriages, and were about forty in number ; each wearing on his breast, a badge, "Bunker-hill, June 17, 1775," and many bearing the implements of war they used in the fight.

Next came between one and two hundred revolutionary officers and soldiers, each bearing an appropriate badge.

THE B. H. M. ASSOCIATION,

In full numbers, six deep, all wearing the badge, "B.H.M.A."

Hon. Mr. Webster, President, and the other officers of the B.H.M. Association.

The Rev. Dr. Kirkland, the Rev. Mr. Thaxter (a revolutionary chaplain ;) and the Rev. Mr. Walker, Chaplains of the day.

Directors and Committees of the Association.

General Lafayette, in a coach and four, accompanied by Lieut.-General Lallemand.

Mr. George Washington Lafayette, and the General's suite in a carriage.

The hon. Council, Senate, and House of Representatives, accompanied by the Adjutant-General, Secretary, Treasurer, &c.

Governor Fenner, of Rhode Island.

r. Barbour, Secretary of War of the United States and others.

Delegations from various States.

Delegation from the Pilgrim Society in Plymouth.

Officers of the United States Navy, and Army, and of the Militia in Uniform.

Citizens.

The Masonic Procession succeeded.

This section of the procession was very splendid, and exceeded two thousand of the fraternity, all with their jewels and regalia. Of the regalia of the Grand Lodge was a golden urn, borne by the Deputy Grand Master, containing a relic of the departed brother George Washington.

In this order the whole proceeded from the State House about half-past ten.

Arrived at the monument, the various sections of the procession, formed in squares around it ; when the Grand Master of Massachusetts, accompanied by General Lafayette, President Webster, the past Grand Masters, District Deputy Grand Master, bearing the architectural implements, the Grand Wardens, bearing the corn, wine, and oil, in vases, the Grand Chaplain, Grand Treasurer, and Principal Architect, repaired round the foundation stone, which having been squared, levelled, and plumbed, by the Grand Master, brother Fayette, and Mr. Webster, and declared to be true and proper, a casket was deposited in the cavity of the stone, containing coins, &c., and a silver plate with the following INSCRIPTION.

"On the XVII. day of June, MDCCCXXV. at the request of the Bunker-Hill Monument Association, the most worshipful John Abbot, Grand Master of Masons in Massachusets, did in the presence of General Lafayette, lay this corner stone of a monument to testify the gratitude of the present generation to their fathers, who, on the 17th of June, 1775, here fought in the cause of their country, and of free institutions, the memorable BATTLE of BUNKER HILL, and with their blood vindicated for their posterity the privileges and happiness this land has since enjoyed."

After the ceremony was over, the guests and subscribers to the dinner were then escorted to Bunker-Hill, where an edifice, covering 3,400square feet of ground had been erected, and in which, at 12 tables, running its entire length, (400 feet,) 4,000 plates were laid, which were all occupied.

After dinner many appropriate toasts were given, and odes recited, by various individuals of the company.

On the health of General Lafayette being drank, he rose, and thus expressed himself:—Gentlemen, I will no longer trespass on your time than to thank you in the name of my revolutionary companions in arms and myself for the testimonies of esteem and affection, I may say, of filial affection, which have been bestowed upon us on the memorable celebration of this anniversary day ; and to offer our fervent prayers for the preservation of that republican freedom, equality, and self-government—that blessed union between the states of the confederacy for which we have fought and bled, and on which rest the hopes of mankind. Permit me to propose the following sentiment—"Bunker-Hill, and the holy resistance to oppression which has already enfranchised the American hemisphere—the next half century's jubilee's toast shall be—to enfranchised Europe."

Of the surviving officers of the battle, there were present seven captains, three lieutenants, and two ensigns. No field or staff officers now living.—In the first carriage containing the officers who were in the battle, were—

Colonel Clarke, aged 95 ; Captain B. Mann, aged 85 ; Captain Samuel Russell Trevett, aged 74 ; General Henry Dearborn, aged 74.—The aggregate ages, 328 years. These were all captains, and distinguished in the battle. Captain Trevett was the senior officer present, he having been a captain of artillery on that great day.

MILAN, JULY 4.—The Parliament of the Ionian Islands has enacted some new regulations respecting the payment of import and export duties. The export duty of 2 colonnatti per barrel on oil, the produce of that island, is abolished ; and instead of it, a duty of 18 per cent. ad valorem, is to be paid.

Articles of foreign produce or manufacture, imported in ships that are, bona fide, Ionian, British, or Austrian, shall pay at the custom-house of the island in which they are imported, a duty of seven per cent. ad valorem, instead of six per cent. ; and imported in ships of any other nation, eight instead of seven per cent. ad valorem, as was fixed by the act of parliament of April 5, 1819.

All articles of foreign produce or manufacture, after paying the import duty in one of the islands, may be carried free of any duty to any other island of these States, it being well understood, however, that they are to be conveyed in ships bona fide Ionian ; for if they are conveyed in ships of any other nation, these articles shall pay a duty of five per cent.

The duty of half per cent. hitherto required, is entirely abolished.

Every article of the produce of the United States of the Ionian Islands, may be exported without restriction, subject only to the duty of three per cent. ad valorem, excepting oil and currants, but including soap, wines and spirituous liquors, which have hitherto been subject to higher duties.

Wines produced in one of the islands of the States may be imported into any other of the islands of these same States, paying a duty of 40 obole per barrel only, the higher duties hitherto imposed being abolished.

"HALIFAX, JUNE 24—On Monday last, the Trusty, Capt. Finlay, dropped down and anchored at the beach, from whence, on Wednesday morning she proceeded on her intended voyage for Calcutta, on account of an Association lately formed in this town. The committee intrusted with the management of the concern, having taken care to acquire the best information, made every preparation for this long voyage, without the loss of a moment—scarcely three weeks having now elapsed since the subscription was paid up :—Halifax has, therefore, the honour of having been the first to embrace, and take the benefit of the liberal and enlightened intentions of his Majesty's Government, in extending the trade of these Loyal Colonies to every quarter of the habitable Globe—So, 'God grant, that the good ship may complete her destined voyage in safety!'"

The master of the Brothers, from Newfoundland, states, that on the night previous to her sailing, another fire had destroyed sixteen houses there.

The Gibraltar Chronicle of the 24th of June says—"A Spanish mistica, with a cargo of wheat, was the day before yesterday detained by a Colombian privateer, at the back of the rock. On their allowing her to proceed she was boarded by a revenue boat, with the intention, as was stated, of considering her as a captured vessel, which being observed by the privateer, she was again taken possession of after the revenue boat got off, and was subsequently burnt."

Letters from Maranham, dated 9th ult., state, the northern provinces of the Brazils are very unhealthy, on account of the continuance of excessive drought. The prices of cotton had advanced greatly, on account of the rapid rise in England.

The Gazette of Corfu, received via Milan, contains a decree abolishing feudal tenures and restrictions, so far as regards the preventing the alienation of landed property. The preamble of this decree states that—

"It being one of the principal objects of the Government to encourage agriculture, and experience having demonstrated that one of the greatest impediments to its progress is the existence of property rendered inalienable by means of feudal restrictions, therefore, with a view to put an end to this evil, increasing at the same time the prosperity of the state and of private persons, by the authority of his Excellency the President of the most Illustrious Senate, with the assent and advice of the most Noble Legislative Assembly of the Ionian Islands, in the second Session of the second Parliament, and with the approbation of his Excellency the Lord High Commissioner of the Sovereign Protector, it is ordained and enacted as follows."

The law itself, in seven short articles, provides, for the abolition (partly immediate and partly gradual) of all feudal tenures or restrictions, hindering or impeding the alienation of landed property." It is dated Corfu, May 28, 1825.

The Etoile contains an article from the Austrian Observer, dated Vienna, the 8th inst. which states, on the authority of letters from Smyrna of the 17th June, that fresh advantages had been gained over the Greeks by the Egyptian Army in the Morea ; Ibrahim Pacha having advanced with 8,000 men, had attacked a body of Greeks, chiefly Moreats, to the number of 1,700, entrenched in a position to the north of Modon, and having surrounded them, they were destroyed after a desperate resistance. The Allgemeine Zeitung of the 14th July, also gives news unfavourable to the Greeks.

The Journal des Debats has a letter from Madrid, of the 7th instant, which describes the perilous and disturbed state of Spain, and the manner in which the town of Malaga had been saved from imminent danger from a plot (prepared at Madrid, as it is asserted) among the royalist volunteers, of whom a battalion had been disarmed ; and many persons in the town engaged in the conspiracy had made their escape, while others had been arrested

EXTRACTS FROM VAN DIEMEN'S LAND GAZETTES.—An advance of one penny upon the 2 pound loaf of bread has been made by several of the bakers during the week, in consequence of the late sudden rise in the price of wheat, which now obtains 10s. per bushel. One miller, who we understand has a considerable quantity on hand, will not even part with it at that price.—Fine bread is now 6d. per loaf.

Many thousand oranges, shipped in the Prince Regent, by some for sale, and by others as intended presents for friends here, were utterly spoiled during the passage. One gentleman (Captain Lambton), who speculated in this fruit, is thereby a loser of more than £70.

From the increasing demand for wheat to supply the Sydney market, a scarcity of that article has already evinced itself at Port Dalrymple, eleven shillings per bushel having been offered and refused.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The plan of Mr. Nash, the architect, for the improvement of his Majesty's Palace of Buckingham House, includes a magnificent Colonnade, of the Corinthian Order. The capitals are now preparing at the Ornamental Stone Works of Croggon and Company, late Coade's. Artists are employed not only upon the caps of the columns, but the paunels of a pedestal, upon which figures are to appear in basso, and alto relievo.

Kew Gardens, to the opening of which there had been some interruptions, are now regularly opened every Sunday evening, till half-past nine o'clock. In one of the hot-houses, in the botanical gardens at Kew, there is a shoot from the willow that sweeps over and shades Bonaparte's grave at St. Helena. After having been cut from the tree, the little branch was put into earth, and it struck root. On arriving in England, it was presented to his Majesty ; and as our King wars not with the dead, it was ordered to Kew, and the memorial directed to be taken great care of. It is now hardly a foot high, but it is in full leaf ; it is taken special care of, not a leaf of it being suffered to be touched. The King of late has frequently visited at Kew, and always on such occasions walked through the Botanical Gardens.

O'CONNELL'S POPULARITY.—The following account was proved before the Commissioners of Bankrupts, in a case wherein a friend of Mr. O'Connell had become insolvent some short time since. The items appeared in this man's schedule, forming part of his account with Mr. O'Connell. "To providing tar-barrels and other materials for bonfires, on your visit to Killarney, 5*l.* 13s. 9d."—"To providing ropes, and paying the men who drew your carriage into town, 11*l.* 7s. 6d." "To three casks of porter to the people who were shouting, 6*l.* 16s. 6d."

Ann Leyson, of the village of Porthyrhyd, Carmarthenshire, died lately, aged 107 years. Within a mile of her late dwelling, there are now living three persons whose united ages amount to 297 years.

MORE THAN "TWA JAMIE JAMIESONS."—Mr. John Sinclair, from London, who is now performing at our Theatre, took places for himself and wife in the Umpire, for Liverpool ; at the same time, Mr. John Sinclair, of this town, took places for himself and wife in the same coach ; unknown to each other, the two John Sinclairs and their wives occupied the inside of the coach from London to Liverpool. In the course of conversation, it came out that the three children of the said John Sinclairs were of the same name—namely, their eldest daughters, "Christiana," their eldest sons, "John," their youngest daughters, "Catherina."—Liverpool Mercury.

COMMENCEMENT OF THE HARVEST.—A field of oats, the property of Mr. Smith, of the Field, near this City, was cut last week. The field contained twelve acres, and was sown with last year's seed. Mr. Jones, of the Black Swan, in this city, also yesterday cut a field of Rye.—Hereford Independent.

The steam-packet brought over from France, a few days since, a most extraordinary being—"a living skeleton." This strange lusus naturæ consists of nothing but skin and bone—at least the former is so thin and unencumbered with flesh, that every bone can be as distinctly seen as in a real skeleton. His face is the only part which at all approximates to any other living creature ; it appears that of a man very ill, and as he wears loose clothes, his strange conformation is of course not suspected by those who merely see him when walking. His daily food does not amount to more than two ounces per day ; and on the passage from Dieppe he took one glass of wine. He can walk on a smooth surface with the assistance of two persons ; but being unable to do more than barely lift his foot from the ground, his power of loco-motion ceases where the ground is at all uneven or steep. The packet landed her passengers at the Chain Pier, and he walked along the surface of the platforms to the shore, leaning in the way I have described on the arms of two men. The circumstance being soon whispered about, his appearance attracted great curiosity among the crowds of spectators by whom the pier was thronged when he landed. He is, I understand, a Swiss by birth, and has been in this strange state all his life. He has been brought to this country by a Colonel Williams, for the purpose of being exhibited, and was immediately sent off to London with great care, where, no doubt, he will form a new wonder for the gaping curiosity of John Bull.

At the Gloucester Sessions, held on Wednesday last, the Grand Jury returned a true bill against Samuel Young Griffith, the Proprietor, and William Henry Haplin, the Editor, of the Cheltenham Chronicle, for the assault committed on Mr. Judge, the Editor of the Cheltenham Journal, on the 28th of June last. The indictment has been removed into the Court of King's Bench.

SIR WALTER SCOTT.—Sir Walter Scott visited the Bank of Ireland on Monday ; he then proceeded to the residence of the Provost, and was introduced by him to the College library. The door of the library was guarded by a surly porter, and not even the ladies who came to catch a glimpse of the "Great Unknown" could obtain admission. This is worthy of that college where a system of exclusion and illiberality has long prevailed—a system abhorrent to the pursuits of literature, and disgraceful to the country. A curious circumstance occurred during Sir Walter's visit on Saturday to the library adjoining St. Patrick's Cathedral. The deputy librarian, who happens to be a collegian, having got into conversation with the "Great Unknown," wished to take him by surprize, and thereby prove his own dexterity. With this view he exclaimed, "Oh, Sir Walter, do you know that it is only lately I have had time to get through your Redgauntlet." Sir Walter—"Sir, I never met with such a book." The librarian stood rebuked, and said nothing. Sir Walter is exceedingly lame. The lameness, we should think, by his manner of walking, proceeds from a hip-disease, with which he was probably afflicted in his youthful days. The sketch given of him in Peter's Letters is extremely faithful. He partook of a dejeune at the Provost's, and dined in the evening with Mr. W. Hartstonge.—Dublin Morning Register.

THE COLOMBIAN PRESIDENT.—It appears by the accounts from Lima, that the sum of 1,000,000 of dollars has been twice offered to the illustrious Bolivar, by the Congress of Peru, for his services in effecting the liberation of that country. The following is an extract from the President's second refusal :—"I repeat, that without accepting the favour in question, my services have already been rewarded in an infinitely greater degree than had ever been hoped. Your Excellency knows," he addresses the President, "that Congress has omitted nothing calculated to be honourable to me. They have named me Father and Saviour of Peru : they have decreed me the honours of Perpetual President ; they have ordered a medal to be struck with my portrait ; they have called me Liberator ; they have invested me with the command of Peru ; and, finally, offered me an enormous fortune. I have accepted, with pleasure, all, except the last : that I am forbidden to accept by the laws of my country, and those of my own heart."

The carrier pigeon belonging to Mr. Henry England, of the Green Man, Kent-road, brought the first news of Cannon's defeat at Warwick, on Tuesday. The bird, which is of the Flemish kind, was let loose at twenty minutes past one o'clock, and reached the Kent-road within three hours.

When Dr. Duncombe was head master of the King's School, Canterbury, he at one time gave great offence to the scholars by enforcing some strict regulations among the Latin Students. A day or two after, the following pun was chalked upon his front door :—

"The colour of a mouse—the trap for a louse—
"Is the name of the man that lives in this house."

The youthful author was soon detected, expelled the school, and, in a few weeks after, committed suicide! The old Tory master possessed too stern a nature to applaud the wit.

The celebrated Mazarine Bible, printed on vellum, was purchased at Evans's, by Mr. Perkins, the opulent brewer, for 480 guineas. The Duke of Sussex bought the Latin Bible, in 2 vols. without date, place, or name of the printer, but undoubtedly from the press of Ulric Zell, for 44 guineas, likewise the Latin Bible printed at Nuremberg, by Frisner et Sensenschmin, 1475, for 48 pounds. Mr. Thorpe purchased the excessively rare Latin Bible, in 2 vols. without signatures, date, place, or name of the printer, but certainly one of the earliest and noblest productions of the press of Mentelin, and printed before 1466, for 180 guineas. Mr. Thorpe also bought the original drawings by Francis Grosse, most of which have been engraved for the Antiquities, for 100 guineas.

POLICE.

BOW-STREET.—Mr. Joseph Chilton, a brewer, carrying on business a few miles from London, was brought before Mr. HALLS, on Tuesday evening, on a warrant, charged by his wife with assaulting and beating her. Mr. Chilton was a rough, homespun, farmer-like looking middle-aged man ; his wife a delicately-formed well-dressed woman, wearing an eye-glass, and having a good deal the appearance of a lady of some fashion. The contrast was most remarkable in the manner as well as the appearance of the couple.—Mrs. Chilton, in a soft and under-tone, savouring somewhat of affectation, began her complaint in these words—"I have to complain, Sir, of much harshness of conduct on the part of Mr. Chilton—extreme harshness, excessive harshness, I assure you Sir," and here the lady paused and shed tears. He curses me, and calls me such horrible names—names which I cannot of course repeat, and I assure you that my sufferings are beyond endurance.—Mr. HALLS—All that may be very true, but of mere words I cannot take cognizance. You charge him in this warrant with assaulting and beating you, and you must state some specific act of that kind to enable me to interfere.—Mrs. Chilton, with some hesitation, stated that, a short time ago, her husband compelled her to get into his gig, in order, as he said, to take her to her mother's, at Edmonton, and when he got her in he kept her for some time in a position which exposed her in a way that was truly shocking to her feelings. [Here Mrs. Chilton, with great simplicity of manner, suited the action to the word, by drawing her petticoats nearly to her knees, in order to describe the manner in which she was exposed.] Instead of taking her to her mother's he drove 13 or 14 miles down the St. Alban's road, and then, when night had come on, and they were on a lone spot, he forced her to get out of the gig, and then drove away and left her, in spite of her cries and entreaties to him not to be guilty of such cruelty as to leave her, a poor defenceless woman as she was, to the mercy of any ruffian who might pass that way. It was then quite dark, and when he had got out of hearing, not knowing which way to go or what to do, she kneelt down and prayed to God to direct her footsteps. When she arose from her knees she looked about, and saw a light, apparently issuing from the window of a cottage at some distance. She approached, and found it to be the porter's lodge of a gentleman's mansion. She made her situation known to the inhabitants of the mansion, and was received and entertained for the night with great hospitality. She went the next day to her mother's at Edmonton.—The defence of Mr. Chilton to this charge consisted of a relation of circumstances in palliation of his conduct, rather than a denial of the facts alleged. She was, he said, extremely high in her notions, and talked and acted in a way that he, who was only a plain-dealing, straight-forward, industrious sort of a man, did not understand nor like. Nothing was good enough for her, and she was always ridiculing and abusing him. He was willing to have her back with him, and wrote to her to that effect, and offered to treat her kindly. He actually started to go to her mother's to fetch her, but on the way he met a stage-coach, the driver of which gave him two letters from his wife, one addressed to himself, and the other to a Mrs. Sedgewick, a friend of hers. He took the liberty, however, of opening them both. His own contained plenty of abuse, and in that to Mrs. Sedgewick he was ridiculed most unmercifully, and to mend the matter, it contained a request to Mrs. Sedgewick to be sure and let Captain Laroche know where she (Mrs. Chilton) was, as he would be very anxious to know. Mr. Chilton read a copy of Mrs. Sedgewick's letter, and its contents and his manner of reading it was too much for the gravity even of the Bench itself. In reply to this defence, it was stated by Mrs. Chilton and her friends, that the defendant was an idle man and much given to the bottle, and that he had spent all her money.—Mr. Halls said he had heard quite enough to convince him that the plaintiff and defendant would never live happily together, and therefore they were much better apart. As it was not likely Mr. Chilton would soon have an opportunity of again assaulting his wife, he would not put him to the trouble and inconvenience of sending to a distant place for bail, but would suspend the warrant, so that if he broke the peace in any way, he would be again arrested upon it.—The warrant was accordingly handed back to the officer, to be held en terrorem over the head of Mr. Clinton.

On Monday Sir Richard Birnie was occupied the greater part of the afternoon in the examination of Mr. William Christmas, late a clerk in the banking-house of Messrs. Hoares, whose name has so often appeared in the public prints, in connexion with that of a well known actress of the Covent Garden establishment (Mrs. Chatterley,) he being charged with having embezzled an Exchequer-bill for 1,000*l.* the property of his late employers, and applied the proceeds to his own use. The examination took place in a private room, but we learned that the leading facts of the case were these :—The prisoner had been about 15 years in the employment of the Messrs. Hoares, and a considerable degree of respect was entertained for him by the firm, but since his connexion with the lady alluded to, there had been so many statements and such frequent exposures in the public papers respecting that connexion, that the partners felt themselves called upon to dismiss him. They had, moreover, discovered that he had lately taken a splendid house near East Acton, at which he and the lady resided, and that they had set up their carriage. The partners, in consequence of this discovery, were the more confirmed in their determination not to keep him any longer in their service, and about a fortnight ago he was dismissed. In the course of his employment, he was entrusted with the negociation of Exchequer bills to a large amount, and after his discharge from the firm, it was discovered that he had embezzled and applied to his own use a bill for 1,000*l.*, and there was too much reason to suppose that his dishonesty was not confined to that single transaction. One of the partners in consequence applied at this office on Monday morning, and Salmon was sent to apprehend the prisoner. He was conducted on his arrival to a private room, and immediately afterwards sent for Sir Richard Birnie, and offered to make a full disclosure of all that he could be charged with, but Sir R. Birnie declined hearing any confession until the prosecutors came. When the examination came on, the prisoner professed the same willingness to disclose every thing, and after some conversation on that subject, he was informed that he might make any communication he pleased, by letter, to his late employers, after he reached the prison to which he would be sent.—He was committed to the House of Correction, Coldbath-fields, for further examination, and was informed that his solicitor might have an order to visit him, but that leave would not be given for the admission of his friends indiscriminately. He will be examined next week.

Mr. Henry White, a person charged with having defrauded his Majesty's Government, and the South Sea Company, by forging certain documents, representing himself to be the administrator of the late Captain John Markham Covenant, of the East India Company's service, underwent a final examination before Sir Richard Birnie, on Thursday. A great number of witnesses from the Stamp Office, the South Sea House, and Doctors' Commons, were examined in support of both those charges, and after a long and careful investigation, the prisoner—who, by the advice of his solicitor, declined saying any thing in his defence, was fully committed to Newgate for trial at the next Old Bailey Sessions. Before he was removed from the bar, he requested to be allowed to remain at the House of Correction until the day of trial. He was suffering from indisposition, he said, and Mr. Webb, the surgeon of that prison, was so well acquainted with his constitution, that he was desirous of remaining under his care as long as possible.—To this request, Sir Richard Birnie replied, that however desirous he was of affording accommodation to any person in his unfortunate situation, he should not feel justified in departing from the usual custom in a case of this importance.

Mansion-house.—A young man named James Bond was brought before the Lord Mayor, charged by the officers of St. Benet Fink, with having deserted his wife and family. He is a man of respectable appearance, and rather fashionably dressed. —His wife, who carried one of her children in her arms, and is a young person of very interesting appearance, was called up to prove the desertion. She stated that she had two young children by the defendant, and that he had had a business as a dyer, in Threadneedle-street, which with moderate industry produced £400 a-year; that he went on prosperously until he unfortunately became connected with some abandoned women, who seduced him from his home, and soon caused such neglect and irregularity in his conduct as to destroy all his chances of success. Mrs. Bond said, that she had not only to deplore this adverse state of things, but the correspondent change which took place in her husband's treatment of herself; that he upon one occasion brought a woman into the house, and that she (Mrs. Bond) believed she owed her life to the humanity of that woman, who was virtuous enough not to endure that a married woman should be so severely dealt with by a husband, and prevented him from putting into effect the threatened violence. At length, he completely deserted her and his children, and she was obliged to have recourse to the parish. Mrs. Bond, at the same time that she mentioned these particulars, did not appear to have uttered a word from vindictive motives. On the contrary, she seemed overwhelmed with affliction. The beadle of the parish, who had been sent after the deserter, said he had traced him to places which were the resort of the most debauched of both sexes, and at last found him at "The Finish," near Covent-garden Theatre. The prisoner retaliated upon his wife by saying that she intrigued with some fellow. He did all he could to blacken her character, evidently, the parish officers were convinced, for the purpose of paliating his own bad conduct, as they had never heard a word against her from any other person.—The parish officers said they should expect from a man who was able to keep a woman, that he could allow 1*l.* a-week for the maintenance of his wife and family.—He said that he was reduced from the condition of a master to a journeyman, he could earn no more than 30s. a-week. He at the same time said he was willing to take care of the children.—His wife said he had had the care of them on a former occasion, and he had almost starved them, while he kept a woman in luxury, and she could not, therefore, think of parting with her children.—The parish officers told him they would be contented with 10s. a-week for the support of the family, but the defendant seemed unwilling to give any thing, and the Lord Mayor, after strongly condemning such reprobate conduct, convicted Bond as a rogue and vagabond, and sentenced him to three months' imprisonment in the House of Correction.

Worship-Street.—Irish Shindy—Serious Riot.—Monday morning the above office was completely beset by several hundreds of persons of all denominations, in consequence of the expectation of seeing some Irishmen who were to be brought to the office under the following circumstances. It appeared that the origin of the riot, or, as it is politely termed, shindy, commenced about four o'clock on Sunday morning, in Parrack-court, Goldenlane, between some Irishmen, who had been drinking the whole of Saturday night, and continued at intervals during the whole of the day; but the most serious part of the disturbance did not begin till six or seven o'clock in the evening, when, from the mob's momentarily increasing, it was deemed requisite by the inhabitants of the neighbourhood to send for the officers. This was the signal for the general shindy, and upon the appearance of the constables the war-cry was made, and the forces of the Emeralders called to their ranks, through a broken tin horn, such as are used by the guards of the stage-coaches. In less than five minutes about four or five hundred were collected, armed with spades, of staves of all sorts, composed of broom-handles, shovel-handles, small scaffolding poles, choppers, hatchets, hammers, brick-pickers and chippers, mortar-scrapers, and in fact, every description of missile they could get, not even forgetting an odd poker, fire shovel, or pair of tongs. Here the riot commenced in earnest, for the more the officers exerted themselves to put a stop to it, the more strenuous were their opponents in their endeavours to increase it by every means that lay in their power, either by force of arms or tongue. Soon after this period a slight murmur was heard of "Down with the Protestants," and such other party expressions, which were immediately laid hold of by the insurgents as fresh causes for their conduct. Such was the dreadful pitch to which it arrived, that we are told, from a large reinforcement having come down from St. Giles's, the constables were compelled to call upon every individual in the vicinity of the riot to render their assistance in taking some of the parties into custody; and at four o'clock yesterday morning there were, as we understood, 140 taken and lodged in various watch houses. In fact, such was the state of fermentation in which the whole neighbourhood was, that scarcely any one dare to go to bed during the night. At half-past eleven the prisoners were brought before Mr. Osborne, when there appeared some 30 or 40 persons who had assisted to quell the affray, many with dreadful bruises on various parts of the body. One poor lad had his upper lip cut in two with a chopper, and escaped very narrowly having his nose and chin shorn off at the same instant; this was immediately followed by his receiving a brickbat upon his shoulder. Another person was so very seriously cut upon the head as for it to be deemed necessary, when taken to the hospital, to shave off nearly the whole of the hair; another person had his arm broken, and, indeed, so much havoc we never heard of as having been committed at one time, in an affray of this description.—The greater part of the prisoners were recognized by those who had been witnesses of the riot, and nearly the whole were ordered to find bail, some for assaults, and others for rioting, and to give 24 hours notice of such bail, and in default to be imprisoned.

ACCIDENTS, OFFENCES, &c.

Fire.—Wednesday evening, about seven o'clock, a fire broke out in a very extensive building intended for a piano-forte manufactory, opposite to the Southampton Arms Tavern, Camden Town. The premises were the property of Mr. Gould, piano-forte manufacturer, and were newly built, together with a smaller house adjoining, intended for his private dwelling-house. A very large and valuable stock of woods of various kinds used in the business, had been removed to the premises, a few days since, and business was to have been commenced the next week. Some workmen who had been employed in finishing the interior, had left but a short time previous evening, when flames were seen bursting from the ground floor window, and spreading with immense fury over the entire floor. Messengers were despatched on horseback to the different engine-stations in town, and an ample supply of water was soon turned on from the main of the Hampstead Water Works; but even if all the London engines had been on the spot at the time the fire first broke out, it would have been impossible to prevent the entire destruction of the factory, so furious and rapid was the fire in its progress. In seven or eight minutes the whole premises were in one blaze and in a short time after, nothing but the outside walls were left standing. The fire communicated to the intended private dwelling of Mr. Gould, and soon reduced it to the bare walls, but the engines having by that time arrived, the further progress of the destructive element was checked. Some idea may be formed of the nature of the fire from the circumstance of a house at the other side of the road, which is very wide (we should think at least 50 yards), having caught in front and burned considerably. The fire was said to have been caused by the workmen leaving some embers in a grate, which they had used to heat their glue.

Fatal Effects of the Heat of the Season.—On Tuesday, about the hour of one o'clock, as a man in the employment of Mr. Abercrombie, a respectable sail-maker of Wapping, was returning from Poplar, where he had been executing some business for his master, he was seized with a sudden faintness, and fell abruptly on the pavement. The spectators, naturally alarmed by the circumstance, had him placed on a truck, and immediately sent for Mr. Jackson, a surgeon, residing at Wapping-wall, who at once obeyed the call, and rendered his unfortunate patient every assistance that skill and humanity could suggest. We regret to add, however, that all his efforts were unavailing, and that the object of his attention is now no more. Mr. Jackson is of opinion that a coup de soliel, owing to the intense heat of the weather, an unusual circumstance in this country, led to the fatal catastrophe.

On Wednesday morning, about half-past three o'clock, a party of friends, among whom was the Duke of Wellington's servant, St. John, a man of colour, who had attended on the Duke in all his campaigns, left Vauxhall Gardens, and took a boat at Vauxhall-stairs to proceed down the river. On their way St. John stripped and dived into the river; he rose once and sunk to rise no more. The boat was directly pulled ashore, and the drags provided. The body was found yesterday morning, and a cut was discovered on the forehead, which was probably the cause of the accident.

Wednesday, at midnight, a fire broke out in a barn belonging to Mr. Hamerden Major, of Foord Farm, Folkstone, which consumed the barn, a cow-shed, and a stack of wheat, amounting, with what the barn contained, to about sixty quarters. A threshing machine and winnowing machine were also destroyed.

Thursday morning, the body of a young man, drowned, was picked up on the Surrey side of the River, near the Patent Shot Manufactory, and instantly conveyed to Christ Church workhouse, for a Coroner's Jury. The deceased is supposed to be one of the unfortunate sufferers, among many who lost their lives on Sunday last while bathing.

Tuesday morning, about nine o'clock, as a poor woman, carrying breakfast to her husband, was crossing the High-street, Borough, a little above the Town-hall, a post chaise at full speed drove against her, by which she was thrown down and fell under the wheel of a waggon just passing at the time, by which she was so dreadfully injured in the head that she died immediately on being conveyed to the Hospital.

Fatal Pugilistic Contest.—On Monday last, a battle, for one guinea aside, was fought at Westerleigh, in this county, by two labourers, named Lawrence and Filly, to decide a quarrel. In the fifth round Lawrence received a blow on the stomach, which proved instantaneously fatal. An inquest was held on Wednesday, before W. Joyner Ellis, Esq. and a verdict of Manslaughter returned against the principal, and Zachariah Townshend and Joseph Hopkins, the seconds.—Chelt. Journal.

In the course of last week two men were drowned in the Clyde, near Rutherglen. One of them lost his life under very melancholy circumstances. He dashed into the river without taking off his clothes for the purpose of saving his own son, a lad about fifteen years of age, who had gone in to swim. He dived and sent up the young man, who was with great difficulty restored; but he lost his own life, as he never reached the surface of the water. He has left a wife and seven children.

Suicide.—An inquest was held on Saturday evening, at the Committee-Room of St. James's Workhouse, on the body of Thomas Venns, who held the situation of butler in the family of Mr. Serjeant Doyley, of Argyll-street, Regent-street, who put a period to his life by swallowing a quantity of oxalic acid. The deceased had been a little indisposed for a day or two prior to Thursday last, when he swallowed the poison. The Jury returned a verdict of—"Temporary insanity."

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

Worcester, July 18.—The passengers by the Worcester Telegraph night Coach from this city to London, had a most miraculous escape on its return on Thursday morning. The coach, which was very heavily laden with passengers and luggage, had reached the brow of the hill at the entrance of Chipping Norton from this city, when, on the guard descending to fix the skid-pan, he noticed that one of the hind wheels considerably inclined towards the body of the vehicle, and on further examination discovered that the axletree had broken from the great weight, and was so nearly asunder, that had they proceeded a few yards further it must have become completely so, and the overturn of the coach would have been inevitable. The guard immediately apprized the passengers of the circumstance, who, as will be imagined, very speedily alighted, and they were forwarded on to their destination in post-chaises, most thankful to Providence for their preservation from the danger which threatened them.

A young woman, about twenty years of age, named Jane Anderson, daughter of William Anderson, gardener at Faulkner Hall, who had been for some days in a melancholy state, occasioned by the death of a young man to whom she was betrothed, left her father's house on Saturday, and had been missing since that day. It appeared she had formed the resolution of putting an end to her existence, which she accomplished by drowning herself in the Canal on Saturday. Her body was found on Wednesday morning, and brought into Portsburgh watchhouse, where it was claimed, and carried away in the afternoon by her friends.—Edinburgh Observer.

Southampton, July 16.—Married, on Thursday last, at St. Michael's Church, by the Rev. S. Sutton, Ann, relict of the late Mr. S. Holding, fishmonger, who had scarcely sported her weeds four months, to Mr. J. Ellis. The lady had determined on having the hymeneal knot tied at Kingston Church, and on Wednesday, a licence having been previously obtained by the bridegroom, the happy pair dashed off in a post-chaise to Portsmouth. Never was the old adage of "the more haste the worse speed" better exemplified—on their arrival at Kingston Church, the minister discovered that the bridegroom in his haste had brought the licence unsigned by the minister of the lady's parish, and the consequence was that no marriage took place, and the unfortunate couple were compelled to return in a one-horse van, the chaise having returned without them. The licence being rectified on Thursday morning, the lady again became "in Hymen's rosy fetters bound."—Married, this morning, at St. Michael's Church, Sarah Welton, aged 85, to Patrick O'Carrol, aged 76. This is the bride's fourth husband.

Yesterday, when the Edinburgh mail was on its way to this city, the guard observed a saddle-horse without its rider, and a little farther on found a gentleman on the road with his neck under part of his body, quite dead. Pocket-book, watch, letters, papers, &c. were found on the person of the deceased, and a little dog was seen howling over the body of its master. On examining some papers, the deceased appeared to be a traveller belonging to the firm of M'Call, Douglass, and Co. The passengers took up the corpse on the coach, and left it at a public-house in the adjoining village.—Glasgow Chronicle.

Southampton, July 16.—Einbly, the favourite residence of the late Sir T. F. Heathcote, Bart. has been purchased by R. N. Nightingale, Esq. for the sum of one hundred and eighteen thousand pounds.—The corn in this part of the county is so forward, that some farmers will commence harvest next week. The appearance is very promising.—The thermometer, on Thursday last, was seen to stand at 92 in the shade here.

Winchester, July 16—The wheat harvest will commence generally in this neighbourhood on Monday next, and, if this weather continues, all hands must be piped together, to keep pace with the ripening crops.

The weather has been extremely sultry here this week. The thermometer in the shade and in a current of air, reached very near 80 degrees every day.—What would it amount to in the melting atmosphere of the Courts of Assize?

Salisbury, July 16—The wheat has assumed the yellow hue, and there is every prospect of a golden harvest. Barley is very forward: they have began to cut oats at Wallop. Present Market Prices.—Wheat 56s. to 68s.—Barley 30s. to 36s.—Oats 19s. to 27s.

Christchurch, Hants, July 20.—A most destructive fire broke out in the north-west quarter of this town, at about half-past ten o'clock this morning, which, in less than four hours, destroyed at least forty-five houses, chiefly occupied by the families of artisans and farmers' labourers. Not less than 200 individuals are thus rendered houseless; but a meeting of the principal inhabitants is convened at four o'clock, to consider of the best means of affording a temporary provision for them. Great merit is due to the non-commissioned officers and privates of the 2d Dragoon Guards quartered in our barracks, for the prompt assistance they afforded in working the fire engine belonging to the barracks.

Cheltenham.—On Tuesday, William Tant, the jockey, who was to have ridden Presentiment, at our races on Wednesday, was taken suddenly ill on his return to Prestbury, from training; and although medical assistance was promptly procured, it was of no avail, as he expired soon after. The poor fellow had declared but a day or two before, that he would never ride another race when his present engagements were over; but would retire with his wife and children to enjoy the competence he had so hardly earned. He was in his 35th year, bore an excellent character, and was a first-rate jockey. His death is to be attributed to the effects of over-training, and the excessive excitement of heat.

Some days ago, a herring, of the most extraordinary size seen on this coast, was caught in one of the salmon nets on the beach—its length was eighteen inches, the circumference ten inches, and it weighed 2 lb. 2oz English.—Aberdeen Paper.

Mr. Weller, butcher, of Southover, recently killed a lamb, which he had taken from the ewe's side, so completely rotten, that its liver was tremblingly alive with the flounder; and hence it appears that the disease in this animal must have been constitutional, as engendered by its mother, no doubt in a very rotten state.

Although the residence of so many of our countrymen on the continent has been felt by tradesmen, the more observing begin to see good arising out of it, from the gradual introduction there of a taste for many comforts, that may be termed peculiarly English, and the supply of which must for some time be derived exclusively from British markets, and in no article is this more manifested than in the extended orders received from the continent for carpets. This taste has received a new impulse, and although many, ill-versed in the science of political economy, attempt to depreciate the substitution of machinery for manual labour, we are glad to find it increasing in every branch, and in none more than in carpet weaving, since the consequent cheapness of this valuable article of domestic ornament and convenience will materially contribute to its introduction among the middle classes of society throughout a considerable part of the continent, particularly in the northern districts, where its utility, it is obvious, must be so fully appreciated. The extension of this manufacture from British looms will be of the greatest consequence, because the wool used is entirely of British growth. We feel therefore warranted in wishing success to the very ingenious establishment recently projected, and about to commence in that article at Battersea; it is a similar principle which has enabled Manchester, Glasgow, Leeds, &c. to nearly monopolise all markets for their manufactures. Recent experience has shown that perhaps there is no article, the manufacture of which may be extended with more advantage than carpets, even in this country, but still more for exportation to the continent, where they have but recently been introduced: and it may be anticipated that at no remote period it may be numbered among the staple manufactures of the country, and deserving, in common with them, of every possible encouragement.

THE FIGHT BETWEEN WARD AND CANNON.

Another of those incomparable specimens of downright blackguardism, for which the world has now such a rage, took place, in the instance of the above pugilists, at Warwick on Tuesday last, of which the following are technical particulars :

Round 1. Without ceremony Cannon made play at his adversary with both hands, but there was no telling in it as in his fight with Josh Hudson. Ward avoided this premeditated assault, by a retiring step, and in Cannon's second rush he was hit hard in the eye, which some thought was done by falling on the stage. Some severe in fighting took place, and both went down in a fall, Cannon undermost. Betters silent, and odds as at setting to.

2. Cannon again made his rush, and his right hand told partially at an ill-measured distance upon Ward's neck. Jem returned instanter with his left fist, drew claret, and in a struggle threw Cannon a heavy cross buttock. a la Jem Belcher.—2 to 1 on Ward.

3. Ward was playing at what school-children would call, hide and seek, but his seeking was only to find out his real and scientific measurement upon Cannon's os frontis. After some feints, he put his right fist into action by a hit upon Cannon's nostrils, which, however, was gamely returned, but short. In struggling for the fall, or rather in what would be termed a wrestling match, both went down, Ward undermost, but not hurtful to either.

4. A brave fighting round, but Ward was too quick for his adversary; his straight hitting superseded Cannon's round blows by depriving them of that strength in delivery, which alone can prove effectual. A manly rally took place, and both went down in a struggle. The hitting was too quick for discernment at this moment; but when Cannon left his seconds's knee for the next round, his punishment about the ogles was prominent.

5. Ward for the first time made play by pinking his antagonist and getting away. Cannon was too game to be denied; but he was outfought upon all points. Ward was thrown at the close of the round—3 and 4 to 1 on Ward.

6. This the best judges considered a finishing round. The lion-hearted Cannon went in to fight, but he was always met upon the head until he was kept in what is technically called dorsing. He bled freely, and was thrown. Ten to one on Ward, who was fresh, full of gaiety, and had not a visible mark.

17. Cannon by severe hitting was much reduced; he was piping, and all abroad, and Ward waited upon him with the finest of science. The round closed with a gallant rally, and in wrestling Cannon got a heavy fall.

8. Cannon seemed to have been hit out of time. He was besides, open mouthed, his pompey heaving, and every thing but a winner. He made gallant but useless efforts, and was thrown. The poundage begging.

9. This round was a finisher. Cannon in making a rush was met in the throat but he fought to one corner of the stage, when his arms laid helpless upon Ward's shoulders. Each were tired and Ward used no exertion until Cannon made a stir and Ward floored him.

He was senseless on his second's knee, and was carried off the ground in that state.

Ward won the fight in 13 minutes without any visible marks of punishment.

Attempt to Bury a Man Alive.—On Wednesday evening, Brittain's private burial ground in Church-row, Whitechapel, was made the scene of the most dreadful uproar and confusion from the following cause :—It appeared that on Tuesday week, a woman named Lucer, was taken to the London Infirmary, where disease baffled the skill of her attendants, and she died a day or afterwards. There being marks of violence about her face and head, which were represented to have been inflicted by her husband, the parochial authorities deemed it necessary to institute an inquiry into the real cause of her death; and on Saturday evening, a coroner's jury sat on the body, and after the evidence of the surgeon, who attended her in the hospital, it clearly showed that her dissolution was not at all attributable to the injuries on the face and head, but entirely owing to a fever which was very prevalent at this season of the year. The result of the inquiry did not at all satisfy the neighbours of the deceased, who persisted that she had been massacred by her husband, against whom they vowed vengeance. On Wednesday evening, at the hour appointed for the funeral, all the friends of the deceased assembled together, with vast numbers of their countrymen and women, to the amount of several thousands, from all parts of London; as the funeral procession moved on, the multitude increased; and when it reached the burial place, not less than from eight to ten thousand persons were present. Such was the uproar, that Mr. Nicholl, the minister, was interrupted repeatedly by several of the Irish calling out that she did not belong to his flock. After the corpse was lowered into the grave, the general shout was to serve out the murdering Sasenach (Protestant ;) and at this signal the husband, who was the chief mourner, was seized upon and forced to the edge of the grave, whilst others were prepared with shovels to fill the grave up. The poor fellow struggled with all his might, and roared out lustily for assistance ; and, fortunately, at this moment, a body of officers, belonging to Lambeth-street police, rushed forward to save him from the dreadful sentence that awaited him, in which they with difficulty succeeded, but not until his habiliments were reduced to rags. The affrighted man was placed in a coach, and accompanied by many persons for safety to his home; and on Thursday he made application to the magistrates for warrants against many of the assailants, none of whom have as yet been arrested.

The Magistrates of the Head and James's-street Police Offices have been laboriously engaged for the last fortnight, in an investigation of the following extraordinary case:—"A woman, whose name it is not prudent to disclose at present, gave information to the Magistrates of the Head Police Office, that about three weeks since, she slept at 192, James's-street, a house in which 'good dry lodgings for travellers and others' are to be had, and that a pedlar, whom she heard the people of the place call 'Tom,' came to sleep there. Having occasion to send out to purchase something, this man gave a thirty-shilling note, which he took from other notes, to pay for what he wanted. Afterwards, in the dead of the night, she saw Henry Duff, his wife, and her mother, named Mary Going or Fitzpatrick, the proprietors of the lodging, proceed to the bed where the pedlar lay; they having first passed the candle over informant's eyes, for the purpose of ascertaining whether she was asleep, and by means of a horrible process effected his murder.—Several witnesses have been examined for and against the accused, who were at length committed from James's-street Police Office to Newgate for trial.—The body of a man shockingly mutilated, and whom nobody could recognize, was found at Clondalkin, about the time of this alleged murder."—Freeman's Journal.

Brighton, July 16.—At the dissolution of Parliament there will be four distinct contests for Sussex : first, for the county; secondly, for Chichester; thirdly, for Lewes; and, lastly, for the Rape of Bramber.

The Blackburn Mail contains a paragraph which carries us back in imagination, to the days of Drunken Barnaby, who, in one of his journeys, describes a Puritan as being engaged in > Hanging up his cat on Monday,

> For killing of a mouse on Sunday.

It should seem that at Blackburn, the practice of trimming the beard on Sunday, unless by the proper hand of the wearer himself, is absolutely interdicted. If a man cannot shave himself he must be content to wear his beard till Monday, under pain of drawing down the vengeance of the law :—

"Profanation of the Sabbath.—John Hodgson, barber, was fined five shillings and costs, for following his worldly calling on the Sabbath-day; and W. Hodgson, (his brother) was fined one shilling—he being the person whom John was shaving at the time he was caught."

A woman residing at Taunton, named Rich, had been to Bridge water market, and was returning to her home in a cart; when she was descried by her little son, a child of only three years of age. The fond creature, in the excess of his joy at again seeing his mother, ran and laid hold of the wheel of the cart in which she was riding; when distressing to relate, he was carried under it, and sustained a fracture of the skull, of which he died on the following day. Mr. Caines, of Langport, held an inquest on the body, when a verdict of "Accidental Death" was returned.

Friday se'nnight, at six o'clock, as a party of boys were bathing in the river, at Chiswick, off one of his Grace the Duke of Devonshire's fields, called Corney Mead, a lad about 16 years of age, named Henry Butts, got out of his depth, and being entangled in the weeds, sunk almost instantly. The Duke was walking on the lawn at the time, and on witnessing the catastrophe, hastened to the spot, and evinced the most intense anxiety to recover the body, The drags belonging to the Humane Society, kept at the Red Lion, Chiswick, were immediately sent for; but, we regret to add, were not in order, and consequently, could not be used. The Duke begged, among the many Gentlemen who assembled in their boats, that one of them would row over to Barnes for the nets kept there, which was done, and in the meantime the nets of some fishermen were sent for from Hammersmith, but the tide being against them, a considerable delay arose. The net arrived, and was drawn over the reeds, but unsuccessfully; and after about three quarters of an hour, the body was fished up by a waterman's oar, and taken to Mr. Hobb's, a tenant of the Duke's, close by (by the Duke's desire), where every exertion recommended by the Society was used. After two hours, however, it was found thar every effort was useless. The Duke, when he found all their labours in vain to resuscitate the body, assured the brother of the poor lad, that he would relieve the distressed parents (the father is a bricklayer at Hammersmith) in every way he could.

Stafford.—A prosecution having been commenced at the instance of William Sneyd, and Thomas S. Kinnersley, Esqrs. Magistrates of this county, against Mrs. Mary Limer, dress-maker, of Uttoxeter, for ill-treating an apprentice girl; the case was heard at these Sessions. Martha Palmer, between 12 and 13 years of age, stated that she was bound apprentice to Mrs. Limer about two years ago; that about ten months since, her mistress ordered her to go up stairs and pull her clothes off—she soon followed herself, and having first tied the girl's hands behind her, she beat her with a toasting fork, and she ran the prongs of the fork into her arm. On another occasion she hit the little girl such a violent blow with a poker, that the poker broke, and the bone of the child's stays broke. On a third occasion, the girl was ordered up stairs, and followed by her mistress, who, after locking the door and ordering her to strip naked, beat her with a rope five doubles and knotted at one end, for three quarters of an hour! Two females, the overseer of Sudbury, and a surgeon, four individuals who had examined the girl's body after the last beating, confirmed her account, by stating that it was in a dreadfully bruised state; one of them said that it actually appeared as if the flesh was in a putrid state. The girl's health had been greatly injured by the treatment of her mistress. Verdict—Guilty. Sentence—12 months imprisonment. Mrs. Limer, a young woman well dressed, without a blush, left the Court without a tear.

Murder in Mary-le-bone.—Thursday evening, between six and seven o'clock, a dreadful act of homicide was perpetrated in Croydon-street, Mary-le-bone. A man named Alexander Dobie, living in the street, was seen to go towards No. 11, the house of an old soldier, named John Dillon, whom he called out. On Dillon asking what he wanted, he commenced a volley of abuse, and swearing a dreadful imprecation, flew at him. Dillon retreated across the street a few paces, but was followed up by the other, who struck him once or twice on the back of the head. Dillon turned round, and holding up his hands, endeavoured to parry the blows of the ruffian, who struck him two tremendous blows on the temples, and then letting go his hold, the unfortunate Dillon fell insensible. Several of the neighbours rushed from their houses, amazed at so sudden an outrage, and endeavoured to secure Dobie, who one person said held an iron clock weight in his hand, but he fought his way through them with great desperation, and succeeded in making his escape. Dillon was raised up, and on being taken into his house, expired. Mr. North, a medical gentleman, instantly attended, and from the extensive injury on the temples and head, judged that the blows were given with a very hard substance. Information of this was instantly sent to the Mary-le-bone office, but although the constables of that establishment were directly on the alert, they could not discover the retreat of Dobie.—Yesterday the office was crowded to excess, in expectation of his being apprehended, but up to twelve o'clock no tidings whatever had been heard of him.

BRADBERRY'S PATENT SPECTACLES, upon unerring principles to preserve the sight to extreme old age. It is necessary to caution the public against the use of improper Spectacles, as their effects prove injurious, instead of beneficial to the eye. The unremitted and anxious study Mr. Bradbury has paid to his glasses for upwards of 30 years, has called forth the most distinguished approbation of their merit from the medical profession, and from many thousands of persons of the highest rank and respectability.—To be had only at 28, Holles-street, the first door out of Oxford-street, next to the large Fruiterer's at the corner, facing Hanover-square, and at no other place in the United Kingdom. Orders from the country immediately attended to. Remove from 332, Oxford-street.

THE BRITISH SPECIFIC, for re-producing and promoting the GROWTH of HAIR.—The principle of its operation is to cool and contract the pores which are opened by a redundancy of heat, occasioning a relaxation of the roots, and render them incapable of retaining the hair; to counteract which nothing is better calculated than the British Specific, as, from its invigorating and oleaginous properties, it almost immediately arrests the falling off, and affords such effectual nourishment to the roots, that persons giving it a fair trial may assure themselves of its speedily restoring it, even where it has become completely bald, however long it may have been so, and, if grey, gradually to restore it to its natural colour. The superiority of this preparation (the invention of a medical man) derives additional recommendation from its being, unlike other compositions for the hair, so extremely clean and agreeable, that its application is a real pleasure, and is only requisite to be generally known, to receive the preference of every article in use for similar purposes. To be had only of D. Peden, 15, Burlington Arcade, Piccadilly, in bottles 6s. each, or cases of four bottles for 1l., forwarded to order, on receiving the amount, post paid

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MAJESTY.
ROYAL GARDENS, VAUXHALL.

IN obedience to the wishes of the Illustrious and Distinguished Personages, and of that large proportion of the Public who honoured the Royal Gardens with their presence during the past week, and expressed their high admiration of the THREE SUCCESSIVE and SPLENDID GALAS that have been given, the Proprietors propose to repeat them the ensuing week (TO-MORROW, WEDNESDAY, and FRIDAY), with additional novelty and variety, but in the same matchless style of decorative splendour. The many thousand additional Lamps, in new and tasteful devices, will be again displayed, and the Entertainments and Concert varied, and, if possible, excelled in interest. A New Ballet expressly produced, and Mr. WILSON, the celebrated Rope Dancer, who, during his absence, has performed at every Court of Europe, with extraordinary success, has just arrived, is engaged for a few nights, and will make his first appearance TO-MORROW EVENING; and the Fire-Works and wondrous Ascent will be so conducted as to insure a continuance of the universal acclamation and delight with which it is nightly honoured. Particulars will be given in the bills of the day.

PERRING'S PATENT DOUBLE EDGED SILK HATS.—PERRING (original inventor of this justly celebrated Hat,) invites the members of fashion, taste, and fancy, to his establishment, 413, Strand, and at Hammersmith. The Peer, the Gentleman, the Man of Fashion, the Tradesman, and the Sportsman, here find a Hat suited to their wants, and worthy their peculiar notice. Little need he said respecting the qualities or advantages of the Hats in question; suffice it to say, they possess what every good manufactured Hat ought to do. Public estimation is the best criterion to preference, and it is fully borne out in the universal satisfaction and esteem in which these inimitable Hats are held. The double-edged Silk Hat differs from all others in possessing an extra quantity of napping on that part of the crown most exposed to wear, thereby removing that long existing prejudice against them. Price 17s.—Best Superfine light Beaver Hats, in a variety of modern shapes, warranted to retain their shape and colour in any climate, 23s.—Youth's Silk Hats, Gentleman's and Youth's Seal and Fur Forage Caps, Young Ladies Hats and Bonnets. Hats covered with Silkand double edged, 12s.—Best Superfine light Beaver and Drab Summer Hats.

Gentlemen residing in the country may meet with early attention to their orders by stating the number of inches ound the band of the Hat, and inclosing a remittance.

J. AND J. SIVEWRIGHT, who have again to congratulate their Friends on the success that attends their Offices, 37, Cornhill, 11, Holborn, and 38, Haymarket.—J. & J. Sivewright beg once more to remind the Public, that the New Lottery, to be drawn in one Day, (31st August,) is one of the last they will have to offer, the Chancellor of the Exchequer having announced that Lotteries will cease in this Country with the present Drawings.—The present Scheme contains the unprecedented amount of £218,204, including £100,000 in Four of £25,000 each! and all must be decided in one Day! the 31st of AUGUST.—N.B. It will be recollected that J. & J. Sivewright shared both the first and the last Prizes of £25,000 ever sold in this Country.

SODA WATER.—WM. CLARK, No. 21, MAIDEN-LANE, Covent Garden, Soda Water Manufacturer to the Royal Family, most respectfully informs the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public in general, that he Manufactures the above article of a very superior quality: it is warranted to be free from all metallic impregnations in consequence of its being prepared in glass machinery.—N. B. Superior Jamaica Ginger Beer, and Fine Sparkling Lemonade, (in glass bottles). They are warranted to keep good to twelve months.

LADIES and GENTLEMEN may rely on it, although there are Articles daily puffed in the newspapers for the Hair, but it is acknowledged as a fact, whoever makes a fair trial of the Original Thick RUSSIA OIL, has found it, through the Aromatic Oils it is prepared with, the wholesomest and best Oil for preserving and promoting the hair of ladies, gentlemen, and children, and if used constantly not a hair will fall off or turn grey, and is such a nourisher to the Hair, that if it has began to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour; will restore the hair on the bald part, if the least signs of roots are remaining, has been proved by hundreds.

A. PRINCE is proud to acknowledge the favour of his Gracious Majesty of Great Britain, in sending for six bottles of his celebrated Russia Oil. It ought really to be generally known—the principal Physicians have recommended those who wear false hair to rub their heads often with the Russia Oil, as, through the aromatic ingredient it is prepared with is wholesome and refresbing to the head. Observe, Mr. Marshal and other respectable Court hair-dressers, will not recommend any other article for the hair but the Prince's Original Thick Russia Oil, as they have experienced it is the best for dressing, preserving, and promoting the hair; but there are several hair-dressers, when Ladies and Gentlemen have their Hair dressed by them they recommend Bears' Grease, or other Oils for the Hair, though they know it is a humbug.

Ask for Prince's Russia Oil—the Ounce Bottle 5s.; a large bottle containing Five Ounces, 1*l.* which is a saving. Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. PRINCE, No. 9, Poland street, Oxford street; Mr. Smith, Perfumer to His Majesty, 117, New Bond street; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders. Be particular, and observe his address, "A. Prince, No. 9, Poland Street, Oxford Street, London," on the cover of each bottle; without it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose.—Purchasers ought to be particular, as counterfeits are in circulation.—Also, Prince's RUSSIA DYE is so improved, as there is no doubt that it will change Red or Grey Hair on the Head, Whiskers, or any part to Brown or Black in a few minutes.—Directions sealed up with each bottle, at half a guinea, or two bottles for One Pound

GUN and PISTOL REPOSITORY, 42 and 43, Oxford-street.—D. GASS respectfully informs the Nobility, Gentry, and Sporting Gentlemen, he has added to his choice and well-selected stock of New and Second-hand FLINT and DETONATING GUNS, the principal part of Mrs. Wilson's, late of Vigo-lane (retired from business); Guns by Manton, Purdey, Forsyth, Smith, Nock, Moore, Egg, Mortimer, and other Makers, at half their original cost, warranted; Rifles, Air Guns, and Canes, by Staudenmayer and other Makers; Duelling, Holster, and Pocket Pistols, in great variety; an assortment of Plate and Plated Articles, very low for ready money. Guns and Pistols bought, or taken in exchange. Merchants and Captains supplied.—42 and 43, Oxford-street, near Berners-street, London.

Cologne, the 25th February, 1825.

DEPOT FOR THE REAL EAU DE COLOGNE. In order to prevent trouble and additional expense to those parties who have been hitherto supplied direct from this place, with our EAU DE COLOGNE, and to promote the sale of it in general, we have been induced to establish a depot at Messrs. ASCHROTT'S and Co. London, where the genuine article is always to be had at the original prices. R. F. & M. FARINA.

In reference to the above Advertisement of Messrs. R. F. and M. Farina, of Cologne, ASCHROTT'S and Co. respectfully beg leave to recommend their extensive Stock of Genuine EAU DE COLOGNE, which may be had Wholesale at the Original Prices, directly out of bond, or duty paid at their warehouses, Sun Street, Bishopsgate; and have likewise appointed Mr. J. C. HOSE (late Kinnard), Druggist, as their wholesale and retail Agent for the same; where all orders directed for him at No. 309, High Holborn, will be immediately attended to.

BRADBERRY'S PATENT SPECTACLES, upon unerring principles to preserve the sight to extreme old age. It is necessary to caution the public against the use of improper Spectacles, as their effects prove injurious, instead of beneficial to the eye. The unremitted and anxious study Mr. BRADBURY has paid to his glasses for upwards of 30 years, has called forth the most distinguished approbation of their merit from the medical profession and from many thousands of persons of the highest rank and respectability.—To be had only at 28, Holles-street, the first door out of Oxford-street, next to the large Fruiterer's at the corner, facing Hanover-square, and at no other place in the United Kingdom. Orders from the country immediately attended to. Remove from 332, Oxford-street.

THE BRITISH SPECIFIC, for re-producing and promoting the GROWTH of HAIR.—The principle of its operation is to cool and contract the pores which are opened by a redundancy of heat, occasioning a relaxation of the roots, and render them incapable of retaining the hair; to counteract which nothing is better calculated than the British Specific, as, from its invigorating and oleaginous properties, it almost immediately arrests the falling off, and affords such effectual nourishment to the roots, that persons giving it a fair trial may assure themselves of its speedily restoring it, even where it has become completely bald, however long it may have been so, and, if grey gradually to restore it to its natural colour. The superiority of this preparation (the invention of a medical man) derives additional recommendation from its being, unlike other compositions for the hair, so extremely clean and agreeable, that its application is a real pleasure, and is only requisite to be generally known, to receive the preference of every article in use for similar purposes. To be had only of D. PENEN, 15, Burlington Arcade, Piccadilly, in bottles 6s. each, or cases of four bottles for 1*l.*, forwarded to order, on receiving the amount, post paid

BURGESS' ESSENCE OF ANCHOVIES Warehouse, 107, STRAND, corner of Savoy Steps, London.—JOHN BURGESS and SON, being apprised of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the ORIGINAL, to observe the Name and Address correspond with the above;—the general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection, J. B. and Son submit the following caution:—Some are in appearance at first sight "Burgess' Essence of Anchovies;"—others "Burgis's," and many more without address.—JOHN BURGESS and SON having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the labels previous to purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.—Burgess' New Sauce for general purposes, having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and conveuient sauce—will keep good in all climates.—Warehouse, No. 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy Steps.—(The Original Fish Sauce Warehouse.)

TO THE EPICUREAN ADMIRERS OF FINE SAUCES.—N. B. GILBERT begs to inform the Public, that he has prepared a new and highly superior ESSENCE of the ANCHOVY, possessing in an eminent degree all the real and peculiarly fine flavor of the GORGONA FISH, which has been pronounced hy some of the best Judges to surpass any thing of this description hitherto submitted to the Public; and it is warranted to keep in all Climates.

N. B. G. also begs to recommend his ROYAL METROPOLITAN SAUCE, which has been universally approved of for purposes of general use.

To be had in London, at the original Fish Sauce and Italian Warehouse, 451, Strand, opposite Villiers-street; and of J. C. HOSE, late KINNARD, 309, High Holborn.

KITCHEN RANGES, with C. Ricket's late Holmes's Patent Conducting Ovens; it is a fact well known that all Ovens hitherto contrived for the use of Families, which are attached to Kitchen Ranges, owing to the Flues, occasion a considerable loss of Fuel as well as diminution of Heat. To obviate these great disadvantages has been the study of the Inventor of the Patent Conducting Ovens, which are without Flues, and which instead of diminishing increases the Heat without the least additional Fuel.—References to Families of the first respectability will be given, where Ovens may be seen in use, and also at the Manufactory, Catle-Court, near Bedford-street, Strand.—N. B. The Society of Arts did Mr. Holmes the honour of voting him a handsome premium for his Invention.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

YORK.

LIBEL AND SLANDER—BELL v. HILL.—Mr. SCARLETT stated the case.—The plaintiff in this action was a young woman, residing at Shields, in the county of Northumberland, and was in partnership with her brother in the china-trade; they were persons belonging to the Methodist persuasion, of great reputation, and universal good character. Hill, the defendant, was a preacher in that district, a man who exercised great influence over the Methodists, who formed a great proportion of his Majesty's subjects in that part of the country. The country was parcelled out into districts, over which a preacher was appointed, and then there was a circuit preacher over these, who derived a handsome emolument (equally the object of the clergy, as of other professions) from his labours. Hill, the defendant, presided over the North Shields circuit. He was in great authority, and made use of it for the double purpose of personal interest, and a species of official influence. The complaint now made by the plaintiff was, that Hill, from some unworthy motives, had interfered to prevent the union of the plaintiff with a respectable man residing at Hull. It would seem that Hill and the brother of the plaintiff, who was a local preacher, and had some difference; and in order to revenge this difference, Hill endeavoured to destroy the brother, the sister, and the entire family of the Bells. He obliged them to quit their residence, he destroyed her brother, and having sought the means, he accomplished the object of the plaintiff's injury, and the ruin of her family. He invited the attention of the Jury to this case, for sure he was, that a case calling for more special consideration could not be well brought before a Court of Justice. A more base man, a more scandalous, or a more wicked case, never perhaps occurred, and what gave it a dye of deeper malignity was, that the defendant, a malicious and worldly minded man, had committed all this mischief under the cloak, and as if under the sanction of religion. While he libelled the plaintiff, he was praying to God; and while praying to God, he was blasting the plaintiff's prospects in life, and carrying on a system of unrelenting persecution against her entire family. This Minister of God, as he styled himself, was propagating the foulest slander, and that to gratify one of the basest passions of the fiend—revenge. In the year 1821, an intercourse had subsisted between a Mr. Sissison, of Hull, a respectable man in trade, and the present plaintiff (Miss Jane Bell); he was attached to her, he offered her marriage, and the ceremony was to have taken place in the month of June of that year. Mr. Sissison had abundant means to make them comfortable, and his intended partner happy for her life. She was a young lady of amiable manners, and could boast of very considerable personal attractions. However, before the wedding day arrived, Mr. Sissison received an anonymous letter, addressed to the care of a preacher at Hull; and, in a short time after, another similar letter, addressed to another preacher, calumniating this young woman in the most scandalous and unfounded manner. These letters professed to come from a sincere friend of Sissison, and warned him of the danger which he would run in forming any connection with the plaintiff or any of her family. Such letters, upon strong minds, would perhaps have had no influence—perhaps they would have been shown to Miss Bell or some of her family, who would instantly have refuted such scandalous insinuations; but Mr. Sissison became alarmed, he dreaded the existence of some mystery, and seemed to think that slighted warnings would turn into deadly curses.—Such were the terms in which he wrote to a friend at York, when asking his advice upon the subject of these letters. At the time those letters were written to Mr. Sissison he had no acquaintance with Hill, the defendant, who had artfully contrived to request a reference to be made to him as to Miss Bell's character and connection. Mr. Sissison had known the wife of Mr. Hill since his childhood, and thus the trap which was laid had eminently succeeded. The anonymous letters he would this day prove to be in Hill's hand-writing, and upon these letters no commentary would be necessary. They were conceived in malice, and they ended in fraud of the most wicked description. Hill had a personal motive to gratify, and he scrupled not to take the most extraordinary means to attain it.—Here the Learned Counsel read the two anonymous letters, warning Mr. Sissison from forming any connexion with Miss Bell, requesting him to make inquiry as to her character, and conjuring him to pray to the Lord to give and assist him in the choice of a wife; for (added the anonymous correspondent) he was sure he never could be happy with that lady. Mr. Sissison was attached to Miss Jane Bell, and perhaps the stronger his attachment the more easily could his suspicions be awakened. However, he sent one of the anonymous letters to Shields, and with this circumstance the defendant, in some way or other, became acquainted. He had his eyes open in every direction, and his hand ready to seize upon every weapon which might inflict the fatal blow. The defendant also wrote a letter to Mr. Sissison from Shields, abusing the writer of the anonymous letters, calling him a "radical rascal," little, perhaps, thinking at the time that he was so accurately depicting his own character. In this letter, also, he begs that the preachers at Hull may not be made acquainted with the fact of his corresponding with Sissison; he called the plaintiff a hypocrite; he described her to be poor and sanctified and vituperate, and exulted that her brother John was "off the plan" or, in other words, had been suspended from preaching; and all this, he concludes his letter by saying, he had done "in the fear of God!" not to gratify any revenge, but purely out of love for Mr. Sissison, and his duty to his Maker!—While these letters were passing, Miss Bell thought it right to make some inquiry. An appeal was made to the preacher and those who knew her best, as to her character and conduct, and they gave her the most unexceptionable testimonials. But the defendant is still at his work of infamy; he gradually infused the poison into the mind of Mr. Sissison, as Iago does into the mind of the generous Moor, until at last he so works him up, that murder becomes the fatal catastrophe, as the picture is drawn by our great dramatic poet. He (Mr. Scarlett) would not now trouble the Jury with the perusal of all the letters; they proceeded as they went along with great fervour and warmth; they shewed that Hill found out he was suspected of being the writer of the anonymous letters, and that he feared an action might be brought against himself for a libel, or against Sissison for a breach of promise of marriage, although he warns Sissisons of the danger of revealing his correspondent's name, as likely, if known, to lead to the ruin of himself and family. In August, however, came the critical moment, and the letters of the defendant there described her as "dirty in her domestic concerns, bad tempered, and deceitful." These letters came down to a later period, when Sissison said he could no longer think of engaging himself with Miss Bell. Inquiry was then set on foot; Hill was found to be the author of these anonymous letters, and an action was brought against him. At that time, however, Sissison, only shewed one of the anonymous letters, and when he came into Court at the trial, he could not swear that it was the hand-writing of the defendant. Sissison further added, that these letters were not the only cause for his breaking off the match, and the plaintiff was non-suited. Miss Bell then retired under an impression of great misery and anxiety; then was Hill triumphant; but Sissison becoming satisfied that these anonymous letters were Hill's, and considering his conduct to be base, treacherous, and calumnious, he put all his letters into the hand of his calumniated victim. Hill's own letters, under his own name, were the cause of Sissison withdrawing his affection from the plaintiff, and no doubt she would be entitled to a verdict. He (Mr. S.) very much feared we were fast approaching to that time when religion would be made a cloak for the commission of every species of horror. He would not say that the Methodists as a body shared this feeling, there were many of them liberal, sincere, and able men; and if the body wished themselves well, if it was their wish to stand well with society and the world at large, they would hold up the conduct of Hill to execration.

The evidence in support of the plaintiff's case was then examined, and the anonymous letters read.

Mr. POLLOCK addressed the Jury for the defendant. The Jury, after a quarter of an hour's deliberation, returned a verdict for the plaintiff—Damages, 300*l*.

The trial excited an unusual degree of interest, and the Court was crowded during the whole of the day. The defendant was in Court, and he seemed to be popular amongst the Methodist connection in the North of England.

NOTTINGHAM.

Thomas Dewey, aged 28, was charged with the wilful murder of Maria Austen, on the 2d of July, instant, by stabbing her with a knife.

This case had excited considerable interest in the town, and the Court was crowded to excess. The prisoner was a married man and had cohabited with the deceased, who was also married, with three children, but had separated from her husband for some time, and at the period the offence was committed, was far advanced in pregnancy.

Mr. READER, on the part of the prosecution, stated the case to the Jury, which was fully made out by the evidence of the following witnesses:—

Mary Fallowell—I am a single woman, and boarded in the same house with Maria Austen; the prisoner also lodged under the same roof; I went into the deceased's room about half-past ten on the night of the 2d of July, and the prisoner followed soon after; he asked me what he had said the night before to Mary Austen, the daughter of the deceased; I said "you threatened to strike her." The prisoner admitted he had said so, and the deceased then said that her children should not be controlled by him. He then went into his own room, which was on the other side of the passage, and returned, went up to the deceased, and struck her a violent blow below the left breast, saying "there then." The prisoner then returned into his room, and I heard him lay something on the table. I supported the deceased in my arms; she put her hand to her left side and groaned. I desired a daughter of the deceased to go and fetch her uncle, but the prisoner replied, "don't send for any one, for she is a murdered woman."—I then asked the prisoner to fetch a light, but he said "it's of no use, she is a dead woman." He fetched a light, and went up and kissed the deceased, saying, "it will be the last time." The prisoner was going down stairs, and met the brother of the deceased, who said, "Tom, what have you been doing?" He replied, "nothing." A surgeon was then sent for, but before he arrived, the deceased expired. I assisted in carrying the body up stairs, and on undressing her, I saw that her clothes were very bloody. I do not know that there had been any quarrel between them. The next morning I went into the prisoner's room, and saw three knives on the table, one of which, a butcher's knife, I delivered to the constable. I compared this knife with the cuts in the clothes of the deceased, and thought they corresponded in size.

Cross-examined by Mr. HILL—There was no fire or candle in the room; the prisoner did not lock his door when he went out. The knife I found on the table in the prisoner's room early the next morning; the deceased did not wish any body to be sent for. I have known the prisoner about half a year, and I always thought him a still quiet man.

By Mr. Justice PARK—I saw the deceased's husband that night; he had been living at Leicester, but had come to Nottingham that day.

Samuel Spencer—I am one of the police officers of this town; I received a knife from the last witness, which I now produce. [The production of this instrument, together with the clothes taken from the body of the deceased, and which were nearly saturated with blood, excited great sensation in Court. The knife was similar to those used by butchers, and had been made very sharp at the point.] I compared the knife with the cuts in the clothes of the deceased and thought they corresponded.

Maria Austen, a child of nine years of age, after being questioned by the learned judge as to the nature of an oath, was sworn.—I am a daughter of the deceased, and was in the room on the night my mother was hurt. The prisoner came into my mother's room, and my mother told him he should have nothing to do with her children.

By the JUDGE.—I saw the prisoner strike my mother; I was standing opposite my mother.

Ann Whiting, the mother-in-law of the deceased. I was sent for about half-past ten on the night of the murder, and found my daughter dying; I sent for a surgeon, but she died before he arrived; I assisted in undressing her, and found a wound under her left breast, and a considerable quantity of blood.

Mr. White.—I am a surgeon in Nottingham; on the night in question I was called to the deceased; she was then dead; I examined the body the following day before the Coroner's Inquest, and found that the left lobe of the liver had been perforated by some sharp instrument, and a considerable effusion of blood in the abdomen; the wound was about four inches deep, and had evidently been given by a violent blow; I compared the knife now produced with the wound in the liver, and it precisely corresponded in size; the deceased was far advanced in pregnancy.

The examination of the prisoner, taken before the Magistrates, was then put in. It contained a complete confession of the murder.

The prisoner in his defence said, that he had for the last few years been subject to violent pains in the head, which at times deprived him of reason, and that he had more than once attempted suicide.

The Learned Counsel for the prisoner set up a plea of insanity, to prove which several persons, relations of the prisoner, were called. Their evidence, however, entirely failed in substantiating such plea.

Mr. Justice PARK summed up the evidence with the greatest perspicuity, and the Jury, after a few moments' deliberation, returned a verdict of "Guilty."

The Learned Judge immediately passed sentence of death upon the prisoner, and ordered him for execution on Wednesday next, and his body to be delivered over for dissection.

STAFFORD.

ORME v. KNOWLES.—This was an action by which the plaintiff, Mrs. Orme, sought to recover damages for a violent assault, committed by the defendant on the 30th of September last.

The witnesses on the part of the plaintiff, stated, that on the above day, Mrs. Orme being inclined to see a little fashionable pleasure, agreed to go in company with several young people and the defendant, an elderly man, to Walsall Races. She hired a cart for the purpose. The party went to the races, and had a great deal of fun until they were returning home. A dispute arose on the way between Mrs. Orme and Mr. Knowles; and it arose from the latter being somewhat huffed that the former would not stop on the road and have a dish of tea. This was got over, and the party resumed their gaiety. They had not proceeded far, when Mr. Knowles's hat either fell, or was knocked off. It was knocked off again, and a third time Mr. Knowles's hat was knocked off. Each time that the gentleman put on his hat after the accident, he found that it had been more and more abused. Nay, it became very wet, and Mr. Knowles seeing a great deal of tittering going forward among the young ladies, seeing that they looked at his hat as a continued object of laughter, and moreover perceiving that the unfortunate hat used, at every accident, be kept out of sight, as if it had a tendency to remain at the bottom of the cart, from the giggling, the frequency of the fall of his hat, and the increased moisture, began to entertain very provoking suspicions. He spat at Mrs. Orme. She at him, and finally they resolved their differences into blows, and Mr. Knowles thus inflicted the injury thus complained of.

Martha Williams was one of the party. Mr. Knowles was very violent indeed; there was no cause for him to be angry; she believed he was drunk. Mrs. Orme was not tipsy; she had only tasted a little brandy and water.

Cross-examined by Mr. CAMPBELL.—Now, Miss Martha (she smiled), I perceive by your smiling, that you love a bit of a joke. Was not the hat knocked off? No, it was not; it fell off.—Where did it fall off? Into the road.—How did it get wet, Martha? I believe it fell into a lake of water.—Now, Martha, whether did the hat fall into the lake of water, or the lake of water fall into the hat? (Much laughter.) No, it fell into the lake.—Are you sure of that?—I believe it fell into the water.—Did you handle it that evening? I did.—Did you feel it warm? (Great laughing.) Now, Martha, was not the poor man's hat warm? (No answer, but great laughter.)—Did not the ladies amuse themselves with the poor man's hat? Witness could not tell.—The hat was here produced, and bore all the marks of the most inclement usage.

A Surgeon was then called, who stated that he was not called in for a month after the alleged assault. The marks of injury were not serious.

Mr. CAMPBELL addressed the Jury for the defendant. There was no doing without a surgeon in a case like this. Mrs. Orme who had no thoughts of an action, never dreamed of the doctor. A month passed over. The attorney is called; he finds to his consternation, that no surgeon appears in the scene; let one be immediately called. "La! (says Mrs. Orme), I am well, I don't want him." But I do, says the Attorney; we bring our action for a desperate assault—bring you to death's door—have our surgeon to save you by a miracle of skill—have Counsellor Curwood to colour and grace the whole, and then what swimming damages we shall have!—(Much laughing.) Poor Mr. Knowles was, after all, the most unfortunate of men to have been entrapped into this fate by Mrs. Orme. The lady was the centre of fashion—she led the ton—she issued her commands for a party to Walsall races, and directed her cart to be got ready—next she had to fill the cart—the Williams's, the Stringles, and the Knowles's are invited, and off they set to Walsall races. Every thing went on well until her return. Mrs. Orme was quite sober—all the witnesses joined in that—there was no gin—no porter—no ale to be had on the race-ground, and it was not a hot day, and Mrs. Orme could not have been thirsty. However, poor Mr. Knowles was tipsy—he drank for them all, and on the return home he was a fair butt, as they thought, for merriment,. Mrs. Orme and he could not agree. He wanted some hohea on the road. Mrs. O. got sulky, and refused to stop. When at last the party resumed their seats in the cart, it was only to be expected that the young ones would join Mrs. O. and do something to taunt and hurt the poor man. His hat was knocked off, not once, but three times. It was wetted, well wetted, for hours. How did this take place? Yes, it was a good jest for the giggling ladies! a fine day's sport to have Mr. Knowles' hat in the cart for their unrestrained amusement. Were the ladies too delicate for this supposition?—surely no—nor was it the first time that they had exhibited their little figures against an individual of the other sex, for some slight or supposed offence. There was a ludicrous illustration of this remark occurred to a learned relation of a gentleman, a member of their circuit. The gentleman alluded to, in his tour through the Sister Kingdom, Ireland, had been unfortunate enough to impute the crime of thick ancles to the ladies of that part of the world. What was their revenge? There was a certain nightly and morning ceremony, which was of such universal practice that even ladies were supposed to comply with it. It was thought that this ceremony could be made conducive to the end of offering an habitual indignity to the national offender alluded to, and accordingly the bottom of that recipient which was indispensable in the ceremony above alluded to, was decorated with an image of him, and the following rhyme was painted beneath:—

"On thee I —— Poor Dicky Twiss."

(Much laughing.)—Mr. Twiss, however rejoined, and met his fair antagonists with their own weapons. He caused a similar vase to be made, decorated in the same place, with a figure of himself looking up in an attitude of wonder, and exclaiming:—

"Ah me!
What do I see!"

Mr. Justice BURROUGH said there was no defence to the case as

[redacted]

[redacted] The paragraph was contained in a newspaper, recently established at Huntingdon, opposed in its politics to a journal said to be under the control of the plaintiff, if not edited by him. In the "Liberal Journal" there appeared certain animadversions upon the police of Huntingdon, for suffering noisy and idle persons to disturb the peace of the town on Sunday evenings. The imputed libel was inserted in the "Government Paper," as it is called, and professed to come under the very original title of "An Old Inhabitant of Huntingdon." The "Old Inhabitant" expressed his indignation somewhat in the "Cambyses' vein," upon the appearance of such observation in the "Liberal Journal," a paper under the management of the plaintiff, who, according to the publication of "The Old Inhabitant," had stirred up more of insubordination in the quiet town of Huntingdon, than any liberal since the days of Robin Hood. He had violated the Sabbath, and encouraged the little boys to throw stones at the apple-women, and to break the church windows and "the ten commandments." He got drunk in the evening, and started a popular candidate for Peterborough the next morning. Though a disciple of Cobbett's, he was a lover of wine, and though he held a sinecure, he was a notorious (Bedford) "leveller." To these and various other allegations, the defendant, who, like the plaintiff, pleaded a justification. The damages were laid at £500.—The publication having been proved, and its authorship by the editor, and the libel put in and read, the defendant's counsel proceeded to cross-examine the editor as to his recollection of certain bills placarded about Huntingdon, signed by Mr. Wells. They contained invitations to the people of Huntingdon. The plaintiff's counsel objected to their reception, but they were received, as proof of correspondent papers having been circulated at Huntingdon.—Witness recollected the acquittal of the Queen. Mr. Well's house was illuminated, and beer was distributed; and Mr. Wells spoke from a waggon to the lower orders.—What did he say?—To this question it was objected, "that the words spoken" were not in any of the pleas set out.—On the other side, it was contended that the words need not be set out; but on a suggestion from the court, it was agreed that the witness should be called again at the close of the speech for the defendant.—This was the plaintiff's case.—On the part of the defendant, it was very ingeniously admitted that Mr. Margitts "loved the constitution because he was a member of an ancient corporation," and was attached to the thirty nine articles of the established religion, and, therefore, with Mr. Wells's character for notoriety, it was surprising he should against such a man be in an action for libel. His political life was freely and fully animadverted upon, and it was contended that the libel was of a public nature, reflecting upon his known principles, and the natural tendency of those principles. Various passages from his "Conciones ad Populum" were read. His addresses to the electors of various boroughs, the independent representative of which he was anxious to become, and hi Sunday night's Vauxhall, it was contended, had the inevitable effect of rendering lax the morals of the lower orders.—Weston Hatfield, the proprietor of a Huntingdon newspaper, said, Mr. Wells was a friend of his; he produced certain papers containing "the Petition of the Paupers," "Invitations to Vauxhall," &c., paragraphs eulogizing these gardens. One of the paragraphs contained this passage—"The entertainments at Mr. Wells's gardens form a striking contrast to the usual dulness of a Summer's evening at Huntingdon."—The "Petition of the Paupers" was then read, charging that the fruits of their labour had been applied to support tax-eaters and sinecurists.—The Address to the Electors of Eye was also read. It commenced by declaring, that "no place, not even the corrupt and degraded borough of Huntingdon, owed a larger atonement to the public, than the borough of Eye."—Thomas Lovell produced the manuscript (in Mr. Wells's handwriting) of a letter dated January, 1818—A Letter to the Freeholders of the county of Huntingdon—"Of myself I may truly say I live in the hot-bed of sedition and corruption," was its commencement. Seven hundred of these were printed.—The advertisement communicating the plaintiff's intention to illuminate his house, and calling upon "the ragamuffins of Huntingdon to join him in the expression of the triumph of the Queen over ministerial persecution was then read. The witness said about one-third of the houses in Huntingdon were illuminated; he was sworn in as a special constable; he had heard the plaintiff make speeches at various times, but he could not mention any particular occasion.—The master of "The National School" proved that a man was employed to take care that no improper person was admitted. Mischievous boys assembled outside, attracted by the music.—A special constable proved that on the night of the illumination a waggon came from the direction of Mr. Wells's house. He heard Mr. Wells speak of the corporation collectively. In 1807 he heard Mr. Wells speak from a wheel-barrow, but what he said he don't recollect.—Mr. James was recalled, and stated, that at various periods he had heard Mr. Wells declaiming in a powerful way about the corporation. He remembered being present at a supper of the burgesses, where Mr. Wells spoke of a corporation in a degrading manner, charging them with venality and corruption. He spoke of a corporation in a degrading manner, charging them with venality and corruption. He spoke violently of Lord John Russell for having favoured the doctr ne of Malthus.—This was the defendant's case.—The learned counsel for the plaintiff having replied,—The Lord Chief Justice summed up the evidence, and the jury having deliberated for half an hour, returned a verdict for the plaintiff—Damages 40s.

"Is—can he help it?—a special attorney."

KENT.

Coleman v. Delasaux.—This was an action of assault and battery, to which the defendant pleaded the general issue, not guilty.

Mr. Gurney and Mr. Adolphus conducted the plaintiff's case, and Mr. Bolland the defendant's.

The plaintiff had been in the army, and resided at Canterbury; the defendant was an attorney of the same city. It was to be collected from the evidence, although it was not distinctly proved, that there had been some old standing quarrel between the parties. At the last Canterbury races, on Barham Downs, the defendant rode up to the plaintiff, who was driving his gig on the race course, and asked some explanation of something which was supposed to have been said by him of the defendant. The answer, which did not appear in evidence, not being satisfactory to the defendant, he struck the plaintiff three violent blows with his whip, and rode away. The assault, which took place in the view of a great many persons, was proved by two witnesses.

Mr. Bolland addressed the Jury inmitigation of damages, and put to them the probability that the defendant must have acted under some strong provocation given by the plaintiff; for it was scarcely to be supposed that without some adequate motive he should have proceeded to such violent extremities,

The Lord Chief Justice charged the Jury that the plaintiff was clearly entitled to a verdict. The defendant, being a member of the profession of the law, ought to have acquired sufficient experience to be aware that no language, however provoking, could afford a sufficient excuse for the violence of which he had been guilty. It was the duty of the jury, by their verdict, to check such ebullitions of passion as had been proved in this case. The peace of society required that in proper cases the Jury should mark their sense of such outrages by giving liberal damages to the party complaining.

The Jury found for the plaintiff—Damages £70.

J. H. Sadler, aged 30, was indicted for intermarrying with Ann Eliza Court, at Hythe, his first wife, Ann, being alive.—The prisoner was a gentleman's servant, and in 1816 had married Ann Hide, a woman in his own station, at the parish of Christchurch, Surrey, with whom he appeared to have lived on ill terms, but had had three children by her. On the 17th of April last he had married Ann Eliza Court, a handsome young woman, of respectable parents, at Hythe, in this country, with whom he cohabited about a fortnight, and then left her, going to his first wife, under pretence of looking after some property in London. His stay being protracted longer than was expected, the unhappy young woman followed him to London, and found him domesticated with his first wife and family. An eclaircissement took place, to the misery of both women, and the second wife, by the advice of her friends, instituted this prosecution.—The case was clearly made out, and the prisoner was found Guilty.—Judgment postponed.

ATHY.

John Healy was indicted for stealing 5*l*. 17s. from the person of Andrew Keating, of the town of Kildare.

Andrew was an able prosecutor, and appeared very anxious to do his business well. He said his money was in a box in a room in his house; that he saw the prisoner open the box and take it out; but, "my Lordship," you had better try my wife first—she ought to be tried first.—(loud laughing.)—It was about 1 o'clock in the morning that the money was taken, when I was going to pay some money that I owed.—Court—He was going to settle with his creditors at one or two o'clock in the morning. (A laugh.)—Mr. Bethel. Andrew, will you turn about until you and I have a little conversation together?—Andrew. Very well, so we can.—Mr. Bethel. How many brothers and relations have you?—Andrew, five or six.—Mr. Bethel. You have no doubt, but one of them appears in Court to-day?—Andrew. Very well; if my brother is in gaol itself it is not for robbery, only for suspicion of it. (loud laughing.) But what do I care for my brother, eh?—he's as a big rogue as any in Ireland, and I don't care if he's transported; did you hear me that time? (Continued laughter.)—Mr. Bethel. Were you not drunk the night before, and did not the prisoner and your wife attend the quarter sessions together, the day after the alleged robbery?—Andrew. My wife!—Mr. Bethel. Yes, your wife! Andrew. You know very well what I am at. (A laugh.) Andrew. I know d—d well what you're at; but you might as wel be whistling jigs to milestones, as to try to do me. (Shouts of laughter.)—Mr. Bethel. Andrew, I believe your wife and prisoner were pretty well "pretty well for it I thank you." Do you understand me now, Andrew? (A laugh.)—Andrew. I'd advise you to behave yourself. (A laugh.)—Mr. Bethel. If you convict the prisoner, I suppose you expect to be paid by the Grand Jury? Andrew. What should the Grand Jury pay me for?—Mr. Bethel, I ask you, Sir, if the Grand Jury handed you the money would you not take it?—Andrew. I don't know; but if you hand it to me, I'll take it; but sure every body knows the devil a notion you have of it. (Shouts of laughter.)—Mr. Bethel. Andrew, I wish you a good morning.—Andrew. Good morning to you kindly. (Continued laughter.)

Bridget Keating proved to her having put the money in the box, and to her seizing the prisoner in the room, but could not swear that he took it.—Not Guilty.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

Vienna, July 16.—The Austrian Observer contains, at length, the new convention between the Emperor of Austria and the King of the Two Sicilies, for the prolongation of the stay of part of the Austrian troops in the kingdom of Naples, till the end of March, 1827.—The preamble states, that, according to the preceding Convention, the number of the Austrian troops in the kingdom of the Two Sicilies was fixed at 33,500 men, and the evacuation of the kingdom to take place by the end of May, 1826. But His Sicilian Majesty had considered on the one hand that the numerical strength of the Neapolitan Army, and the degree of its organization, will probably render the support of other troops necessary, even after the expiration of the previous convention—and on the other hand, that the consolidation of tranquillity in the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies is so certain, that a diminution of the auxiliary army may be effected; and as the Emperor of Austria has nothing more at heart than to promote, in concert with his allies, every measure that is calculated to accelerate the entire evacuation of the kingdom of the Two Sicilies, by the Austrian troops, their Majesties have appointed, viz. the Emperor of Austria, Charles Lewis Count V. Fequelmont, &c. &c. and the King of Naples, the Chevalier Lewis de Medici, &c. &c. their Plenipotentiaries, to draw up some additional artieles to the existing convention.

The articles, five in number, are the same as already been published. As the state of the finances will not allow his Sicilian Majesty to be at a greater expense for the occupation than fixed by the Convention of the 31st August, 1824—and as the Austrian finances ought not to be burdened with an additional charge, in consequence of the prolongation of the occupation,—it is agreed to reduce the troops to 15,000 men, so that the saving thereby accruing will cover the expense of the longer duration of occupation; and if the numerical state of the Neapolitan army should be sufficiently increased to allow the auxiliary corps to be reduced without endangering the tranquillity of the kingdom, this corps shall, at the desire of his Sicilian Majesty, be reduced to 12,000 men; and the saving thence arising shall be to the advantage of the Treasury of his Sicilian Majesty.

Vienna, July 15.—Metalliques, 96½.—Bank Shares, 1220 3-5th.

Ghent, July 23.—It is very natural that the Ordinance of the King of France, which is partly directed against the most interesting branch of our manufactures, should have caused a great and painful sensation. It will particularly affect the numerous class of inhabitants of the country, who are at the same time farmers and weavers.

If we consider that the King of France has issued this Ordinance of his own accord, or rather by the advice of the Council of Ministers, during the interval between one Session and the next, so that the Ordinance has not been laid before the Chambers, we should be tempted to think that his Most Christian Majesty had, in a fit of ill humour and injustice, forgotten both the hundred days, and the asylum which Flanders hospitably offered him and his august brothers. In fact, this measure will shortly affect East Flanders, and the markets of its principal towns, Ghent, Alost, and Oudenarde. However this may be, as the Ordinances left a term of fifteen days for the importation of linens, on payment of the old and more moderate duty, advantage has been taken of the circumstance to import into France an immense quantity of these goods; and it is calculated that within these few days, from 35,000 to 40,000 pieces have entered Lille and the department of the North, which were bought up by French dealers, who hastened to our market. This has, of course, raised the price in the warehouses of our merchants in the country and the markets. But after next week there will be a sensible decline.

INDIAN ARMY.

Head Quarters, Calcutta, Feb. 24, 1825.

General Orders.

In continuation of a General Court Martial, held at Cawnpore, on Monday, the 17th May, 1824, Corporal John Fitz Simmons, of the 5th Company of his Majesty's 59th Regiment of Foot, was arraigned upon the undermentioned charges, viz. :—

1st. "For entering the Verandah of the Barracks occupied by the 4th Company of his Majesty's 59th Regiment of Foot, between the hours of one and two o'clock, p.m. of the 13th March, 1824, and then, and there, with mischievous intent, discharging the contents of a loaded musket into the room of Sergeant Tinsley, of that Company, maliciously intending to shoot Eliza Tinsley, wife of Sergeant Tinsley aforesaid, and thereby endangering the lives of other persons then in the room along with her."

2d. "For designedly wasting, on the 13th March, 1824, one round of ammunition, served out for public service."

Upon which charges the Court came to the following decision :—

Sentence.—"The court having found the prisoner, Corporal John Fitz-Simmons, of the 5th company of his Majesty's 59th Regiment of foot, guilty of both the charges preferred against him, which being in breach of the Articles of War, does sentence him to suffer death, by being hanged by the neck until he is dead."—Confirmed.

(Signed) Enwarn Paget, General,
Commander-in-Chief in India.

The above sentence is commuted to transportation for seven years, subject to the concurrence of the Right Hon. the Governor General in Council.—Confirmed

(Signed) Edward Paget, General,
Commander-in-Chief in India.

The Governor-General in Council concurs in the commuted sentence of transportation for seven years, passed by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief on Corporal Fitz-Simmons.

(Signed) Amherst,
Enward Paget,
John Fendall.

The foregoing order is to be entered in the General Order Book, and read at the head of every regiment in his Majestcy's service in India.—By order of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief,
Thomas M'Mahon, Col. A. G.

"In spite of the obstinacy of Olaneta, his duplicity and extraordinary efforts, the moral force of Upper Peru has displayed its irresistible impulse. This section of America, which, placed in the vanguard of those who proclaimed liberty, appeared by its heroic attempts to be destined to effect the triumph of our country, has been the last to see it established on its soil. Its illustrious sons only waited the approach of the liberating army to repeat the vow which they pronounced in the year ten.. The enemy's chiefs, dazzled by the splendour of the victory of Ayachucho; saw behind them the immense abyss in which they were about to be buried, and fixing their eyes on their country, found the safety and the consolation which was denied them under the tyrannic power they supported. The soldiers, changing front, have saluted with the tenderness of the instinct of the heart that liberty which they had combated against their will. All have attached themselves and sworn to it for ever. Olaneta, wandering with 400 men, who will abandon him without resource, has no choice but to submit at discretion, and to show to the world the issue of Spanish rashness and injustice, which now occupies in the vast extent of the New World only the narrow enclosures of Callao."—(Lima Government Press.

Corfu, May 31.—It is reported here that the British government intends to grant to the Government of the Ionian islands the establishment of some free ports, and that Corfu and Zante are proposed as such. This measure would have a most favourable effect on the trade of these islands. On the 27th instant, his Majesty's corvette, Rose, arrived from Malta, with about £20,000 sterling, in British money, which is to be put in circulation instead of that hitherto current in these islands.

A letter, dated Madrid, July 14, says, M. Abad Quaypo, Bisho of Mechoacan, ex-member of the Junta of 1820, has been tried and condemned to six years' confinement in a monastery, near Toledo, in order, as his Judges said, to learn the doctrines of Chrisitanity.—Bread is very scarce at Madrid, and water is not abundant. In general, also harvest has turned out bad. The soldiers of the regiments of the Queen Amelia, destined for the Havanna, have almost all deserted. Six weeks' pay is due to the Guards, and the troops of the line are neither paid or clothed, and the soldiers are in the greatest distress.

Letters from Lepanto of June 14, inform us that Ismael Pliassa, who, at the head of a corps of 6,000 Toxides, had entered Phocis, was attacked on June 1st and 2d, by General Goura, beaten, and forced to shut himself up in the ruins of Castro, a castle situated in the environs of Amphissis; surrounded on all sides, and being destitute of provisions, Ismael applied to the Stralasch Panorios, to obtain a capitulation, which the latter granted, subject to the ratification of his superior, General Goura.—The Toxides, who have so many times been pardoned, thought they were again saved, when General Goura being informed of the cruelty of Ismael Pliassa, who had massacred the Christian inhabitants, the monks, and the priests of several convents and villages of Mount Parnassus, gave orders that Ismael Pliassa, should be hanged, and that his troops should be put to the sword. This sentence was rigorously executed.—After the victory at Salona, Goura, accompanied by Panorios Zeroo Dimos, traversed Doris to proceed to Cranis, in order to attack the Turks encamped on Mount Araryathes before Missolonghi.

Letters have been received from Tunis, of the 9th of June, which state, that the Bey, by way of fulfilling his agreement, with the Pearl and Coral Fishing Company, for the exclusive right of fishing for coral on the coast of Tunis, has sent out a crusier to seize all the vessels it can meet with fishing for coral on his coast, a couple of hundred boats and vessels having, according to their practice, resorted there for that purpose.

The Augsburg Gazette says—"It is generally believed at Constantinople, that the losses sustained by the Capitan Pacha at Capo d'Oro, are more considerable than at first stated. A report from Smyrna even says, that the Greeks have taken a corvette of 54 guns. Meantime a small flotilla is arming, which is to be loaded with ammunition; it is destined for the gulf of Lepanto, whither it is to go under the convoy of a frigate. The Capitan Pacha is still at Suda. The Turks are said to have commenced their retreat from Salona for want of provisions. Ibraham Pacha, on the contrary, is advancing into the interior of the Morea, and is in the environs of Calamata, while Colocotrini is said to have approached Navarin.

"Letters from Constantinople of 28th June have the following particulars:—

"The accounts arrived this morning from the Morea positively announce the defeat of Ibraham Pacha by General Colocotroni, now Director of the Executive Power of Greece.—The details of the naval battle between the Greek fleet and that of the Capitan Pacha, inform us that the latter had three ships burnt, one of which was the frigate which had his treasure on board, and captured some transports, which had most of the ammunition and the rafts intended for the siege of Missolonghi.—The Turks had made a general attack on Missolonghi on the 17th of June, but without success, and consequently with considerable loss.—The death of the Seraskier was spoken of, but a piece of news which seems more certain is, the death of General Boyer, who served in the army of Ibrahim Pacha, and whose wounds received in the taking of the Island of Sphactina, have proved fatal."

Deccan Prize-Money.—Wednesday, at half-past half-past twelve o'clock, a Special Board of the Lords of the Treasury was held at the Treasury Chambers, Whitehall, which was attended by the Earl of Liverpool, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Hon. Berkeley Paget, Lord Granville Somerset, Edmund Alexander M'Naughten, Esq. and also Lord Bexley, who, it was understood, was Chancellor of the Exchequer at the time the business about to be discussed commenced, viz. the India Deccan Prize-money, in dispute between the Marquis of Hastings and Sir Thomas Hislop, respecting the Grand Army. Their Lordships were attended by their Secretaries.—The business under discussion was considered of so much importance, that all the King's Law Officers attended the investigation, viz. the King's Advocate, the Attorney-General, the Solicitor-General, and the King's Proctor.—The Duke of Wellington, one of the Commissioners, was present. Mr. Arbuthnot was prevented from attending by indisposition, with which the Right Hon. Gentleman is confined in the country.—Their Lordships continued the investigation till three o'clock.—The Earl of Liverpool came to town from Coombe House to attend the meeting.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer came to London from his visit to Lord Grenville at Dropmore, to attend the meeting.

African Discoveries.—The account brought by Capt. Clapperton and Major Denham, from Soudan, and other places in the interior of Africa, which have been visited by these enterprising travellers, is very satisfactory, and much valuable information relative to the inhabitants has been obtained. The surprise of the former gentleman may readily be conceived, upon his reaching Sockatoo, in finding plates, dishes, basins, and other articles of English manufacture, with the makers' names marked thereon; and during his residence, which was nearly three months, he daily used wares of this description. The markets are regularly supplied, in addition to flour, with fine stall-fed beef, mutton, and kids; as also ducks and geese, eggs, &c. The existence of this place, which is to the westward of Bornou, was before unknown; it is governed by a Sultan, who has several wives, and many children; and, with all the persons about him, evinced every attention to Capt. Clapperton. Major Denham proceeded to the South and East of Bornou, and examined the Lake Tsad, which is an immense fresh water lake, visiting many towns and villages in his journey. The country to the southward of Fezzan may be considered as a new discovery, and extends from that place to about the ninth degree of latitude, between the sixth and fourteenth degree of longitude East of Greenwich. It has hitherto been deemed impracticable to travel in any part of Africa as Christians until this time. Both these officers performed the journey as such, occasionally wearing their uniforms, and were deemed by many of the followers of Mahomet as curious personages. We have already mentioned that ministers have considered it an object of such importance, as to again send another mission, placed under the direction of Capt. Clapperton, in which he will be assisted by Capt. Peace, also of the Royal Navy, and the Cameleon sloop of war is preparing at Portsmouth for their conveyance. Very sanguine hopes are entertained of their success, and of ultimately introducing, by the route Capt. Clapperton will proceed, many of our manufactures into central Africa.

A curious circumstance occurred at Stockholm. A colonel Aminoff, of the Hussar Regiment of the Guards, had brought an action at law against a Baron Von Ankersvard. The Colonel was unsuccessful in the first Court; he appealed to a second, and so on through all the Civil Tribunals. Finding that the law of the land was against him, the gallant Colonel resolved to try the laws of honour, and therefore challenged his legal opponent to meet him in the field. The Baron, however, with much good sense, declined this call, and made an appeal to the public, in a pamphlet which is said to be extremely forcible and well written. Among other arguments he observes, that if military officers shall call in the laws of honour to control the laws of the state, and shall create a jurisdiction which only begins to operate when the ordinary Tribunals have pronounced against them, they will, in fact, erect themselves into a military tyranny wholly unprecedented.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The SONG certainly next week, and a capital one it is. Withu entrenching on the privacy of our Correspondent, we shall be godt of the RUTLAND Information he has promised.

EMILIUS is really very kind.

The complaints made by a NOBLE LORD relative to the delivery of THE AGE have been attended to, and the evils alluded to remedied We beg to convey our best thanks to HIS LORDSHIP for this polite attention.

S. is quite right—we all along concluded that something bright would follow the late enlargement of the TIMES, and sure enough it has proved so, though we never thought it would reach such an excellent thing, as the "New Cooling Company" it started last Tuesday,

We very much doubt FACT, and must therefore decline inserting it.

We have received a letter from DRAMATICUS, who we conclude is a Haymarket performer, complaining of the substitution of MRS. GIBBS for MRS. GLOVER in the character of MRS. SIMPSON—DAW is a fool, and what's more, he can't help it—but that he should be permitted to remove so admirable an actress as MRS. GLOVER from so fine a performance as her MRS SIMPSON, and place in its stead such a vile exhibition as the Mrs. S. of MRS. GIBBS, *is unaccountable—but we are sick of these squabbles altogether—*DAW must be deranged.

We cannot see the least fun in F. L.

AMICUS is very polite, and we shall feel obliged by the communication he mentions.

OBSERVATOR is under consideration, for independent of the ACCURACY of the information he has favoured us with, must be entertained the POLICY of submitting it to the Public.

ALERT is assured we ARE "on the alert."

L. M. ORATOR, SPY, JOCOSO, COWBRIDGE, and A WELL-WISHER have come to hand.

THE AGE.

LONDON, JULY 31.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.

We have watched with considerable earnestness, the attacks which have for some time past been so unmercifully made upon THE LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR, evidently with a view of exciting a question throughout the country as to the qualifications possessed by HIS LORDSHIP for the fulfilment of the duties appertaining to his high and important office; and we are really at a loss to determine whether impudence, malignity, or ignorance, cut the most prominent feature in the various dissertations on the subject, which have come under our observation. We can readily believe that the besotted Editor of the Morning Chronicle is at a loss every other day for some position on which he can start off with the prospect of amusing his readers—but we could never suppose that a man could be so far estranged from the common sources of information which hourly arise, as to fix upon one everlasting theme for the display of his genius, when it in reality admits of little argument; and, even if it did, he has not brought any in aid of his positions—for, having very considerately weighed the various opinions held out by this miserable scribbler, waded through his brilliant wit, his poetical effusions, and the different statements advanced—we have little hesitation in setting down the whole compilations as the effusions of a replenished blockhead, and that our opinion may receive the sanction of our readers, we shall exhibit to them a few samples of this contemptible and shallow hostility. On the general abilities, the consummate legal knowledge, the great attainments, and inflexible principles of LORD ELDON, there is not a difference of opinion throughout the country—at least entitled to a moment's attention—and it will require something more than the feelings of a cockney scribe, whose wisdom, like his influence, is confined very nearly to his own garret, to shake one iota of the universal estimation and respect in which THIS GREAT MAN is held. Nevertheless as such fellows will,

"Sit by the fire and presume to know
"What's done i' the Capitol," it is necessary to set them a little to rights, least in the dissemination of their own IGNORANCE, they may happen to mislead the JUDGEMENT OF OTHERS. In one of the poetic effusions which this blundering old journal has lately submitted to the perusal of mankind, we find the following concluding stanza, on the question of hanging either the CHANELLLOR, or the Attornies practising in his Court:—

"'Tis not for us to say what's good
Or which 'twere well were movedoff,
But either way we think it would Be very much approved of!"

Without going into the question at all, we will only ask any soul whether it would not be a common charity to hang the fellow who was dunce enough to compile such a mass of nonsense—though to be sure the composition is a little redeemed by the harmony and versification to be found in the pleasant rhythm of "moved off" and "approved of."—But as we go further on, we shall find things much more delightful than this; or, indeed than any we at first expected to find, for we should imagine that among all the tit bits of bathos that were ever met with, the followiug is the richest:—

"The Roman Bard was very wrong,
"Tho' some have much admired his song,
"And thought it vastly well done,
"When he declared, that age was tame,
"And appetite no more the same—
"For only look at ELD—N!

'No torpid palate here is seen,
"To check his stomach ever-green,
"And taint each fond endeavour," &c. &c.

A "torpid palate" is to us rather a funny idea, though any thing in the torpid line is evidently very familiar with the old CHRONICLE; that, however, is not so alarming; but when he tells us of an evergreen stomach, he calls upon us to stomach more than we really can afford to do. In God's name who ever heard of such incomparable nonsense--what does the fellow mean? We have met with an evergreen tree, we daily read the ever-green CHRONICLE; but an evergreen STOMACH! is something so novel, that our intellects are literally bewildered: so we turn from this for relief, and on refering to Monday's CHRONICLE, we find as much as, under all circumstances, could be reasonably expected. In alluding to what this deep fellow calls "the fate of the motion list," we find the following parallel to the situation of the COURT OF CHANCERY—

"If a man were to put himself through a course of physic for the "benefit of another, he may be well assured, that he would be "extremely apt to find fault with the prescription, to neglect "its directions, and to throw the boluses and black draughts out "of window as good for nothing, when he felt a twinge in his un-" nameable lower regions! Something like this case is that of "Chancery when subjecting itself to rules devised for the advan-" tage of suitors."

This appears to us by far the most amusing turn in the whole affair, for we should imagine "a man putting himself through a course of physic for the benefit of another," one of the most original thoughts that ever entered the mind; but the "twinge in his unnameable lower regions," is smarter still, if possible—because, in addition to the ingenuity, there is considerable delicacy in this touch of the CHRONICLE, for you may depend upon it that there can be no doubt on earth that the "unnameable lower regions" here introduced, are meant for the identical "evergreen stomach" alluded to before; if, after this, the CHRONICLE would "put itself through a course of physic for the general benefit of mankind," it would be the height of all charity, more particularly as it has dozed the town, heaven knows, long enough. We do not think it necessary, in the present article, to enter upon any justification of the dignified or learned Peer, who is the subject of it, from the individual cases that are cited as condemnatory of his Lordship's judicial integrity, because we have effected a much more important point, in exposing the imbecility of the antagonist by whom he has been mainly assailed—but, as it is our decided intention to resume this discussion, we shall avail ourselves of every opportunity that may present itself to lay open the barefaced presumption of attacking, without RHYME, and certainly without reason, one of the most eminent, if not the most eminent Judge that ever presided over the laws of our nation, and one of the most conscientious Peers that ever spoke within the walls of her Senate.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The Act allowing Newspapers to be sent to the British Colonies, at a rate of postage of three-halfpence each paper, does not come into operation till the 10th October next, and then it will be necessary to put the Newspaper into the Post-office on the day on which it is published, otherwise the paper will be charged postage as a letter.—Courier.

We shall feel particularly obliged to the Courier to tell us how a Sunday Paper is to manage to do this.

We recently took an opportunity, in a casual way, to refer to some particular instances of conduct adopted by those miscreants, THE SAINTS, exemplified by allusions to certain individual cases; but an occurrence of the past week enabling us to resume the subject, we do so with considerable willingness and zeal; for the events of every day tend to convince us of the necessity there exists of adopting every available means to crush the rising power and open presumption of these wretches, whose ultimate aim, apparent in all the petty machinations of their commonest transactions, is the accumulation of wealth and power, and the final subversion of the established order of things. It is impossible to contemplate the daily occurrences that are submitted to our observation, in which the intolerance of these people is the leading feature, without engendering a very natural apprehension and alarm at the inroad made by them on the received forms of our religious institutions, the general arrangements of worldly concerns, and the actual DECORUM OF SOCIETY; and, while the vast increase, as well as predominance of this influence must convince every thinking mind of the eventual ruin it will entail upon us, unless radically shaken in its progress, it must also point out the absolute advantage, as well as direct necessity of straining every nerve to suspend, and finally impede, this baneful power. The Press has this week teemed with the full particulars of an action for libel and defamation of character, brought by a most respectable young lady of the name of BELL, against a fellow who has the audacity to style himself THE REVEREND THOMAS HILL, in aid of which a mass of evidence of the most conclusive character was disclosed in Court, and the defendant has consequently been cast in the sum of 300*l.* damages; and if any thing were wanting to confirm the opinion which fortunately so many thousands already entertain of that sect of personages to whom this reptile belongs, a perusal of the trial in question would be quite sufficient, for an instance of more cold blooded, calculating villainy, more impudence, hypocrisy and blasphemy we never remember to have perused. It makes one shudder for the safety and respectability of the Church of England to see an itinerant vagabond, like this HILL, assume the dignified and awful name of Reverend, to which neither education, natural acquirements, or universal information entitle him, and dare to attempt, in that sanctified character, an exposition of the Holy Bible, and to inculcate an observance of the DIVINE WILL; while, in every moral and religious construction, he is violating all those very doctrines he is presuming to teach, and holding out to the very persons he proposed to edify, and (what is of much more consequence) to the world at large, an example most fatal to the salvation of common principle. The errors of a man, in no respect removed above the ordinary level of society, frequently bring about, with his ruin, that of some unfortunate followers and nmcdiate connections, bent on the same direction of dis-osition, and equally regardless of consequences; but there ie injury terminates—not so in instances like the present, r the example given by a pastor to his flock, over whom nore particularly in that class to which this man belongs) e is supposed to possess a great influence, is too frequently llowed, on the conviction of its rectitude; and in cases ich as this, where, in addition to a feeling of rectitude, a irst of WORLDLY GAIN is entertained, it is SURE to be pur-ued. The daily derilictions we hear of among that order of eople who dissent from the religion of the Established hurch, more particularly among what are called METHO-ISTS, have reached so alarming a pitch, that it is totally im-ossible to mistake either their pretensions or objects; the ecurity of government is threatened—the dissemination of hristianity, comparatively speaking, impeded—and the hole land deluged with an evil increasing every instant oth in magnitude and in effect, and unless by an occasion-l exposure such as this, a temporary stop were given o their proceedings, their POWER would be at last equal to heir AIM, and the brand of PURITANISM, which blazed through he realm in the seventeenth century—immolated the mo-arch, and fired our country's pile, would be re-lit, and pread once more its devastation along our shores. To a-ert this projected danger, and expose the shallow policy—et barefaced attempts of its contrivers, and to remove from ociety in general a horde of wretches, whose very words re libels, whose hearts are all guile, and whose very lives re LIES, must be the persevering study of every worshipper f his God and every well wisher to his King and to his Country; and, as long as we retain the common faculty of disinction, we will leave no stone unturned to further such an niversal object, and as one instance may effect a single oint, "convince the wavering, or confound the weak," we annot do better than submit to them a specimen or two of he RELIGION, TRUTH, HONESTY, GOOD FEELING and CANDOUR f the Reverend!! THOMAS HILL. Lest our readers may be enerally ignorant of the case, it is merely necessary to inform them, that, in consequence of MISS BELL's brother aving interfered in some local disputes relative to the plans, as these impostors term them, of their preaching, his clergyman formed and carried into execution, the design of preventing the sister marrying a MR. SISSISON, by a series of anonymous and subsequently subscribed letters, defaming her character, and for a reparation of this injury the action was brought, and the damages already recorded obtained. Nothing can speak plainer—nothing more fully display the real feelings and designs of these miserable creatures than the subjoined extracts from this HILL's letlers, in the first of which he says, in warning MR. S——, of the dangerous step he is taking,—"what, a Methodist join himself to infamy and poverty!" Ask the METHODIST Preachers whether you ought to take "such a step?"

The profane varlet then goes on to say, (speaking of her as one of his OWN SECT)—"as I am a Minister of JESUS CHRIST, and as I must stand at his bar to answer for all my transactions, I will tell you my opinion—she is full of religion, and even sanctification, and full of drunkenness, scandal, and calumny!!"

In drawing this EXACT picture of HIMSELF would any one suppose a man could be found wretch enough to invoke the sacred name of THE LORD to such prostituted purposes—but so it is; and going further on we shall find even the language of THE LORD'S disciples cited to forward his object, but that mighty master of the human mind, SHAKSPEARE, says "the Devil himself can quote Scripture for his purposes," and such indeed appears to be the case here. In the course of his correspondence this worthless fellow observes, "I know not what to say, but what I do say is done in the fear of GOD!" Then again, "Oh my brother, pray much, trust in GOD, be firm, and you will be DELIVERED!" And after having carried his points, divided two affectionate hearts, and sown between them the seeds of discord for ever, he observes, "Oh how ought you to praise GOD for deliverance!" and in urging MR. SISSISON to conceal all knowledge of him when the trial was coming on, he observes, "Be therefore true to your word, and you will have to praise GOD for ever that there was such a man in YORKSHIRE (if I mistake not) as Anonymous, and such a man in Shields as T. H.;" on which latter quotation it is only necessary to remark, that a more horrible sample of hypocrisy, blasphemy, and knavery was never read.

Anonymous and T. H. are the same man, yet the fellow speaking of himself, with some ingenuity, attempts to disconnect them, by venturing a guess, who ANONYMOUS can be, when he says, "if I mistake not,—" and all this language is used in the name of GOD!!!

Where are our laws, where are the statutes of the land, where are the common energies of the minds of men, that such beings are not incarcerated for life by the hands of Justice, or swept from the surface of all human intercourse by the common consent of Earth, and the voice of all creation. Man has deceived and will deceive his fellow while time shall last—he has robbed his friend, traduced his neighbour, and even murdered his associate—but enormous as is such crime, he has done it in the course of that interchange of society, where it arises out of the dealings of MAN to MAN, uninfluenced by any other impulse than the dictates of bad passions and depraved principles, with a reckless contempt of DIVINE COMMAND—but here is one, amongst a thousand instances, where a mortal, invoking the awful name of his Maker, professing to be his Minister, breathing his dread words, and openly avowing himself to be the dispenser of his HEAVENLY WILL, under this holy garb, wrapt in this secure mail, outraging all the bonds society has formed on EARTH, and warring against all the sacred ordinances of Heaven! It is to be presumed that the frequent recurrence of this licentious conduct will arouse the legislature from their dream of security, and produce an enactment of some law by which the hallowed shrine of our religion may be protected from the inroads so continually made on it by these "Scribes, Pharisees, and Hypocrites," by which the natural purity of the peoples' hearts and imaginations may remain uncontaminated by the doctrines of these false Prophets, and by which the country may at once be rid of a set of plunderers, who are attempting to disturb her envied tranquillity, to partake, in their own persons, of her great prosperity, and to undermine the proud ascendancy she now holds over all the NATIONS OF THE WORLD.

SIR WILLIAM CURTIS'S—LAST!

SIR WILLIAM CURTIS is returned from his Baltic expedition, and we are rejoiced to say, in excellent health—he is a loyal subject, an eminent merchant, and an honest man: and, as such, we respect him. The worthy baronet is a funny fellow withal, for a friend called on him the other morning to ask after his health. He found him in his dressing gown and slippers, with a velvet cap on his head—"Pray, SIR WILLIAM," said he "how are you after your Water excursion." "Tolerably well, my friend, I thank you," replied the baronet—"but (pointing to his cap) you see I have come home vel vet over head and ears!"

In the concluding week of the late SESSION OF PARLIAMENT, Mr. BROUGHAM, it will be remembered, interrogated the SECRETARY FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS as to the period when it was supposed the French troops intended to evacuate Spain, and the honourable gentleman was understood to say, that he could, with perfect sincerity, state, he was satisfied in his own mind that the French government had not the slightest shadow of an intention of keeping PERMANENT OCCUPATION of that country. We are very willing to give Mr. CANNING credit for as much sincerity as he can bring into the field, nor are we prepared to doubt the belief for which this sincerity is here called into action, but we shall take leave to remark, that the avowal appears to us given without that usual discrimination which distinguishes the conduct, and in general the remarks, of the HONOURABLE SECRETARY, for from information received within this day or two, upon the authority of which we WILL PIN OUR FAITH, the intimation therein given is by no means borne out either by circumstances or fact. We are prepared to state that the French government, rather than resign possession of CADIZ, would at once go to war with this country—that no intention of abandoning it has ever been entertained—and that they are prepared to spend A MILLION OF MONEY on its fortifications, were it necessary, for the purpose of making that Citadel to them, what the Fort of Gibraltar is to us. It is known, moreover, that purchases are at this moment making in England of artillery for that specific object, and that very general preparations have for some time past been agitated for the undertaking and completion of this important point; and although we do not presume for an instant to impugn either the wisdom or information of THE HONOURABLE SECRETARY we should be compromising a duty which appears to us involving a question of vital import, if we did not direct the attention of His Majesty's Ministers to a circumstance so essential in all its bearings, and which may be so fatal in its consequences. A retrospect of the late Peninsular war affords us quite argument enough for the necessity we have felt, of introducing the subject, and as we do not entertain a moment's doubt but the notification will undergo the severest scrutiny and investigation of government, we shall not now enlarge upon it, but content ourselves by remarking, that, if there is one spot of land more than another from the possession of which the French ought to be excluded, CADIZ is that SPOT, and that it behoves this government, if it be desirous of avoiding the possibility—nay, probability—of hostile measures, to require the immediate resignation of this important fortress, as an earnest of that good understanding upon which the present peace was established, and as a security for its future CONSOLIDATION.

RAIKES seeing GLENGALL taking a glass of wine at Crockford's the other night, asked him what wine he was drinking, to which GLENGALL replied, with his usual adherence to truth, "Wine—pooh—its cherry brandy." "I should rather think," said RAIKES, "its cherry bounce."

One of those silly affairs which seem to afford so much pleasure to a few persons who exist on eating and drinking, and hearing themselves speak—we mean, in plain terms, a public dinner—has just been given at Wexford to that Catholic mountebank, DANIEL O'CONNEL, quite as like in its general complexion to other occurrences of the kind as possible, and quite as worthy of record; but as we have neither room nor inclination to expatiate at any length on the proceedings of this important congregation, we shall therefore content ourselves by making a few cursory remarks on the speeches of Master DANIEL and his incomparable friend SHIEL. After making a trumpery tirade about the late rejection of the Catholic Bill, the first of these orators observes:—"These symptoms loudly proclaim the melancholy truth that Ireland does not govern herself: that she is subject to the misrule of an interested policy, and all the evils under which she groans will continue and will thicken, until Protestant, Catholic, and Dissenter, coalescing and confederating together, become too strong for their chains, and insist, in a voice of thunder, on the restoration of their common country to her rights and to her freedom." we should presume that no one was ever yet found fool enough to assert that Ireland DID govern herself"—indeed, it will be a melancholy truth, as Dan says, for Ireland, when that is the case—for the experience of every day assures us of the inability of her sons to govern themselves, and the consequent impossibility of their ever presuming to govern one another. In another part of this harangue this blundering blockhead says, "does England want allies?" She may have them here, and they will fight her battles, and win victory for her standards. We do not want to fight with the Marquis of Anglesea; but the day may, and will come, when England will want us to fight by her side; and when that occurs, despicable and base-born is that being who will raise an arm in her service, until she does justice to his country." By which one would immediately infer that unless parliament consents to the Emancipation of the Roman Catholics, Great Britain had better not think of going to war, for "the divil" an Irishman would lend an hand to help her out of her difficulties—instead of which, the chances are, that when that calamity does again visit this country, we shall not only find Englishmen enough to fight their own battles—but a few left to send over to Ireland to keep these rebellious Paddies in subjection. We recommend, by way of a friendly hint, a little more circumspection to DANIEL in his orations; the times have been, even in the comparatively mild reign of the Tudors, that this fellow would have "lain shorter by the head" long ere this; and as it is we think his speeches are as nearly allied to HIGH TREASON as inflammatory language can well be; but this is DANEIL'S own affair, for it only makes us laugh. As far as poor SHEIL is concerned, we have a different kind of feeling, for every thing he says is so humourous and nonsensical that we cannot entertain resentment, for as far as downright bombast goes, not even the stuff in SHIEL'S tragedies can surpass the following tirade: he said "the mass of EMOTION had encreased into a vast accumulation, and that the FIRE which had long lain in the regions of society, had burst out from its frozen summits! MOORE'S health was of course drank, and, as usual on such occasions, SHIEL, who thinks himself a poet, always returns thanks for him, and did so in this instance; assuring them that though greatly exposed to temptation, no SEDUCTION had DEBAUCHED him from his country. The evening of course passed off very delightfully, and we will be bound there were not five people in the room who did not go away, thinking really that O'CONNELL and SHEIL are two of the cleverest fellows living.

FASHIONABLE MISCELLANY.

His MAJESTY has been pleased to grant to the Honourable GEORGE NEVILLE, Clerk, Master of Arts, Rector and Ordinary of Hawarden, in the county of Flint, and Master of Magdalene College, in the University of Cambridge, (second surviving son of the late Right Hon. RICHARD ALDWORTH, Lord BRAYBROOKE, deceased, by CATHERINE, his wife, youngest daughter of the late Right Hon. GEORGE GRENVILLE, some time First Lord of the Treasury, and Chancellor and Under Treasurer of the Exchequer, and sister of the late most Hon. GEORGE, Marquis of BUCKINGHAM, K.G., (also deceased,) his royal license and authority, that he may (not only in strict fulfilment of an injunction contained in the last will and testament of the late Right Hon. JAMES GRENVILLE, Lord GLASTONBURY, deceased, but also in testimony of his most grateful and affectionate respect for the memory of his said noble kinsman and benefactor, and likewise out of respect to his maternal uncle, the Right Hon. THOMAS GRENVILLE), assume, take upon himself, and henceforward use the surname of GRENVILLE, in addition to and after that of NEVILLE, and also bear the arms of GRENVILLE quarterly in the first quarter with those of NEVILLE; and that such surname and arms may, in like manner, be taken, used and borne by his issue male, when and as they shall severally and respectively become entitled to the possession of certain estates in the county of Somerset, in virtue of the limitations of the said will.

FUNERAL OF THE DUKE OF ST. ALBANS.—At an early hour on Thursday morning, the remains of this nobleman were removed from his late residence in St. James's-square, for interment in the family vault at Lincoln. The procession consisted merely of the hearse and six horses, followed by one mourning coach, containing the butler and housekeeper to the deceased Duke. The nearest relatives of his Grace left town yesterday, and the funeral will take place in a private manner, the same having been the wish of this departed nobleman.

MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE.—By special license, at Abbeyliex church in the Queen's County, on Tuesday, the 26th of July, by the Rev. John Stokes, A. M. Vicar of Cobham, in the County of Kent, Lord Clifton, eldest son of the Earl of Darnley, to Emma Jane, third daughter of Sir John Parnell, Bart. and niece of the Earl of Portarlington. Among the company present on this interesting occasion were—the Earl and Countess of Darnley, Viscount and Viscountess de Vesci, Lady Elizabeth Bligh, Sir Henry Parnell, Bart. the Hon. and Rev. Wm. Wingfield, Hon. and Rev. Arthur Vesey, Mrs. Vesey, Hon. Charles Vesey, and the Rev. Mr. Newcombe. On leaving the church, the party proceeded to Abbeylicx-house, the seat of Viscount de Vesci, and partook of an elegant dejuené, immediately after which the happy couple set off for Clifton Lodge, in the County of Meath.

MATCH FROM CHELTENHAM.—A Mr. Danvers matched himself, at the finish of Cheltenham races, to go on foot from thence to Bayswater, 94 miles, in 22 hours, for 200 sovereigns. The start took place on Friday night, and the pedestrian performed 30 miles in six hours without stopping to refresh. He accomplished the 50 miles in half the stipulated time, and leisurely at rather more than four miles an hour, and won the match easy with ten minutes to spare. He wore flannels only, and thick shoes.

MR. GRAHAM AT BRISTOL.—Mr. Graham made his 29th ascent on Monday afternoon, at Bristol, from the Gas Company's Works, accompanied by Mr. Robert Jillard, at eight minutes before five o'clock. The fineness of the day caused several thousands of persons to assemble round the spot and the adjacent heights. The balloon rose gracefully with what seamen denominate a half gale, until it had attained a considerable altitude, when it took an easterly course for about ten minutes, and remained for some time stationary, perfectly visible for upwards of an hour.

THE FIGHT AT WARWICK BETWEEN THE BULL DOGS AND THE LION.

(from a correspondent on the spot.)

This combat took place at half-past seven o'clock on Tuesday in the factory yard, but from an anticipated hoax, the guinea admission customers were very shy. The dogs for the sport were of the best bull breed, viz. Turk, Captain, Tiger, Nettle Rose, Nelson, and a brindled bitch. The lion was released from his cage into a stage encircled with iron, and the seconds to the dogs were Edmonds, Jones, and Davis. The lion was so great a favourite that any odds were offered upon him, but no takers—not even by the owners of the dogs.

The first turned loose were Turk, Captain, and Tiger, and they all shewed their breed, but Nero pawed two of them rather unceremoniously after some minutes had elapsed, and they bolted. The remaining dog, Turk, kept at his work, and pinioned the lion by the nose for some time.

Mr. Wombwell, the owner of Nero, claimed a cessation of warfare for twenty minutes, agreeably to articles, and in this interval the lion shewed a want of courage, by moving majestically to the opposite part of the stage from where the dogs had entered, piping, open mouthed, and other unfavourable symptoms. 2 to 1 on the dogs.

The second turn loose soon settled the business. The dogs went to work, and the lion ran away from them, and here ended what some would have called the sports of the day. The two other dogs had nearly killed each other on a former day, and could not be shewn if wanted.

THE GREAT FIGHT.

The Stake-holder on this event having appointed 2 o'clock on Monday to give up the stakes to the winner, he accordingly attended. The Subscription-room, the yard, and the gateway, were crowded beyond precedent. The Stake-holder then announced that he had received the following letters from Mr. Carter, the Solicitor of Mr. Hayne, and Mr. Radford, the Umpire of Cannon:—

"Dear Sir,—Mr. Hayne has desired me to request you will not deliver up the stake of the fight between Cannon and Ward until the umpires and referee meet to decide the fairness of the battle.

"Yours, &c. W. A. Cartea.

"Furnival's Inn, 25th July, 1825."

"11, Furnival's Inn, July 25, 1825.

"Sir,—In consequence of serious doubts expressed by Mr. Hayne, of the character of the late fight between Thomas Cannon and James Ward, and these doubts having been confirmed by others, I feel it my duty, as umpire, on the part of Cannon, both for the sake of Mr. Hayne and the sporting world, to request that you will retain in your hands the stakes until a meeting shall have taken place between the umpire of Ward, the referee (Mr. Osbaldestone,) and myself. The articles specify "that the stakes are to be given up according to the award of the umpires and referee;" and no award having been made on the spot, I am, perhaps, justified in begging this short delay. In the interim, I shall expect that any evidence which can be produced to sustain Mr. Hayne's doubts will be brought forward. By Monday next our decision will, no doubt, be accomplished.

"I have the honour to be, &c. J. Radforn."

All the sporting men expressed the utmost astonishment at their contents, and immediately inquired if the Stake-holder was present at the fight, and if any objection was there taken by any party as to the fairness of the battle. The Stake-holder at once answered that he was present, and in conversation both with the umpires and the referee, and that not a single suspicion was breathed that the fight had not been fairly won. The Stake-holder then appealed generally to the judgment of the highest sporting gentlemen present, who declared that there was not the slightest pretence for withholding the payment of the stakes.—The Stake-holder, upon this declaration, instantly paid over the thousand pounds to the backer of Ward. This conduct gave universal satisfaction, and it was said that Mr. Hayne was only sparring for wind.

Cannon was present, and declared most honourably to himself that he had fairly lost, and that £200 was his own money. All bets were immediately paid.

On Wednesday an inquest was held at Great Hale, on view of the body of John Wesselby, of Bicker. Deceased had undertaken a journey to Great Hale, to visit some friends there, and was taken violently ill on the road. He was found by some chance passengers in a dying condition, and was only just able to articulate "Let me alone, I am going," when he almost instantly expired.—Verdict, "Died by the visitation of God."

Miraculous Escape.—A singular occurrence took place in the Gibbet Colliery near this town, on Tuesday the 19th instant. A young woman, of the name of Jane Tranter, fell by accident down the shaft of an ironstone pit, a depth of 110 yards, and what is almost incredible, she received no other injury except a few bruises upon her arms and legs, occasioned by catching against the pit-rope as she fell.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Knightsbridge Toll-Gate.—The workmen have begun to prepare the erection of the new toll-gate, near the Cannon Brewery, which is to supersede the Hyde Park corner gates. We understand that there will be only one toll-house, which will be erected in the centre of the road, leaving the carriages to pass on the right and left. This arrangement is likely to be of great benefit to Knightsbridge, and the whole erection is undertaken to be completed by October next.

Mr. Holmes, M. P. gained a 20,000*l.* prize in the Lottery just concluded.—Star.

A Carrier Pigeon.—A carrier pigeon being killed on its way from Scandaroon to Aleppo, the letter conveyed by it, instead of reaching the person for whom it was intended, fell into the hands of a European merchant of a different nation. It contained information of the excessive price to which gall-nuts, the most valuable article of commerce procured from Aleppo, had risen in Europe. The merchant, who had thus obtained the notice, immediately bought up all the gall-nuts he could find, and by this means acquired a very considerable gain. The circumstance naturally produced a great deal of jealousy and ill-will among the Europeans, and at length, to prevent the chance of a repetition of such dishonourable conduct, it was resolved by them, that in future no couriers of the kind should be used. Since that period, therefore, the practice has been discontinued. The pigeons had been known to perform the journey in two hours and a half. The distance between the two places is between sixty and seventy miles, in a straight line.

The Cosmorama.—This exhibition deserves to be ranked amongst the displays and application of the fine Arts, which minister at once to the pleasure of the eye, and are auxiliary to the information of the mind. There is much in it beyond the mere praise of artist-like ingenuity and beautiful picture. Many of the subjects are not only gratifying to the passing sight, but tend to excite and assist the attainment of knowledge relative to some of the most curious objects of historical and antiquarian research, the history of arts and of man in ages and regions the most remote from modern and local apprehension. The views of Athens and of the Ruins of Pæstium are particularly captivating, not only from the union of the architecural and picturesque, but associated with all the remembrances dear to us in the renown of elder times, and in the struggles of the present era. Our attention is, however, most rivetted and rewarded by the views of the Pyramids, the Sphynx, the great temple at Edfou, and the Ruins in the island of Phyloe, which carry us in imagination through wonders, and over vast deserts of a region, the primitive birth-place of Arts, Science, and Civilization, and still the objects of laborious and perilous research to the curiosity of the learned world. There are also many other objects more or less interesting, but the Bourse, or New Exchange in Paris, is quite unworthy of its plan and association.

Mansh & Co's Bankruptcy.—Saturday a Meeting of the Creditors was held at the Commissioners' Rooms, in Basinghall-street, when the creditors of Mr. Stracy and Mr. Graham were informed, that a dividend of 17s. 6d. in the pound would be paid on the private debts of the former, and 20s. in the pound on the private debts of the latter. It is expected that in a few days a further dividend will be declared on the bankruptcy; this may however, be prevented by the Bank of England, who have not yet relinquished their claims for Mr. Fauntleroy's forgeries. The Bank are well aware that every objection is made to their claim; but then, they say, that as guardians of the public property, they have a right to make that claim. Should they persevere, the dividend will not be paid, nor, in fact, can the creditors be at all benefitted until the Directors decide, at their meeting in October, what course they will pursue.

Sir Wm. Curtis returned to Ramsgate on Tuesday last from his Baltic excursion, and arrived in London on Thursday night, by the steam packet, in high health and spirits.

The Royal Society of Sciences, in its Sitting of the 22d of this month, admitted Mr. Thomas Campbell, one of the most distinguished literati of England, among the number of its non-resident Members. Mr. Campbell is now at Paris.—Etoile.

Sir Walter Scott.—Monday se'nnight the freedom of the Guild of Merchants of Dublin was proposed to Sir Walter Scott, by W. Glascock, Esq. seconded by R. Horan, Esq. which was carried unanimously. The Master of the Guild, Sheriff Lamprey, having notified this civic compliment to Sir Walter, he returned the following answer:—

"Sir,—I am apprised by your letter, just received, that the Guild of Merchants of the City of Dublin have done me the distinguished honour of enrolling me in their Incorporation. It would be difficult for me to express the feelings excited by such an unexpected and gratifying mark of distinction; and I must beg of your kindness to express, in the warmest terms, my sense of obligation to the highly respected Guild of Dublin. Be pleased to receive, at the same time, my personal acknowledgment for the polite manner in which you have intimated the favour which it has been the pleasure of the Guild to confer on me; and believe me, with sincerity, Sir, your honoured and obliged humble servant. "Walter Scott."

Dublin, July 19, 1824.

"J. Lamprey, Esq. Master of the Guild of Dublin,

COURT OF CHANCERY.

Robson v. Cameron.—The Lorn Chancellor said he was again called upon, for the third or fourth time, to deliver his judgment in this case. The court had said a great while ago, that where a bill was filed by a creditor, and a decree had been made directing the creditors generally to go before the Master, and prove their debts, no individual could proceed at law. He had heard no ground of relief stated in the present instance, which took the plaintiff's case out of the general rule. Although he had intimated his opinion to the same effect, the injunction restraining the plaintiff had not been drawn up, but the parties had acted much in the same way as if it had, for they had done nothing. He remained decidedly of opinion that it was not in his power to refuse the injunction. It must therefore be drawn up, but without prejudice to the right of the creditor to go before the Master.—Mr. Lowe, the solicitor, made some observations we did not distinctly hear, but their tendency was to accuse the court of delay.—The Lord Chancellor said there was no ground for the imputation of delay; for this was a case in which the court had expressed its opinion long ago.—Mr. Lowe said it was not for him to reply upon the court, but this was the first time the representative of a deceased person had been permitted to admit a debt in favour of a simple contract creditor, to the prejudice of a bond creditor.—The Lorn Chancellor observed that there was no pretence for saying that the bill had been filed by a simple contract creditor, to the prejudice of the bond creditor, because the debts would be paid in the ordinary course of administration, and would obtain the priorities to which, from the nature of the securities, they were entitled. As to Mr. Lowe's saying this was the first time such a thing had been done, perhaps Mr. Lowe would prefer sitting in the Lord Chancellor's chair, where he might reverse all his predecessors had done. His lordship added, that he had rather Mr. Lowe should do so than that he should. He did not apprehend that any gentleman at the bar could remember any distinction being made as to whether the plaintiff in a suit of this kind was a simple contract or specialty creditor. The decree having been made for the benefit of the creditors at large, did not affect their right to priorities.—Mr. Hart said he always understood the doctrine of the court to be so. He had had many orders pronounced against himself upon the principle laid down by his lordship.

POLICE.

Bow-Street.—The noblemen and gentlemen of the Fancy will be sorry to learn that their old "pal," young Ned Stockman, once the cock of the walk among the light-weights, and always the friend and patron of the light-fingers, is in serious trouble at this office on a charge of having assisted in cleaning out his friend, Mr. Richard Crouch, to the tune of £352 flimsey, after having assisted in beating the head of the said Richard to a mummy, and kicking his front teeth down his throat.—Ned was nibbled on this queer charge just as he was toddling from his roost, in Walker-street, Oxford-road, last Saturday morning, by that staunch spoil-prig, Bond, sen., who brought him forthwith to this office, where Mr. Richard Crouch was in waiting—with a green shade over his eyes to hide the blacking, a pair of lacerated lips, and no front teeth; fully prepared to substantiate the charge, as far as in him lay: Mr. Pedestrian Metcalfe, and Mr. Solicitor Wolley attending as his backers; whilst honest Ned had no backer at all, except the wall at the back of the bar.—The evidence against him was in substance thus:—Mr. R. Crouch, ex-maltster, of Ravensworth, near Richmond, in Yorkshire (when at home,) had the honour of training Jem Ward for his late bruising bout with the great Gun of Windsor; and of course he was present at the said bruizing-bout, at Warwick, last Tuesday. After the fun was over and the ex-maltster had seen his man tucked up between the Witneys at the Hare and Hounds, he repaired to the Warwick Arms to draw his winnings and lendings from some of the gentlemen of the Fancy who honoured that hotel by feeding there. Ned Stockman, the canonized Josh. Hudson, and walking Metcalfe, accompanied the ex-maltster on this bustle-bagging expedition; and Ned Stockman stood by whilst he received £200 from a gentleman of the Fancy, named Priestly; which £200 he deposited among many other bank notes in his pocket-book—making a tempting total of £352 flimsey as aforesaid. This done, the ex-maltster, Metcalfe, and Stockman, left the Warwick Arms; the ex-maltster intending to return to the Hare and Hounds, where there was to be a grand Fancy feed among the fighting men; but Ned Stockman was so urgent with the ex-maltster to look in at the public house called the Warwick Castle, that he consented, and there honest Ned introduced him and Metcalfe to a select party of fifteen gentlemen of the Fancy, supposed to be from that place which Edmund Burke denominated "the toy-shop of the world." Not one of these gentlemen was known either to the ex-maltster or his friend Metcalfe; and they had not been many minutes among them, before Ned Stockman seized one of the least of them and chucked him head-foremost against Master Metcalfe's victualling depot. This he pretended to do by way of a lark; but the ex-maltster was decidedly of opinion that there was more of the hawk the lark in it, and so it turned out; for in the next moment he found himself upon the floor with five or six of the strange gentlemen battering away at him, fist and foot, until his senses were battered out of him; and at last he found himself in the street, minus his front teeth, and the £352 above-mentioned. He also found honest Ned Stockman standing by his side and condoling with him upon his misfortune; but all the other gentlemen were gone; and when the ex-maltster very naturally asked honest Ned who they were, he replied, "I know every one of them, but what's the use of telling their names, you'll never get a shilling of your money back again!" This curious answer convinced the ex-maltster of what he before only suspected—viz. that the whole affair was a trap laid by honest Ned Stockman to get hold of his money, and therefore he resolved to prosecute him.—Metcalfe also corroborated this suspicion of honest Stockman's integrity—"for," said he, "when I laid hold of one of them chaps, and was punching his head, you know, Stockman told me I was wrong, and got him away from me; and let me be punching which of 'em I would, Stockman always said I was punching the wrong man."—The Magistrate now asked honest Ned what he had to say in his defence. "Why, Lord love your worship!" he replied, "what's the use of my saying anything—its no use in the world my opening my mouth to say a word, and they swearing through thick and thin athisn's. Why, Mr. Crouch! I wonder a man like you, will go for to say as I told you I know'd any 'em—for I never said no such thing; but I think I should know one of 'em again, if so be I were to see him."—Oh, don't tell me—that's all gammon!" exclaimed the ex-maltster; and honest Ned Stockman was committed for further examination.

Tuesday was the day appointed for the further examination of the charge against the Chatterley-smitten Mr. Christmas, who, as our readers will recollect, is in custody on a charge of embezzling an Exchequer bill of £1,000 value, the property of his late employers, Messrs. Hoares, the bankers; but, to the great disappointment of the amateurs in such matters, the said examination did not take place. We understand that it is postponed sine die, in consequence of the death of one of the prosecutors, though there are some "deep ones" about the office who boldly prophecy that the charge will be allowed to evaporate upon condition of the person principally concerned therein transporting himself out of these realms.

Hatton-Garden.—Tuesday a young man, named Wm. Sydney Smith, was brought up in the custody of Prendergast, a director of the Bow-street patrol, charged with maliciously stabbing Chas. Waters, of Brook-street, Holborn, with intent to murder the said Charles Waters, or do him some grievous bodily harm.—The case excited very great interest, and occupied the attention of Mr. Serjeant Sellon, the sitting magistrate, for nearly three hours.—Mr. Waters stated that he kept the Three Tuns public-house in Brook-street, Holborn. On Saturday night, the 16th instant, the prisoner at the bar was in his tap-room; some bricklayers were also there, but not in his company. The prisoner was observed to go across from his own box to the table where the bricklayers were sitting, one of whom afterwards complained of having had a handkerchief stolen out of his hat, and pointed out the prisoner as the person who took it. Complainant being unwilling that such a circumstance should occur in his house, where a great number of working people were in the habit of coming on a Saturday night to be paid, called upon Smith, if he had taken the handkerchief, to give it up immediately. Smith at first denied having seen any handkerchief, but subsequently in effect admitted the fact, by an expression he let fall, which was, "I'll be d——d if you shall have it." Complainant then endeavoured to pull him out of the box, and in the struggle Smith threw himself on his back on the floor, and while he (Waters) was leaning over him, he found that Smith was striking at him, as he conceived, with his clenched hand, but ultimately he discovered that he was stabbing him with a knife, which he drew out of his waistcoat-pocket. The first plunge was made at his right side, and cut quite through his coat, waistcoat, and shirt, but without wounding the flesh; however, the next was more certain, the blade being buried to the handle in the fleshy part of the right arm, with which he held his prisoner; a second and a third time he plunged the knife into the arm, until at length pain and loss of blood occasioned him to let go his hold, and he (complainant), in a very weak state, was then taken out to a surgeon's, Mr. Dymonds, in Holborn, under whose care he had since been.—Mary Davis, servant to Mr. Waters, stated that he distinctly saw the prisoner Smith take the handkerchief out of the bricklayer's hat, but she at the same time conceived it was only done for a joke. When her master and the prisoner were struggling, witness saw the latter take the knife out of his pocket with his right hand, the left he had then in Mr. Water's neckcloth, and he opened the knife by means of his teeth; witness instantly called out, "Oh! God, the villain has a knife in his hand—he's going to murder my master." The witness then ran to the bar for assistance, and on returning to the tap-room met Mr. Waters coming out as pale as death, and quite bloody. The prisoner immediately sprung at witness, and made a stab with the knife towards her bosom. Witness sprung aside, and grasped the hand in which he held the knife, which with great difficulty she succeeded in getting from him; prisoner then made towards the door and effected his escape. Witness had since heard, that prisoner, on the same evening, had stabbed a young woman in Gray's Inn-lane. He was a little intoxicated.—The knife, with which the wounds were inflicted, was produced by Welderman, the street-keeper, as werealso the clothes which Mr. Waters wore on the night in question; the waistcoat was cut on the left breast, and the sleeve of the right urm was also very much gashed. The whole were stained with blood, of which there must have been a great effusion.—The surgeon who is in attendance on Mr. Waters, has stated, that if the knife had entered on the inside of the arm, it must necessarily have severed the main artery, and of course the consequence would have been fatal. Two of the wounds were both long and deep, and a great portion of muscle was protruding.—The prisoner made no defence whatever, and seemed to treat the proceeding with the most perfect indifference as to the result.—Mr. Sergeant Sellon inquired if there was any one present who knew any thing of his previous habits or mode of life? So sanguinary an outrage must certainly have been produced by a long acquaintance with crime.—A poor old man stepped forward, and, with tears in his eyes, confessed himself, unfortunately, as he said, the father of this abandoned young man, who some time back had been in a comfortable service with a gentleman named Brown, of Brunswick-square, but was destroyed by keeping bad company. The father said he would consider it a happy circumstance if he was sent out of the country altogether, as it might be the means of saving his life.—All the witnesses were bound over to prosecute, and the prisoner was committed for trial.

Mansion-house.—On Wednesday, a boy named Watson, was brought before the Lord Mayor, charged with having stolen Leghorn bonnets, amounting in value to a very large sum, from Mr. Anderson, warehouseman, of St. Martin's-le-Grand; the amount of the depredations was believed to be upwards of 1000*l.* A Jew named Emanuel, and his wife, were charged as receivers of the stolen property.—Mr. Anderson's statement was as follows:—Watson has been in his employment six or seven years, and was never suspected of dishonesty until Mr. Anderson received an anonymous letter, informing him that his boy was robbing him constantly. As the business of the house was very large, the depredations had not been observed, and probably would have remained undiscovered, had not this information been communicated. A watch was set upon Watson, in whose coat pocket four bonnets squeezed together were perceived one evening, but by some awkward management theperson appointed to follow him to the receiver lost him in the street. Upon his return to his master's house, the bonnets were of course not to be found. Mr. Anderson then charged him with the offence which had been just committed, and he without hesitation acknowledged that he had been robbing the concern for two years, and that he had sold what he had stolen to Emanuel and his wife. Watson seemed extremely penitent, and solemnly declared that he had been urged by Emanuel to plunder his master, notwithstanding his frequent objections to the wicked design. "He came to me (said the boy), two years ago, and first prevailed on me to pilfer at a small rate, and he gave me some money every time I brought him property. I at last was induced to steal largely, but my conscience struck me often, and I told him I would rob no more. Very well, said Emanuel, then if you don't go on I'll go to your master and tell what you are, and how you have been robbing him. I was terrified at this threat of exposure, and was thus compelled to go on with the robbery; I always took Leghorn bonnets, and Emanuel gave me about a fourth of the real value." Mr. Anderson, who, if he had applied more promptly to the City Police, would no doubt have been enabled to trace the sale of the bonnets at the receiver's, then sent for an officer, but it was too late.—Emanuel was laughing during the greater part of the time the examination was going forward.—A police officer, who searched Emanuel's premises, in Cox's-square, Spitalfields, produced a very handsome Leghorn bonnet which he found there. Mr. Anderson said he believed the bonnet to be one of his, but he could not swear to that fact, as he had no private mark upon it. The bonnet was worth from 2*l.* 10s. to 3*l.*—Mr. Anderson said he was rather inclined to believe that the boy was sincere in his repentance, as he had quitted his service some time ago, without any apparent motive, and had since declared that it went bitterly against his conscience to rob in such a manner, but that the compulsion used by Emanuel was of such a nature that he felt it necessary to return and rob on as usual. This account of the transaction excited the indignation of every one who heard it in the Justice Room, against Emanuel.—The Lord Mayor regretted that the prosecutor had not at a more early period called in the assistance of the police.—Mr. Anderson pleaded the lateness of the hour, and the suddenness of the thing in excuse.—His Lordship then most reluctantly permitted Emanuel and his wife to leave the Justice-room, stating to them, however, that they were liable to be brought up again on the same charge, and that he should expect they would attend the moment they should receive notice to that effect.—Watson was remanded for further examination.

Marlborough-street.—A young man, named Berry, of respectable appearance and manner, accompanied by his wife, an interesting young woman, about 18 years of age, was brought to the office by a constable, charged by a man named Manning, who keeps a lodging house in Rathbone-place, with an assault. Manning stated that Mr. Berry being a lodger in his house, and being a week in arrears of the rent of a room which himself and his wife occupied, he, Manning, went up that morning to demand payment, which not being complied with, he introduced Mr. Davis, a broker, to take an inventory of Mr. and Mrs. Berry's property, upon which Mr. Berry struck him, and pushed him over a washhand basin, and tore his coat.—Mr. Davis, the broker, who seemed very anxious to uphold the cause of Mr. Manning, confirmed the statement of the latter as to the assault, and said that Mr. Manning offered not the least offence, and he never knew a better behaved, quieter man in his life; indeed he would not hurt a fly, he was so tender hearted. Mr. Berry gave the following statement of the case, which, in the view of the Magistrate and all who heard it, gave it a very different complexion:—He said that he had been for some time in London trying to get a situation in the navy, to which service he belonged, and not being very flush with money, he took a small apartment, at a very moderate rent, for himself and his wife, at the house of Mr. Manning. He continued to pay the rent every week regularly until last Saturday, when he unfortunately was disappointed in some money he expected, and apologised to Mr. Manning, but told him that he would pay him both weeks' rent on the following Saturday, and would then be leaving, as he had got a situation on board the Glasgow frigate, which he must join about that time, and was taking his wife with him in the vessel. Mr. Manning seemed satisfied at this arrangement; but, notwithstanding, he came up to their room that morning, bringing a broker with him, and commenced taking possession of every little article belonging to them, even his wife's clothes, who was at the time in the act of dressing herself, and they actually seized the gown and things she was putting on her, and a bonnet she was about to go out in, was torn to pieces, as was the gown. Manning also endeavoured to force from his (Mr. Berry's) hands a pair of gloves, which he was then in the act of drawing on him, intending to go out, and upon this it was that the scuffle ensued; and he did, he believed, push Mr. Manning, but never attempted to strike him. A constable was then sent for, and he, Mr. Berry, was dragged off to the office as a prisoner.—Mr. Dyer, the Magistrate, asked the constable what he saw of the assault?—The constable replied nothing at all; he only knew what Mr. Manning and Mr. Davis told him.—Mr. Dyer then said, that he had no authority whatever to take Mr. Berry into custody without a warrant, or without at least seeing himself that a breach of the peace had been committed. He had entirely exceeded his duty.—Mrs. Berry, who seemed much ashamed at the exposure of her own and her husband's private circumstances, and concealed her face as much as possible during the investigation, was now called upon by the Magistrate to state if she had any complaint to make against any one for any act of violence towards her. She said she did not wish to make any complaint, but ever since she had been in those lodgings she had been very much annoyed and insulted by Mrs. Manning, who is a very vulgar ignorant woman, and with whom she does not, and could not associate.—Mr. Dyer said, that Mr. Manning and his broker were very much mistaken if they supposed that they had a right to drag the clothes off people's backs for rent in the manner stated. The law allowed no such unfeeling proceedings. In this case he would discharge Mr. Berry, on the conditions of his promising to pay the rent, and quit the lodgings by Saturday. Mr. Berry assured the Magistrate he would do so. He never intended or attempted to remove an article belonging to him until the rent was paid.

Guildhall.—Half Sovereigns.—Caution.—A decent-looking labouring man applied to the sitting magistrate, Mr. Alderman Bridges, for a summons against an individual for illegally detaining a half-sovereign. He had occasion, he said, on Saturday last, to employ the individual whom he now charged to do some job, and intending to give him the price of a pint of porter, gave him, as he then thought, a sixpence, receiving back from him the change, but, upon subsequently looking at his money, he discovered he had given him a half-sovereign instead of a sixpence. He was himself positive as to the fact, because he knew that just previously the money he had in his pocket was 15s. 6d., consisting of the half-sovereign, five shillings, and one sixpence. About three quarters of an hour after the occurrence, having occasion again to look at his money, the half-sovereign was gone, and the exact five shillings and sixpence remained. In the interval from his parting with the man up to that moment, he had not paid any money whatever away, and was therefore quite sure he must have given him the half-sovereign, through mistake, for the sixpence.—On the discovery, he went immediately to look for the man, and, upon meeting with him, and his denying receiving the half-sovereign, an officer happening to be present, searched him: neither the half-sovereign, however, nor indeed any money of any kind, was found in his possession. That, indeed, was to have been expected, for if he were dishonest enough to have taken the half-sovereign in the first instance, he must of course, have expected it would be missed; and as two hours had elapsed, he had plenty of time to prevent any thing being found upon him that should lead to his detection.—Mr. Alderman Bridges thought it was very probable the occurrence had taken place as the complainant stated, from his own experience, for he had indeed been himself a fellow-sufferer in precisely a similar manner, having in no less than three instances given a half-sovereign in mistake for a sixpence. The last he parted with in this way was to a post-boy, and although he was quite positive, from the change he he knew he had about him, and his discovering the mistake almost immediately that it was a half-sovereign he had given the fellow, he as positively denied it, "and I found myself," said the worthy alderman, "without a remedy. As a magistrate, I can render you no assistance whatever; but as the transaction in your case happened in the City, you may probably obtain redress by summoning the man to the Court of Requests. That court, I understand, have taken cognizance of circumstances of this kind; and upon your making your application there, and stating the facts, they will allow you to swear to the amount as a debt, and grant you a summons against the fellow for 9s. 6d."—The applicant thanked the worthy Alderman for his information, and withdrew, expressing his determination to follow the advice he had received.

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

Waterford, July 19.—On Saturday the following tragical affair took place in Dungarvan:—Two privates of the detachment of the 58th regiment quartered there, named John Mulligan and Daniel Game; the former an Irishman, the latter a native of England, having quarrelled with each other, agreed to fight a duel, with their muskets! Accordingly they loaded their pieces, and placing themselves at a distance of about sixteen paces from each other, snapped, but without doing any execution. Game's shot missing his opponent, and Mulligan's musket not going off. The latter, as we have heard (but of this part of the transaction, it is right to observe, there are different versions), then laid aside his arms, and expressed a desire to be reconciled to his opponent (with whom he had previously been on very friendly terms), but Game, still under the influence of passion, and heated by intoxication, declined the proffered reconciliation, reloaded his piece, and fired at his unfortunate comrade, who received the ball in his neck, and fell dead on the spot. The survivor, Game, has been committed to the county gaol, under the Coroner's warrant to abide his trial at the ensuing assizes. The deceased, we understand, was a young man of excellent character and amiable disposition, was very much esteemed in the regiment.

Bath, July 25.—At a very numerously attended Vestry of the Abbey parish, held on Thursday, a plan for the enlargement of the choir of that Church, and making upwards of 100 free sittings, and building a Gothic stone screen, correspondent with the building, having been submitted to their consideration, was unanimously approved, and a Committee appointed to carry it into execution.

Sudden Deaths, Accidents, &c.—On Wednesday morning, a female having the care of a house in Gay-street, was found dead in her bed.—A young man in Walcot, died from the effects of drinking cold water while heated during the night.—A workman in the service of Messrs. English and Co. in a fit of delirium (supposed from the heat of the weather), threw himself out of a window and was killed.—A man was taken out of the river on Wednesday night. He was conveyed to the Casualty Hospital, where, after some time, he recovered.—As Mr. Norval, publican, of the Vineyards, was driving a young horse and gig, the animal ran away, when Mr. N. was thrown out and severely injured. The horse was also so much hurt, that it was found necessary to kill it.

Stirling.—Stabbing—An instance of this revolting crime, at one time very rare in this country, but now becoming alarmingly common, we regret to say, happened here last week. Neil Macpherson, a young man who resides with his parents, in a house in Bridge-street, had gone home, after indulging two freely in drinking spirits. In the other end of the same house, a person of the name of Fairley resides, and to whose wife Macpherson applied offensive language. Fairley interfered to resent the insult thus offered, when the offender struck him, and drew a knife and inflicted several wounds on the wife about the head and breast; he then pursued the husband and gave him also several wounds. His parents, we understand, are decent and sober, and have often experienced such unbecoming treatment from their depraved son, as called for the interference of their neighbours. On seeing the consequences of his unconquerable rage, he entered his own room, locked the door, and eseaped by a back window, and has, as yet, eluded the vigilance of his pursuers. Fortunately none of the wounds are considered of a dangerous nature.

Wantage, July 22.—On Friday last, died, at West Lockinge, aged 55, Mr. Simon Brown, an eminent farmer, whose loss will be severely felt, and virtues long remembered, in that neighbourhood. Mr. Brown's illness was short, and attended at its commencement by a remarkable coincidence. He was, on Saturday, the 2d inst. celebrating with a few friends his fifty-fifth anniversary, when a young lady present sang a song in which were the following or siuilar words—

"Death struck his dart into his heart,"

After the repetition of which, Mr. B. placing his hand on his breast, exclaimed, "Death has struck his dart into my heart, I think!" but the party, not considering this exclamation to proceed from any serious indisposition, took no notice of it, till his increasing illness forced itself on their attention, and in less than a fortnight he was a corpse.

Brighton, July 27.—The town is filling so fast that scarcely a bed is to be had. At the Pavillion (or Palace) there are the Duke of York, and Duke and Duchess of Cambridge. In the town the Duke and Duchess of Richmond, Duchess of Rutland, (the Duke expected), the Earl and Countess of Tankerville, Lord George Lennox, Lady Alvanley, (just arrived) Lord and Lady Kinnoul, Earl and Countess of Coventry, Ladies Paget (just arrived), Earl and Countess of Jersey, looked for every minute; Duke and Duchess of Argyll, will be here on Friday; the Marquis of Exeter, though one of the Stewards of the Races, is not expected to be here. There are also, Lady Caroline Cotton, Lady Mary Bennet, Hon. Mrs. Coventry.—Lord George Cavendish's horse, Bizarre, is the favourite for the cup to-morrow. The Theatre opened with great eclat on Monday last.

Glasgow, July 22.—At seven o'clock on Saturday evening, an Officer and a party of the 5th Dragoons, at present in garrison at Glasow, were ordered off to Port Glasgow, on an application by the Magistrates of that town, who were apprehensive of a visit from some ruffians in Greenock. The business originated in an affray at the fair of Port Glasgow, on Tuesday last, the particulars of which are variously described, but all agree that the attack was made most unprovokedly by the Greenock people, and that the Authorities in Port Glasgow behaved with great moderation on the occasion. As no unpleasant accounts have come up the water this morning, we conclude all is quiet, and have no doubt that the judicious exertions of the respective Magistrates of the two towns, will quash the present absurd ferment.

Modern Travelling Accommodation.—Some of the proprietors in this city having advertised the fares from hence to Teignmouth, "2s. inside, 1s. outside, or what you please," Mr. Congdon, of the hotel, one of those who did not publish any such proposal, on Tuesday last actually gave a party of tradesmen, who were about to start from his house for the above place, a sumptuous breakfast; promising them also, if they were not perfectly satisfied, that they should have a handsome supper supplied to them on their return in the evening. This is a realization of what is likely to please, and a cheering prospect on the road.—Exeter Alfred.

At the Roscommon Assizes, three soldiers, of the names of O'Connor (a sergeant), Ganly, and Glynn, were indicted for forcibly carrying off an interesting young female, of the name of Jane Matthews, with intent that O'Connor should marry her. The force used was very considerable, and her resistance great. She was taken from Athlone to Balinasloe. The character and conduct of the young person were extremely good: and what aggravated the violence was, that she disliked O'Connor, and was attached to another. The case was rendered singular by this, that her father and mother were favourable to the views of the prisoner, urged him to take her off and appeared as a witness against their daughter in his defence. The jury reprobated their conduct, and Baron Smith concurred in their censure of it, more particularly with regard to the mother. The jury found guilty, but recommended them to mercy. So did the Grand Jury; and the Judge promised to forward both recommendations. The prisoners obtained a good character, and this, and the encouragement given by the parents, and the fact that no violation of the person of the girl took place, caused the jurors to recommend.—Dublin Morning Post.

ACCIDENTS, OFFENCES, &c.

A robbery to a considerable amount in money, was committed a few nights since at the apartments of the Officers of the Royal Artillery in Colewort Barracks, the neighbourhood of which has been the resort of various persons of indifferent character, during the Fair, on their visit to a Booth called "Vauxhall." The money was at the Officers' Mess Fund, and was taken from a trunk where it had been deposited in four different bags; it amounted to upwards of one hundred pounds, besides a bill of exchange upon Cox and Greenwood for twenty-five pounds odd. On the following morning three of the bags were picked up by a man who was passing the field opposite to Hampshire Terrace—one of them containing a quantity of half-pence, and in another was the aforesaid Bill of Exchange, which the person who found it, attempted to get cashed at the Portsea Bank, where it was detained. On searching the ground where the bags were found, the fourth bag was discovered, buried under the surface, and which also contained a quantity of copper: the other part of the property has not yet been discovered—Several persons have been apprehended under suspicious circumstances and are committed for further examination.

Thursday, a man named Edward Page, who has suffered seven years' transportation for house-breaking, was brought to Union-hall, charged with stealing a double-barrelled fowling-piece, value £12, the property of a foreign gentleman named Nurinex, residing in Camden-town. The evidence appeared to the sitting magistrate to be conclusive, and the prisoner was fully committed for trial.

During the exhibition of the fire-works on Friday evening, at Vauxhall-gardens, a part of the combustibles fell into an old walnut-tree, standing on the premises of the Reverend Francis Moore, the Minister of Vauxhall-chapel, which, after smothering till twelve o'clock the next day, at length broke into flames, and the tree, together with an adjoining fowl-house, pig-stye and some paling, was destroyed.

Destruction of Two Flocks of Sheep by Dogs.—In the night of Wednesday last, eighty-five ewes and lambs, part of the highly esteemed Southdown flock, belonging to Mr. John Bawtree, of Louthminster, were destroyed by two dogs, a pointer and a terrier: but for the presence of the shepherd, a more extensive destruction appears to have been contemplated by these canine animals.—Fortunately the shepherd had that morning risen somewhat earlier than usual, and when he had reached the spot where he had hoped to find the objects of his care in perfect safety, the dead and dying presented themselves in such numbers as to cause the most poignant grief to his mind. Sixty of these inoffencive animals were lying dead, and presented a most shocking spectacle; twenty-five others were so mutilated as to be past recovery, which were very humanely relieved of their sufferings, but which produced but very little beyond the offal.—Even after all this damage the murderers had not fully satiated their thirst for blood, but were pursuing the remnant of the flock, as it would appear with a determination to its final destruction. The Reverend Gentleman to whom the dogs belong was from home, and this truly lamentable occurrence is said to have arisen from the negligence of his servants in not confining the dogs as directed. About forty sheep were destroyed in a similar manner a short time since at Manifold Wyck Farm, in Tolleshunt Knights, the property of Mr. Wood, of Langford. The shepherds of ancient days "watched their flocks by night," to protect them from ravenous wolves: it appears equally necessary in these days, in order to secure this valuable property against the like disposition, which the most domestic animals appear to retain.

Awful Instance of Sudden Death.—Monday morning, as an elderly gentleman was walking along Bow-lane, Broad-street, St. Giles's, apparently in good health, he was observed to stagger as if intoxicated, when he fell backwards on the pavement. He was instantly surrounded by a crowd of persons, who lifted him up, and perceived in his countenance all the agonies of death. A surgeon was sent for, while the unfortunate Gentleman was carried into a private house, where every humane assistance was offered; but on the arrival of the surgeon, he was quite dead. On searching his pockets, some gold and silver monies were found on him, together with a valuable silver watch, and some letters, from which it appeared he had been transacting business of a private nature at the West end of the town. It is not positively known who or what he was. The name of "Picton, Old-street," was on one of the letters. He is of portly appearance, with powdered hair, and of gentlemanly aspect, dressed in black.

DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

A general assembly of the Theatre Royal Drury-Lane proprietors was held in the saloon of the theatre, at two o'clock on Saturday, to receive the annual statement of accounts from the committee, and to elect auditors and other officers, in the room of those who, according to routine form, annually retire. Mr. Calcraft, M.P., was called to the chair.

The Chairman, after stating the object of the meeting, said that the Secretary would read the report of the sub-committee, which comprised a particular relation of the affairs of the concern, well calculated to give general satisfaction.

Mr. Dunn then read the report.

The sub-committee was then re-appointed for the ensuing year; and so were the old auditors. Other routine appointments were then made, and apologies for absence, on account of indisposition and the pressure of other business, given for Sir Thomas Turton, the Hon. Douglas Kinnaird, and Mr. Soane.

Thanks were also unanimously voted to the chairman and the committee.

On the vote of thanks to the lessee (Mr. Elliston) being also unanimously carried, and acknowledged by that gentleman, who said he had only done his duty to the theatre,

Mr. Robins remarked, that he thought the time had come when they ought to give Mr. Elliston a more solid proof of their sense of the value of his services, by presenting him with a solid piece of plate—such a proof ought not, he thought, to be longer deferred. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Elliston interfered, and entreated Mr. Robins not to press that motion at present. "Consider, my dear Sir," said Mr. Elliston, "you are going to build, and you do not know what expense you may incur; leave it at any rate till next year, and then the plate will be heavier." (Laughter.)

Mr. Robins then gave notice that at the next annual meeting he would move that a piece of plate of substantial value be given to Mr. Elliston, in token of the respect and gratitude of the preprietors.

THE LIVING SKELETON.

The name of the Living Skeleton is Claude Ambroise Seurat; he is a native of Troyes, in Champaigne, was borne on the 10th of April, 1798, and is consequently twenty-seven years of age. On inquiry as to whether any object had presented itself during his mother's pregnancy, to create a fright, we were assured to the contrary, which was the more unlikely, in consequence of the mother having been very short-sighted.

The child, on coming into the world, presented the customary baby form, its features being handsome; but in proportion as the infant grew, the frame gradually wasted away, and so continued to decrease until the attainment of its full stature, which occurred according to the usual term of life, at which period Claude Ambroise Seurat had attained his present height of five feet seven inches and a half, when his frame had dwindled to the living skeleton form it now personifies. Having been shaved, for the purpose of displaying the formation of the skull, in order to prevent the effect of cold, he wears a wig, the colour of his eye-brows, which are a dark chesnut brown. The pupils of his eyes are large, full, and penetrating; the whites very clear, and his sight strong; but the upper lids appear rather to weigh downwards, from a laxity of the muscles, added to which there is a glaziness in the sight, that conveys a something of ghastliness to the general appearance. His teeth are perfect; his powers of mastication very good, as there is no defect in the strength of the jaws. His right shoulder inclines very much downwards, while the left rises in proportion. The upper joints of the arms present nothing but bones covered with the skin, their circumference measuring just four inches; while the fore arms, on the contrary, are five inches and a half. The hands are particularly long, and the nails beautifully formed; but the fingers are contracted upwards. The muscles of the arms are, however, wasted away or contracted, so that our subject does not possess the power of elevating the hands higher than in a semi-horizontal position, and when in that attitude nothing can possibly exceed the sepulchral appearance of this living anatomy.

Perhaps one of the most wonderful circumstances attending the living skeleton is, that if measured externally from the chest to the backbone, the distance is under three inches.

Taken round the waist at the bottom of the ribs, the body measures barely one foot eleven inches, and when the object throws its arms backwards the shoulder blade bones are scarcely one inch asunder. From the vertibræ of the back, taken between the shoulders to the centre of the loins, the falling-in is not less than five inches.

The thighs are much smaller than the legs, and like the upper joints of the arms merely covered with skin: the knees of a reddish colour, protrude in the front and sides, forming as it were a bowl at the bottom of the thigh-bones. The legs, of which the right is the largest, merely show signs of calves, particularly the latter; and the main arteries of the exterior of the thighs and legs are large and full, which were no doubt augmented by the excessive heat of the weather.

When in France, he ate very little if any animal food, a penny French-roll was enough for a day's sustenance; but as he now partakes of animal diet in very small quantities, his portion of bread is reduced accordingly.

His digestion is extremely good, and the evacuations of nature regularly performed—his sleep is uninterrupted, except at certain periods, when he has violent attacks of the night-mare; to dispel which his father, who always sleeps with him, and carefully watches his motions, on perceiving their approach, merely touches him with the hand, when the whole subsides. His voice is by no means strong, but far from disagreeable: he has a particular passion for music, and even can sing in a faint tone; but conversation must not be kept up for any length of time, as complete exhaustion would be the consequence. When speaking, the rotatory motion through the skin of the neck is perceptible, and the pulsation of the heart conspicuous to the eye.

In raising either of his feet from the floor, the limb appears to be distended uselessly from the knee, and we cannot better illustrate this idea than by that sensation we commonly experience upon allowing a limb to remain too long in one position, thereby causing a temporary strangulation of the vessels, known by the common term of the foot being asleep.

Previous to the arrival of this extraordinary creature in England, the French physicians who had inspected him gave it as their opinion, that his lungs were placed in a different position to that usually occupied in the human frame. Since his arrival, Sir Astley Cooper, by whom he has been visited, finds that his heart is placed so much out of the common region allotted to it, that it is precisely its own length lower than if properly placed.

The health of this singular being has been uninterruptedly good, except about five years ago, when he had a liver complaint, which subjected him to the application of numerous leeches, the traces of which are still visible on his skin. His respiration is confined; being the necessary result of a contraction of the lungs; yet upon the whole he does not appear to be much inconvenienced on that account, in consequence of the little exercise he takes and the consequent quiescent state of the animal system.

In regard to the texture of the skin of this living wonder, it is of a dry, moistless, parchment-like appearance, which, covering any other human form, would not answer the purposes of its functions, but seems calculated alone to cover the slender juiceless body of the being whom nature intended it to array. On the shins, nodes appear in the form of buttons, though not obtrusively to the eye; and the toes of the feet are bent over one another.

The ribs are not only capable of being distinguished, but may be clearly separated and counted one by one, and handled like so many pieces of cane, and, together with the skin which covers them, resemble more the hoops and outer covering of a balloon of a small size, than any thing in the ordinary course of nature. We come now to the action produced by the effort of the lungs, and which, strange as it may appear, does not proceed from the chest, as in ordinary cases, but from the lower extremity of the abdomen, as though the organs of respiration, from excessive laxity, had absolutely descended from their proper sphere, and that by a tenacious effort of nature, unwilling to yield possession of her functions, they had accommodated themselves by time to such an unnatural and incredible position.

The subject is presented to view in a state of nudity, save a mere covering of several inches deep round the loins, through which are cut large holes to admit of the hip bones to pass, for the purpose of keeping it in its proper place. The poor fellow appears conscious of the only use that can now be derived from his crazy frame, and as though the last and only good he can bequeath to his more fortunate beholders, patiently submits to every proper examination, and readily answers any question at all calculated to elucidate his extraordinary state and existence.

MR. O'CONNEL IN WEXFORD.

At half-past four o'clock on Wednesday, Mr. O'Connell drove up to Ferrycarrig Bridge, about two miles from the town of Wexford, where a deputation of Gentlemen waited with an escort of boats to receive him. A deafening cheer was raised on Mr. O'Connell's setting his foot on the ground.

PROCESSION OF BOATS UP THE RIVER.

Mr. O'Connell was seated at the stern of Mr. Nicholas Devereux's boat, the George the Fourth, which, besides him, contained Henry Lambert, Esq., John Talbot, Esq., Messrs. Corballis, Power, and Kelly, of Dublin, Patrick Walter Redmond, Esq., a young Gentleman of large estate and good family in the county of Wexford, who acted as coxswain, and the following highly respectable Gentlemen, with six active and well-looking sailors who used the oars:—Thomas Brenau, Nicholas Devereux, John Devereux, Laurence White, Robert Rea, and John Dixon, Esqrs.

Thus equipped, the George the Fourth proudly commenced her career up the river, preceded by a band of amateur musicians, playing "See the Conquering Hero comes," and escorted by a numerous convoy of boats, whose crowded crews vied with each other in manifesting their respect and attachment to their distinguished visitor, by hearty and reiterated cheers. On Mr. O'Connell's landing he was received by a deputation, consisting of Sir Thomas Esmonde, Mr. Sutton, and a number of other Gentlemen of the first distinction. He was then placed in a private carriage and driven to the house of Mr. Redmond, in Chapel-lane, where he dressed for dinner, changing his green travelling dress for the Association uniform.

THE DINNER.

This festivity was prepared on a very tasteful scale, and did much credit to the Gentlemen who undertook the management of it. It was given in the Poor School adjoining the Roman Catholic Chapel. The room was very prettily laid out. The roof was hung with festoons of laurel, the wall painted, and the space behind the chair ornamented with devices and appropriate inscriptions:—"Equal Liberty to his Majesty's subjects," "The man of the People," and "Cead Mille Faltha," were among the number. The plate of Mr. O'Connell immediately surmounted the Chair. The room was brilliantly lighted with wax, and a military band was stationed in the gallery, who played appropriate airs during the evening.

At seven o'clock, the company (about 120 in number) sat down to an excellent dinner. Sir Thomas Esmonde sat at the head of the table; on his right hand were placed Mr. O'Connell, Mr. Lambert, Mr. Talbot, Mr. Sutton, the Rev. Mr. Hughes, Mr. Frizell, and Mr. Devereux (Banker). On the left of the Chair sat Mr. Shiel, Counsellor Bennett, Mr. White, &c.; and Mr. Thomas Brenan was Vice-President.

After dinner, the first toast proposed from the Chair was "The King," and the Chairman observed, that there never was a time when an Irish company were more bound to drink that toast with enthusiasm, and to wish heartily for the health and long life of his Majesty than the present.—Drunk with four times four—Air 'God Save the King,'—'The Duke of Sussex, and the rest of the Royal Family; and may they never forget the principles which placed the illustrious House of Brunswick on the Throne.'—Three times three.—'The Lord Lieutenant, and prosperity to Ireland.'—Air, 'St. Patrick's Day.'—The next toast, the Chairman observed, truly deserved a bumper. It was—

"The Army and Navy of Great Britain, whose ranks were filled by great numbers of Irish and Irish Catholics."—Three times three.—Air, 'Rule Britannia.'—The Chairman professed himself impatient to come to the next toast. It was—"Catholic Emancipation."—Drunk with three times three, and rapturous applause.

The Chairman observed, that the company had drunk the Catholic Emancipation with an enthusiasm commensurate to the great importance of the measure, and creditable to their own patriotism. He would now propose the health of the man on whom the hopes of the country, for the realization of that great object, rested, and without whose invaluable exertions these hopes would have been long since crushed.

"The health of Mr. O'Connell" was now drunk with loud and long-continued cheering, of which it is impossible to convey any idea by description.

Mr. O'Connell returned thanks at length, after which he expressed his regret at the necessity of parting from his friends, and professed that although he had passed many pleasant days in his life, no incident that had ever occurred to him, gave so much gratification as his reception and entertainment that day.

He then retired, attended by the Chairman and other gentlemen, and the whole company had separated about one o'clock.

The day's festivity passed off with the utmost harmony and regularity, and appeared to convey unmixed gratification to the breast of every person who partook of it.

Thursday morning a person calling himself Capt, Bois, of the ship Coromandel, went into the shop of Messrs. Viner and Co., watchmaker, Royal Exchange, under pretence of purchasing some watches; several were shown to him, one of which he agreed to take; but while Messrs. Viner and Co.'s assistant was reaching others from the window for his inspection, he contrived to purloin two valuable watches (one a gold repeater, striking the hour, quarter, and minutes, with gold dial and chronometer balance; the other a Lady's watch, made to wind up without a key, No. 2055, both engraved Viner and Co. on the movement); and pretending to see a friend pass the door, he at that instant made off with them. He was instantly pursued, but without effect. He is about five feet three or four inches in height, dark complexion, black eyes, and of genteel exterior.

Sudden Deaths from the Coup de Soleil.—Thursday morning a young woman, named Catherine Redman, a servant in the family of Mr. Chapman, Crown, Edgware-road, having been during the morning very much exposed to the heat of the sun, it is supposed was affected by its rays, as he was observed suddenly to become faint, and endeavour to get into the house; she staggered a few paces towards the bar door, fell on her face, and expired. A medical man being sent for, declared he thought it was likely that the sun's heat had produced this awful visitation. A similar instance of sudden death occurred about the same time. A poor Irish labourer, named Michael Hogan, while at work on some buildings in High-street, St. Giles's, fell and expired.

The result of the Great Battle of the Lion has given rise to a challenge by Mr. Money, of Fleet-Street, the celebrated Mart for Bears Grease, who offers to fight one of his Bears for £1,000, on the same conditions as those specified in the preceding battle. His Bears are quite domesticated, and are so tame that they suffer the feeding-boy to play with them: but being somewhat of a less dignified nature than the noble King of the Forest, he has no doubt of a different result, from the determined character of Bruin, and pledges his Money on the issue.

London: Printed and Published by R. D. RICHARDS, 343, Strand, corner of Catherine-Street.

It was denied that any brands had been thrown up in the air as a signal to smugglers, or for any other purpose whatsoever. The spot where the party were regaling themselves was in front of the sea, and it was admitted that the lights might be visible to smugglers, if there were any on the look-out. Roper, on his cross-examination, admitted that he had been chased two days before by Lieutenant Francillion, of the Preventive Service, when he was at sea; but he declined answering whether he had thrown any thing overboard when the Lieutenant approached his boat. He did not think himself bound to answer the question. These were the leading circumstances of the case.

The prisoner put in a written statement to the effect that he had gone upon the hill in consequence of seeing the lights, which he had reason to suspect were made as signals in aid of smuggling, in order to discharge his duty. When he arrived where the party was sitting he was immediately attacked by several individuals, by some of whom he was struck; whereupon, dreading that his life was in danger, he, in self defence, and for no other purpose, discharged his pistol, but with no intention of injuring any particular individual. Being unaccompanied by any of his own people, he was in no condition to prove the truth of these facts, and could only have resorted to the testimony of some of his assailants, who, from their bias on the subject, could not be relied upon as witnesses in his behalf. He solemnly declared that he had been first assailed in the manner stated, and had been actually wounded in the hand by a pistol fired by one of the smugglers. He submitted the improbability of his having been the aggressor, whereby he would necessarily have been exposed to the unequal odds of twenty to one.—Lieutenant Francillion proved that he had chased the prosecutor on the 7th of June, and just opposite the Castle-hill the latter threw something overboard, which he suspected to consist of contraband goods. The lights seen on the hill would have been a guide to persons disposed to fish up any thing which might have been thrown into the sea at the spot where Roper had been chased.—An excellent character was given to the prisoner by his superior officers, by whom he was described as a man of mild temper, humanity, and general good conduct.—In the course of the trial it appeared the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution had been taken by the town clerk of the borough of Hastings, when neither the Mayor nor any other Magistrate was present, and that the witnesses had not been sworn until after their statements had been reduced to writing.

The Learned Judge animadverted in strong terms upon the impropriety of this practice, which, he said, was most scandalous. He had adverted to this practice in his charge to the Grand Jury, in order that Magistrates might be more alive to their duty, for nothing could be so improper as for Magistrates to suffer their clerks to take the statements of witnesses without the sanction of an oath, in the absence both of the Magistrate and the party accused. Such was the course adopted in this case, and he could not condemn it too strongly.

After an elaborate summing up on the whole of the case, the Jury retired to consider of their verdict at half-past five yesterday evening; and between one and two o'clock this morning they brought the prisoner in Not Guilty.

HEREFORD, August 5.

JASPER TOMSETT JUNGE v. COLONEL BERKELEY, LORD SUSSEX LENNOX, AND ROBERT CARR HAMMOND, ESQ.

This case was to have been tried at Gloucester, being the county in which the subject matter of the action originated; but Mr. Judge having moved the Court above to have the place of trial changed to Middlesex, on his affidavit that he did not conceive he would get impartial justice done there, from the influence of one the defendants (Colonel Berkeley) enjoyed in it, though the Court was of opinion there was not sufficient grounds laid before them to induce it to grant the motion, they directed the trial to take place here; and this day (Thursday) having been fixed for it, at an early hour in the morning the Shire-hall was crowded to excess, by the ladies and gentlemen of this and the neighbouring counties, anxious to witness the result.

Mr. Lockart opened the pleadings. The declaration stated this was an action to recover compensation in damages for an assault and battery committed by the defendants on the person of the plaintiff, at his house in Northfield-place, on the 14th of March last; they having then and there struck him with a whip several heavy blows on the head, &c. with the butt-end and lash, by which he was much cut, &c.

In the second count there was an averment, that the defendants forcibly and violently committed a common assault. The damages were laid at £5,000.

Mr. Philips expressed regret at having to detail the particulars of an atrocious, a brutal, and unmanly outrage; an outrage which not merely degraded the parties implicated, but the entire class of society in which they had been in the habit of moving. Mr. Judge was the editor of the Cheltenham Journal; a man of some literary attainments; highly educated, and though not so highly born as some of the defendants, there was never yet a stain placed on his character. One of the defendants, Mr. Hammond, was a gentleman of fortune, residing in Gloucestershire. Another, Lord Sussex Lennox was a gentleman in high station; a nobleman; connected with a ducal house, being son of the late, and brother to the present Duke of Richmond, and possessing largely of the fortune of that family. The third defendant, Wm. Fitzhardinge Berkeley, was well known to the Jury, and was the proprietor of Berkeley Castle, and at the head of £20,000 per year. It would appear that Col. Berkeley was offended at something that was published in the paper of which Mr. Judge was editor; on this he did not resort to law for redress, but with the other defendants he thought proper to go to the house of the plaintiff, and commit this outrage. He understood Colonel Berkeley meant to prove some provocation, that he had been libelled by the plaintiff. He might have been irritated by reflections cast upon him. But what excuse could the others have?—Had they been libelled? Could they justify the manly part they took in that abominable outrage? If a man is provoked by reflections cast upon him, met the person who cast them, in a public place and there took his revenge, such an occurrence might mitigate, though it could not justify such conduct. But surely it could not justify such an outrage as this. Had the blood which they so inhumanly shed been the lifeblood, as it might have been, of Mr. Judge, they would have stood in a different place for their trial, and if they were placed at the bar, oh, what a happy defence would they have had that a paragraph had appeared in a newspaper, and that they were irritated by it! The Jury would by their verdict confer a public benefit on the country, and would vindicate the rank in which those parties moved in society, from any participation in such conduct, and teach the world that no man should insult the impartial justice of this tribunal.

Elizabeth Izard, a servant of Mrs. Morris, at whose house Mr. Judge lived, admitted three gentlemen. Heard the blows, and one of the gentlemen say "the rascal—give it him well; give it; he deserves it, give it, give it." Tried to get into the room, but could not as it was fastened. Heard some one inside say, "Let him out now; he has had enough." Mr. Judge then came out of the room; his face was covered with blood, which was running down his clothes. Mr. Judge made for the stairs, and got up two steps, when the tall, thin, gentleman, who came to the door with the letter, caught him by the skirts, and forcibly pulled him back. Mr. Judge's wig was pulled off by some hand, and Colonel Berkely then cut him over the head and eyes; the lashings of the whip left a blood-mark on the wall, about a foot long; there was blood in several places on the ground where he had been standing, several very large spots; they were together about one quarter of an hour. Mr. Judge then went to his parlor, from whence he went to his bed-room; the sofa in the parlor was marked in several places. Mr. Judge was confined to his bed from the 14th of March until the 30th. A medical person attended him three times a day for the first week. Miss Mary Ann Morris gave evidence to the same effect.

Mr. Ware, the oculist.—Mr. Judge called on me in London on Monday week last, and I examined his eye; the eye had then recovered from an inflammation it had, but there was a speck on the cornea, which might have been produced by a violent blow. There will be for a long while, I fear, a slight mark on it.

Mr. Taunton addressed the jury for the defendants, in a speech which occupied more than two hours. He would not so far disparage their understandings as to reply in detail to the speech of the learned counsel for the plaintiff—a speech of extraneous topics, and manifest exaggerations, because he was sure the verdict would be founded on the evidence alone. The case had been described to them over and over again as "unparalleled;" and this was its greatest aggravation—that the assault was committed "beneath the sacred roof of Mr. Judge," in "his castle," by his peaceful fire-side; as it turned out that this roof and castle were those of Mrs. Morris. (A laugh.) Now he was willing to admit that Mr. Judge had received a good, sound horse-whipping; for this, in plain English, was the meaning of all his friend's beautiful exaggerations; and he would tell them his defence in a few words—that Mr. Judge richly deserved it. (A laugh.) Though all the parties who were present were made defendants—and wisely so, lest they should be examined in Court,—the jury could not fail to perceive, that, in truth, the principal defendant was Colonel Berkeley, and that the others accompanied him only as witnesses. Heartily did he wish that Mr. Judge had indicted Colonel Berkeley; for then those gentlemen could have been examined on oath for him; and, what was much more important, Mr. Judge himself would have been examined against him. On that charge he must have exhibited himself in the box; he must have stood the test of a cross-examination; he must have shown his claims to be considered, as he had been described by the liberality of his counsel, as "a gentleman of birth and education;" he must have given a history of his life before he dropped, as from the clouds, in the town of Cheltenham, as the editor of a weekly journal; and, above all, he must have disclosed the provocation which compelled Colonel Berkeley to take a measure sanctioned by feeling though not justified by law. That provocation he would lay before the jury now, and when he had done so, he would call upon them, not merely as gentlemen, but as men endowed with the feelings of men and the affections of sons, whether flesh and blood could bear the outrage committed by the plaintiff, and whether this horsewhipping was not well bestowed. "A gentleman of birth and education" indeed! He might be descended from a line of illustrious ancestors, and he might have had a liberal education; but assuredly when he penned the series of libels which would be read to them, he forgot the first, and proved that he had not profited by the last; for a liberal education not only taught men Latin and Greek, but instilled into them manly feelings and liberal sentiments, and taught them not only how to speak and write, but to act like gentlemen and men of honour; and the jury would decide when they heard the series of paragraphs from the middle of November, just after the commencement of this paper, to the 14th of March, when the assault occurred with which Colonel Berkeley had been assailed, whether the writer or compiler of them deserved the character of "a gentleman by birth and education." It was well known to all who knew Cheltenham, that Colonel Berkeley had spent a large portion of the last 15 years at that place,—that he had actively promoted its interests—that he had acquired there many friends, and a large circle of acquaintances and connexions. The jury might imagine what effect a series of libels in this place would have—not on the character, for these attacks were now so frequent, as to be almost harmless; but on the feelings of a man who had thus connected himself with its society and interests. Of the plaintiff he knew nothing; the plaintiff knew so little of him; he had given no umbrage to this Cheltenham editor, who had attacked him with libels as wanton as they were wicked:—libels not only on the Colonel himself, but with unparalleled baseness aimed at him through a retired, an unoffending, a widow lady, the Dowager Countess of Berkely.

Surely after this the Jury would think he was fairly served out—justly, though severely, dealt with. So far from the case being "unparalleled," horsewhipping was a good old English punishment for such offences—an ancient and laudable custom, tried and approved on similar occasions. The learned counsel then alluded to the cases—of the Duke of Bedford, to whom Lord Chesterfield referred Geo. II. for the definition of "a drubbing;" to that of Captain Phillimore and Mr. James; and to others, in which he did not mention their names, in support of his last position; and concluded by entreating the jury to consider the provocation given; and though they must return a verdict for the plaintiff, to mark their sense of his conduct by the smallness of the damages.

Mr. Justice Burrough informed the jury that they could not sever in their damages, but must give an entire verdict against all the defendants. After reading the evidence for the plaintiff, he observed, that the assault was unquestionably very severe, and he thought, at all events, the holding the plaintiff in the passage, and renewing the blow after he had been allowed to leave the parlour, was a very unnecessary addition to the punishment he had received. There was a succession of articles representing him as a bastard, a seducer, and a coward; holding up his family to hatred and scorn; and tending to represent him as in every way contemptible and odious, and this in the place where he had been accustomed to live. The plaintiff had been warned to desist; but he refused, and talked about "the paramount duties of an editor," which was also nonsense as applied to such a case. An editor had no duties which privileged him to attack a private character, or defended him against law, and such language was ridiculous in the extreme. If, after this, Colonel Berkeley had met him in the street, and inflicted a moderate chastisement, though the law would not justify him, still he could not be blamed; but this was not a manly horsewhipping; it was inflicted by three persons, two of whom had no cause of complaint, and it was very violent, though perhaps, not productive of permanent injury. As to the evidence of Davies, if believed, it proved great baseness in the plaintiff; but still it did not deprive him of a right to compensation for the actual pain he had suffered. The Jury would consider all the facts of the assault and the provocation, and give such damages as the plaintiff ought to receive.

The Jury retired at six o'clock, and a little after seven returned with a verdict for the plaintiff—Damages 500*l.* to be divided by the three defendants.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

THE RENEWED LION AND DOGS FIGHT AT WARWICK FOR 100 SOVEREIGNS.

Mr. Wombwell's assertion, that the lion he had to produce on Saturday was not like the lion Nero, which had been beat by two leashes of dogs, was verified in much earnest. Nero, a docile animal, seemed too innocent for combat; in fact, he was so tame, that a stranger might with safety approach him. Not so with Wallace, the animal for Saturday's fight; he appeared as wild as if just caught in a forest, and will let one or two, known to him as feeders, approach him when he is in very good temper only. Before we proceed to describe this day's fight, it is necessary to state that Nero is the worse for combat only by a slight torn cheek or lip; but of the six dogs turned loose at him, Turk is dead, the game brindled bitch is sold, and the other four remain in the factory yard disabled.

Wallace, the lion, was whelped at Edinburgh in September, 1819, and weighs about 400lbs. Warwick was not so full as was expected from the nothingness of the late combat, but towards eight o'clock the factory yard was well attended, at 5s. each, and soon after the action commenced. The lion was turned from his den into the same stage where Nero fought, well ironed round. The match was, 1st, Three couple of dogs slipped at him, two at a time. 2d. Twenty minutes or more, as the umpires should think fit, to be allowed between each attack. 3d. The dogs to be handed to the cage once only—Tinker, Sweep, Ball, Turpin, Billy, and Tiger.—Umpires, Mr. Phillips, of Shrewsbury, and Mr. Rainford, Liverpool. Edwards and Wedgebury seconds to the dogs.

THE FIGHT.

In the first round, Tinker and Ball were let loose, and both made a firm attack, the lion, by their barking, having waited for them as if aware of his foes. He shewed himself a forest lion, and fought like one. He clapped his paw upon poor Ball, took Tinker in his teeth, and deliberately walked round the stage with him as a cat would with a mouse. Ball, released from the paw, worked all he could, but Wallace treated his slight punishment by a kick now and then. He at length dropped Tinker, and he crawled off the stage as well as he could. The lion then seized Ball in his mouth, and played precisely the same game with him as if he had actually been trained to it. Ball would have been out and outed there and then, but his second got hold of him through the bars, and hauled him away. Betting 5 to 4 on the lion at setting to, was now 2 to 1.

Bout 2.—Turpin, a London, and Sweep, a Liverpool dog, made an excellent attack; but it was three or four minutes before the ingenuity of their seconds could get them. Wallace squatted on his hinder haunches, and placed himself erect at the slope, where the dogs mounted the stage, as if he thought they dared not approach. The dogs, when on, fought most fiercely, but both were served out, in less than a minute after the attack, and however game, maiming took it out of them. The London dog bolted as soon as he could extricate himself from the lion's grasp, and Sweep would have been killed on the spot had he not been released, and bolted as well. Some murmurs, that the dog Sweep had a right to go on again. The umpires said no. It was only a genteel wrangle for the dog could scarcely have been dragged on. It was now also the pictures in Warwick-Castle to the broken casements of the factory, on the noble Wallace, who, however, was supposed to have shyed the dogs, but our Correspondent thought otherwise, and that two or three hours a day at the best dogs in the country (coupled) would be merely amusement.

A secret committee was now held in the menagerie of wounded dogs in the factory, amongst the owners of the canines. Wedgebury, the purveyor of the London dogs, swore, with more energy than elegance, that he would not bring his dog Billy to the scratch. Edwards had got his dog Tiger ready, and said, "Why, you wouldn't disappoint the gemmen, would you?"—This seemed to to make an impression on Wedgebury, who untied Billy, casting a most piteous look upon the dogs around him. Billy was brought to the scratch, and then the owner was told with vociferations vulgar enough, as people expected the six dogs to fight. Billy was more willing than his master, who was next to obliged to let him loose. Both went to work, and Wallace fancying Billy, grasped him by the loins, and when shaking him, Tiger, his pal, having run away, Wedgebury sung out, "There, you see how you've gammoned me to have the best dog in England killed." He was not exactly killed, but bit an inch or two deep in the loins only; and the people departed satisfied, convinced that neither Wallace nor his master had hoaxed the public. Several well-dressed females witnessed the exhibition from the upper apartment of the factory.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE AGE.

Sir—Having read in some of the London papers various false reports concerning the fight between Nero and the six dogs on Tuesday last, stating that he was torn, mangled, left in a pitiable state, &c. &c., I must beg leave to contradict any such invidious representations. Nero was next morning exhibited to an immense concourse of visitors, anxious to see whether he was or was not much damaged, when, to their great astonishment the noble animal shewed no more signs of punishment than a few slight scratches on the lip! I was then induced by some friends to try the courage of my second lion, Wallace, whose natural disposition was not so much controuled by making such freedom with him, or rendering him so tame, gentle, and submissive as was done with Nero; and so the effect was, that Wallace quickly conquered the six dogs sent at him without receiving as much as a scar of the slightest description. There is also a talk of cruelty having been practised in the engagement. Can any man in his senses suppose that I would risk the loss of my two lions, the finest ever seen in this country, for the purpose of gratifying a cruel propensity? It never was my idea; no, Sir, it was not: and I now further declare that another exhibition of such a scene will never be encouraged or engaged in by, Sir, your most humble servant,

Alcester, 1st Aug. 1825. Geo. Wombwell.

ASHTED PARK RACES.

At the Ashted Park races, on Monday, two serious accidents happened. Norval, the jockey, mounted the hunter Sullivan, but the horse refused the start, turned restive, reared, and fell over, and the jockey was so much injured, that he died in the evening. Cramp, another jockey, was thrown in the race, on Ranter, and had his collar bone broken.

Eleven started for the Hunters' Stakes, which was won at three heats, by Mr. C. Udney's Music.

The all-aged Stakes of £50 was won by Mr. Robinson's ch. c. by Smolensko, beating four others.

Sweepstakes of 10 sov. each was won by Mr. Bouverie's Pilot beating three others.

WORCESTER RACES.—Second day.

When our account left on Tuesday, the City Plate for horses that never won was not run, but it was decided in the evening in favour of Mr. Wood's br. f. Rosaria, in three excellent heats, beating Mr. Brown's b. c. by Sir Oliver, and Major O'Gore's Hesperus.—Hesperus agst the field.

The sports this morning were as under:—

A Sweepstakes of 10 sov. each. Two miles, for all ages. Five subscribers.—Lord Plymouth names Hesperus, 1; Mr. E. Foley named Vaga, 2. Won cleverly. Hesperus the favourite.

The Hunters' Plate of 50*l.* given by the County Members, for all ages. Four miles. Mr. Stuart's b. c. Man Friday, 1 1; Mr. F. Charlton's bl. f. by Milo, 2 2. Six to 4 on the winner.

SALISBURY RACES, 1825.—First day.

The Wiltshire Stakes of 25 sov. each. Mr. Ryan's ch. c. The Dear Boy, 4 yrs old, 7st. 7lb. 1; Mr. W. Wyndham's c. by Granicus, 3 yrs old, 6st. 11lb. 2.—The Dear Boy took the lead, was never headed, and won by half a head, after the most severe race ever seen on this course.—Seven paid 15 guineas forfeit, and 15 only five.—C. Day rode the winner, and W. Kean Mr. Wyndham's.

His Majesty's Plate of 100 guineas.—Four mile heats.—Mr. Dilly's c. m. Prosody, aged 12st. 1 1; Mr. Shard's Razor, 4 yrs old, 10st. 7lb. 3 2; Mr. Gream's Presentiment, 4 yrs old, 7st. 2lb. 2 dr.—Won easy.—S. Day rode the mare; J. Day, Razor; and A. Percy, Presentiment.

About nine o'clock on Wednesday evening, a person of very respectable appearance, and about forty-three years of age, went on board the floating bath, off Waterloo-bridge, for the purpose of bathing. He had been in the water only about seven minutes, when he got out and complained of being unwell. The attendant put his shirt and stockings on, when he fell into his arms, saying he was very ill. Dr. Stauton, of the Strand, was immediately sent for, but before his arrival, the unfortunate gentleman said he was dying, and expressing an anxious desire to see his wife and family, he seemed to expire. Dr. Stanton, when he arrived, attempted to bleed him, but without any effect. The body was then removed to a public-house, in Strand-lane, where every means were used to restore animation, but all were useless. His death is supposed to have been occasioned by an attack of apoplexy. From some papers found in his pockets, it appears that his name is Chalk, and that he is a coach-maker, residing in Whitechapel.

THE AGE.

LONDON, August 7.

THE KING.

It affords us the most heartfelt gratification to be enabled to state the continuation of our beloved Monarch's enjoyment of an uninterrupted state of good health. His Majesty arrived in town on Monday for the transaction of State affairs, and returned to Windsor immediately afterwards to dinner.

GENERAL ELECTION.

The conjectures which have been entertained on this subject for so long a time are of such vague character, that we have deemed it a duty we owe our numerous patrons, to institute the necessary enquiries upon the point, as well with a view to their gratification, as to the general satisfaction of the people at large. We are well aware of the conflicting interests in which a General Election involves a very considerable proportion of his Majesty's liege subjects, and we feel that it would not only be unjust, but highly prejudicial, in persons possessing those sources of information we do, and of which our readers are so well apprized, to give any intimation on so important an event, that we could not vouch for; and, indeed, we have no hesitation in declaring we would not be a party to so doing—and it is under this conviction and assurance we now entertain the question, and premise that the utmost reliance may be placed on our assertions. Without in any respect entering upon the old hacknied joke of "Parliamentary Reform," we are free to say, that, on a review of the acts and proceedings of the late session, some decided alteration in the present constitution of the House would greatly benefit the nation, for a viler set of bunglers than the major part of those with whom ministers have lately had to contend, were never before permitted to sit within the walls of St. Stephen's; and, what is a most remarkable thing, the very individuals who have been for so long a period keeping up this cry of Reform, are the identical persons constituting almost the only part of the Senate which needs any alteration. We should imagine there are not five people in England, who would care as many figs, how many five-act tragedies (save those who have to read them) my Lord John Russell were to write, provided he would undertake never again to offer himself for the shire of Huntingdon, or any other, well knowing his sheer incapacity for the fulfilment of the duties thus self-imposed upon him, or how great a fool Hume were to make of himself at Aberdeen, provided he never returned from that place to do the same at Westminster—whether Brougham was even more impudent, if possible, than he has shewn himself on the commission de lunatico of poor Mr. Franks, so he confined it to his own profession—whether Sir Isaac Coffin was coke, or old Coke in his coffin, if neither one nor the other sat coughing in parliament—whether Peter Moore was paid for his chairmanship of public companies, so that he never gave the public the benefit of his senatorial company—whether Lord Arthur Hill was lean or fat, or Lord Nugent fat or lean—whether Cam Hobhouse was a blockhead and George Lambe a greater, if they confined their abilities to their own fireside,—or to what extent little Angelo might eat, Sefton gamble, or Bob Smith be jealous, provided all the aforesaid worthies would sign a round robin never again to interfere in the important business of the State. But while just the reverse is the case, while we are lumbered with a set of men who get themselves returned as members, merely for the sake of making fools once per year of the Catholics, agitating annually the said question of reform, (which, as we have before observed, they so forcibly exhibit the necessity of) and for the advantage, as Lord Belgrave very justly says, of saving postage, why, it is almost time for every one to speak. Admitted, therefore, as it must be on all sides, that some decisive alteration is necessary, we are assured our readers will feel satisfied, on the perusal of the particulars herein submitted to them, that the country, in the event of a dissolution, at last stands a fair chance of proper representation; and, although a return of some of the present members is, it seems, unavoidable, it must be very gratifying to see that their place of representation is altered, by which means all old party interest will be dissolved—the feelings of all constituents fairly and impartially consulted and redressed, and the merits of public questions and National advantage duly debated and disposed of. Among the many authentic accounts which have been submitted to us, we find it positively stated that the Earl of Sefton means to offer for Ryegate (improperly spelt Wry-gait in our report) and Lord William Lennox for Eye—also that the Earl of Uxbridge has proposed for Winchester—and that Calcraft, not being able to stand for Chester, will be again returned for Wareham—it further appears that Colonel Trench, for which we are really very sorry, will to a certainty be thrown out for Rutland. Mr. Giles has offered for Old Sarum, so justly considered a rotten borough—but very considerable doubts have long been entertained of the probability of his success. Sir Francis Burdett at one time entertained an idea of cutting his Westminster eronies, on the pretence of resigning his claim to their interest in behalf of his gallant friend Lord Cochrane, who is lately returned to England—but the real truth was, he long ago intended, in conjunction with Lord Archibald Hamilton, to offer for Oxford, and would have so done, had not a recent death occurred in a family from which great interest was expected—it is, therefore supposed he sneaks back to his old quarters. Mr. Joseph Hume will be unfortunately returned, beyond any doubt, for *Cocker*mouth—and Ball Hughes has been trying some time for Ayr. Signor Begrez meant to stand for Flint, but the place was not open. Sir George Warrender, not being satisfied with Sandwich, means to start either for Eton or *Ply*mouth—and Scarlett has an idea of trying once more for Cambridge, on Whylley's interest—and "last not least," the great Lessee, Mr. Elliston, is said to have a firm footing Poole. Under these auspicious circumstances, we have really to congratulate the good people of England on the very agreeable prospect before them—for it surely will not be denied that no General Election ever held out fairer hopes—but great as is the probability of the success of the foregoing parties, we have heard from the highest authority, that there is every chance of the places we are about to mention being incorporated, and in that case Parliament will receive an accession of wisdom and morality hitherto unknown in its annals. In the event of such incorporation taking place, we are well informed that Lords Belgrave and Clanmorris will be returned for Wallop, (Hants,)—that Signor Velluti has signified his intention of standing for Stone, (Staffordshire,)—and Mr. Martin for *Bore*ham, (Wilts.) Lord Arthur Hill is sure to come in for Ashill, (Somersetshire,) and his gallant friend, Lord Nugent, for Bulk, (Lancashire). Our friend, Fred. Hodgson, (better known by the name of Brown Stout,) means to try *Man*chester, (Lancashire). Mr. Rothschild will, beyond doubt, be returned for Market-Jew, (Cornwall,) and Mr. Bradshaw for *Goose*trey (Chester). But even a much more important turn in things is likely to take place, for Lord Bury will offer for *Foo*low (Derbyshire,) and Alderman Wood for Old Windsor, (Berks) on the "Wood and Windsor" interest. In addition to these very desirable events, it is confidently stated in the best-informed circles, that Captain Fornes will try to represent *Leather*head (Surrey) and no one doubts but he will succeed—also Messrs. Irby and Petre mean to offer for Foulness (Essex,) and *Washing*ton (Durham;) George Robins for Hammering, (Lincolnshire,) and in the event of failure, for Medlar, (Lancashire) and Lord Normanby for *Folly*foot (Yorkshire). We are also led to understand that Peter Moore will really come in for *Sheeps*head, (Leicestershire,) Mr. Calvert for *Brew*ham, (Somersetshire,) Sir Vincent Cotton for St. James's Deeping (Lincolnshire), and Mr. Brougham for *Saus*thorpe, (Lincolnshire) and that, moreover, Old Coke will stand for Silian (Cardigan,) on his wife's interest, and Lord Viscount Valletort will offer for Bedford-bury, (Middlesex,) on the Duchess's interest. These constitute the principal points of information that have come to our knowledge, and as the idea of an Election is so generally entertained, and we happen to know on how slight a tenure the decision now rests, we shall, as soon as ever conjecture ripens into certainty, obtain every additional information which we may consider of the least import to our Readers, and lose no time in submitting them, feeling well assured that what we have here submitted will be equally satisfactory to them and the nation at large, as holding out an earnest of even better times than we now can boast of, at least as far as the abilities of the Legislature can possibly bring about so desirable an end.

FACETIÆ.

Lord Deerhurst was mentioning the other day some ridiculous observation, by which he said a whole company were made to laugh at his expense, when Tom Raikes observed, "then I will be bound it was the first company that ever yet "made merry" at your expense.

Old Lauderdale, a few days ago, recommended the Dowager Lady Lansdowne to go to Cheltenham for the purpose of taking the waters—but Her Ladyship deprecated the horrid idea, by observing, that it was a place only fit for "working people!"

Ball Hughes, returning from the Tennis Court last week, where he had been exerting himself prodigiously, was anxious to inform his wife how completely knocked up he was, and thus addressed her "Ah, comme je suis frappé en haut."

Edward Petre, who is rather famed than otherwise for his classical attainments, determined on surprizing the weak mind of one of Grange's shopmen the other morning, by discoursing in Latin, and exclaimed "bring me speculum vie"—which, after sundry explanations, turned out to be a Glass of Whey!

From the Mexican Extraordinary Gazette, dated June 15th, received yesterday morning, we find that the Spanish ship of the line, the Asia, carrying sixty-eight guns; and the brig Constantia, have gone over to the Mexicans. They have surrendered by treaty, and it is stipulated that the crews are to receive from the Independent Government the pay due to them from Spain, with permission to reside in any of the South American States, or to go elsewhere.

"CAPITULATION.

"Treaty made by the Commandant of the ship Asia, Lieut. Don Jose Martinez, his troops and crew, and the senior Governor Don Louis Antonio Arguello, Captain of Cavalry, and Military Commandant of the Territory belonging to the United Mexican States:

"Art. 1. Don Jose Martinez places at the disposal of the Government of the United Mexican States, the ship Asia, with all her stores and munitions of war, and the brig of war Constantia, which, on the 6th of April, separated for a time (if no other misfortune befal her) shall be comprehended in the capitulation, as if the two ships were but one.

"Art. 2. The Governor in compensation for the giving up of the ships, engages, for the security of the individuals who man them, their property, privileges, immunities, and safe conduct, through all the Federation; as, likewise, their individual liberty, according to the laws, subjecting themselves to the observance of the same.

"Art. 3. Don Jose Martinez, Commandant in Chief of these two ships, offers immediately to swear to the independence of the States, and likewise his officers, troops, and crew, from which condition are excepted those individuals who wish to pass to the Peninsula, or to any other part of the Spanish dominions, and to whom the Government shall give all the necessary facilities for embarking them from these States, for the places to which they may wish to proceed.

"Art. 4. The Governor shall name the Commissioner or Commissioners to carry into effect the Articles of the present Treaty, and, at the same time, to facilitate the necessary dispositions for the voyage of the said ships from Acapulco, to place themselves at the disposal of the Supreme Government of the United Mexican States.

"Art. 5. The Supreme Government of the United Mexican States shall satisfy the crews of both ships, for that which is due to them from the Spanish Government, as pay, from their leaving Spain for this country, according to the accounts which the Purser of the ship shall present, which shall be so much more readily given to them, as they have voluntarily surrendered to the United Mexican States.

"Art. 6. To those who have capitulated, and who may wish to remain in this State, or to pass to any other independant part of America, there shall be given a letter of security, expressing that the bearer is one of those who surrendered the ship Asia, in order that he may proceed in safety.

"Art. 7. Every interpretation that may be put on the present Treaty, shall be in favour of the capitulating party.

"Art. 8. This capitulation shall depend on the good faith of the two contracting parties. There shall be made four copies of the same, as done, ratified, and approved; of which two shall remain with each of the two contracting parties, to ensure its perfect fulfilment.

"Given in the Fortress of Monterry, May 21, 1825.

"Jose Estraoa.
"Jose Ramirez.
"Jose de Cardenas.
"Antonio Ventura Roteta.

"Confirmed and ratified in all its parts.

"Luis Antonio Argueldo.
"Jose Martinez.

"This a Copy of the original of that certified at Monterry, May 22, 1815.

"Arguello."

"His Excellency the President of the United Mexican States, filled with the most glorious satisfaction by an event which contributes so much to the security of our Independence, and to the honour of the Mexican Nation, has approved in all its parts, of the foregoing capitulation, and has ordered, in consequence, that the pay of the arrears due to the Spanish crew shall be paid according to the terms agreed upon."

CROCKFORD'S BALANCE SHEET.

Air—Derry down.

The season's just up, so I casts up accounts,
To see to vhat sum all vone's counters amounts;
Or else (as the old trade vone cannot forget,)
To see just vhat fish have come into the net.
Fol de rol lol.

Lord Foley has "dubbed up" five thousand, or so,
And that's vhy they dubbed him Lord Fooley, d'ye know?
And as "value received" I have touched for the same,
I never once asked of the place vhence it came,
Fol de rol.

There's vone Mister Paine from Northampton, as prime
As any flat fish, I have caught in my time,
And as Old Erskine said, "vone ought not to complain,
"For he never knowed pleasure, as never knowed pain."
Fol de rol.

Then comes good Sir Wincent, who's "done" as they tell,
And as far as I goes, vhy I've done very vell—
Thank God for such win sent, and therefore, d'ye see,
I cares not how many vill cotton, like he,
Fol de rol,

The next's Mister Hughes, who, ve all of us know,
To Miss Marcondotti vas spliced long ago;
Tho' he throwed down the ball for my lady to kick,
He's throwed down the dice, without throwing a nick—
Fol de rol.

I vish as how Sefton had not come to town,
'Cause he forced vone with part of vone's plum to "come down;"
For they thought his hump grown in the street t'other day,
When met, vith my largest bag, valking avay.
Fol de rol.

That Berkeley's contrived all his pockets to cram,
And valked off, without caring never a ———
They calls him a hactor—vhat's perhaps not amiss—
But I'm bound he ne'er hacted before like to this,
Fol de rol.

There's Duncombe, who's christened churchyarden, as how,
'Cause he spends all his time in the vestries just now;
He vins all he can, and then touches, d'ye see,
So I'd rather not have such a dun come as he,
Fol de rol,

Then vone BILLY LENNOX has "promised to pay,"
But's its wery long coming—that's all I've to say—
And as LENNOX don't never look straight upon I,
His promise, I fear's like his face "hall my heye."
Fol de rol.

There's two or three others, they says, is "cleaned out,"
Though I can't say as how I knows vhat its about:
But it is n't NED PETRE or IRBY, I've svore,
For they haven't been cleaned for a twelvemonth, or more.
Fol de rol.

We are authorized to state that it was not the Living Skeleton, but Lord EUSTON, who landed from the Calais Packet last Monday.

NUGENT was remarking at WHITE's last week, that the DUCHESS OF RUTLAND had gone to Brighton, it was apparent, for the benefit of the air—when LUTTRELL observed, that he rather thought it was for the benefit of the Heir APPARENT.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.

That drivelling old Chronicle continues to heap, with unrelenting virulence, the grossest calumnies upon this Nobleman, possessing not the slightest point in any position of its attack, and exposing, the farther it proceeds, the very source from which all this rancour springs. The blockhead proposed to be very facetious on Wednesday last, in alluding to the pain he experienced every Monday morning in having to record "the Chancellor's visit on a Snnday to the King," and attempting to impute to such ILLUSTRIOUS PERSONAGES the immorality of Sabbath-breaking—but it is always the case with this shallow Cockney, that the higher his flight, the surer and more fatal his fall, for we will be bound to say it never once entered the fellow's imagination that the very day appropriated by himself to record this sacred violation in his Monday's Journal, is SUNDAY, and that, consequently, while complaining of an infringement on the holy duties of the Sabbath in other quarters, this monkey was at the very moment certainly breaking the fourth commandment, and probably half a dozen more into the bargain. We have not leisure or limit this week to go into the renewal of this ignorant attack contained in last Wednesday's Chronicle, but with reference to that part of it in which the inattention of LORD ELDON to the cause before him is roundly asserted, we can only throw back the lie in the writer's face, by remarking, that if there is one point of eminence for which the LORD CHANCELLOR is renowned beyond another, it is the extraordinary comprehension he takes of every case submitted to him, and that although in some instances a tedious delay in decision may have arisen, from accumulation of affidavits and general information, yet in no instance of evidence has his Lordship ever been known to forego his vast legal attainments, or forfeit his claim to a clear knowledge of the whole circumstance. It is our decided intention to continue this subject, by illustrations hereafter of different cases, which will at once satisfy the minds of what few persons the vituperations of this paper may have misled: but in the present number we shall content ourselves with apprizing them of the source from which all this abuse has sprung, and by that means they will at once be enabled to ascertain the precise value to be attached to it. There can be no doubt on earth that MASTER BROUGHAM is at the bottom of it all. If his own views were accomplished, the LORD CHANCELLOR would be the first that ever filled his place—and the silly old Chronicle be the first to declare it. But while on this point, we cannot do better than cite the following passage from BLACKWOOD's Magazine for the present month, referring to the late enormities committed against LORD ELDON, and with which, as speaking so ably our own sentiments, we will terminate the present article:

"Waiving, therefore, all consideratioa of the nature of the attacks made by the diurnal or hebdomadal press on the Chancellor, we must only say that the continual recurrenee of it was at least in bad taste. It resembled altogether too much the yelping of a spiteful cur dog against an unconcerned passenger. Day after day paragraph succeeded paragraph on the same key. A collection of the jokes (Heaven help us!) made on Lord ELDON, would be the most monotonous thing in the world. A cuckoo-clock is more various, and more original in its note. The authors of them were men of two half ideas, each of which chased the other in unmeaning round, like a pair of paltry daubed grotesques on a smoked lantern. And the arguments! We engage to write them all in a few lines—the Chancellor is old—the Chancellor likes office—the Chancellor is illiberal—the Chancellor will not make his decrees as fast as he ought—all of which, except the first, found an answer of some sort: but there remained behind one which we cannot answer—the palmarian charge of all, the charge into which all the rest could be reduced—the climax of his sins, negligences, and offences—THE CHANCELLOR WILL NOT GIVE A SILK GOWN TO MR. HENRY BROUGHAM.

There is, however, something sneaking and cowardly in not putting this grand delinquency in the front of the array. There is no one in the country so soft as not to know, that his lordship might be as ignorant of law, and as destitute of decorum as Lord Erskine—that he might be as enamoured of place, as Mackintosh and Tierney are hungry for it—that he might be as old as Jeremy Bentham, and as sorely decayed in his intellects as that elderly gentleman, without a murmur of complaint being uttered, provided he did not display his illiberality in keeping Whigs out of office by staying in it, and in hindering that eminent person—at whose marvellous powers of universal talent the Edinburgh Review opened its eyes lately with such disinterested astonishment—that second admirable Crichton, before whom the ancient flower of Edinburgh must hide his diminished head—from receiving, as the reward of his exertions in the cause of Queen Carolina, the recompense given usually to legal knowledge, honourable character, and decorous conduct. We repeat, there is something peculiarly sneaking in this. Let the loud-tongued foes of Lord Eldon honestly state why they abuse, and they will rise some fifty per cent in our estimation. We own that our old friend Jeffrey does it and that is one of the many reasons why we prefer that learned gentleman to his worthy coadjutors, in the Times or the Morning Chronicle."

ANCESTRY OF ALDERMAN WOOD.

We never doubted for an instant, that WOOD was of good descent, and it appears that our suppositions were all true, for on refering to the MEMOIRS of MR. SAMUEL PEPYS, just published under the superintendence of my LORD BRAYBROOKE, we find an interesting notice of the worthy Alderman's name-sake—but the name is not the only singular coincidence—for, on an examination of the passage, it will be found that their BUSINESS was the same; and the concluding part of the sentence at once convinces us, that MR. ALDERMAN WOOD was paid just as much attention to in the Reign of CHARLES THE SECOND, as he is in the Reign of GEORGE THE FOURTH.

"March 3rd 1659.—There come many merchants to get convoy "to the Baltique, which a course was taken for. They dined with "my Lord, and one of them, by name ALDERMAN WOOD, talked "much to my Lord of the hopes that he had now to be settled "(under the King he meant); but, my Lord took no notice of it."
PEPYS's MEMOIRS.

WOOD has settled with LORD BRAYBROOKE that the word "hopes" is decidedly a misprint for hops.

We understand a Committee has been formed for the purpose of discovering the writers of THE AGE—COLONEL FRANCIS RUSSELL, Chairman—and that a large reward has been offered for attaining this laudable object—heavy wagers are pending, whether the researches of this gallant officer, or those of CAPTAIN PARRY to discover the North West Passage, will first be crowned with success.—One of the Committee, a Noble Lord, has already ascertained the LONGITUDE of the Office (though not the latitude of the writers) which is in Catherine-street, lies N.W. of Somerset House and E. of White's.—Any other discovery, equally scientific, the Committee have pledged themselves to make public.

THEATRES.

It is a hacknied remark, that "the English are not a play-going set of people,"—an excuse, by the way, generally set up by those who wish to prove the truth of the observation: but if our readers could but see the various communications we have received since our last theatrical notice, they would feel quite satisfied, that not only the adage was false, but that the players were the most important personages in his Majesty's realms. It appears that in these calm days, a criticism on the Summer Theatres is just as much expected, as it is that their doors should open, and more particularly from us, whom the public have been pleased to consider tolerable judges; and under these circumstances, with every apology for the neglect of such high people, and every assurance to our readers that their wishes hereon shall for the future be more minutely consulted, we proceed at once to our task. We attended the English Opera House, on Monday, to witness its new afterpiece, previous to which we were favoured with the original version of Der Freischutz, in which BRAHAM and Miss PATON appeared together, for the first time at a Theatre (on the authority of those amusing fellows, the playbills), in its principal parts, and, in the music belonging to the piece, nothing can be more ably executed or more pleasing; but we must protest against the introduction of airs, not at all in character with the superb order of WEBER's compositions, and which have no more business in this piece than they have in Hamlet, or any other thing. We never heard Miss PATON in finer voice—her ballad of "Say my heart," was given in the purest manner, and in the "grand scena" her flexibility and power were scarcely ever equalled on the London boards. PHILLIPS sang (we cannot say acted) in Caspar for the first time—his bacchanalian song was, however, admirable, and with this exception, and that of a young lady whom we took for Miss CUBITT, but have since heard was a Miss GOWARD (and who, we heard BALL HUGHES say, DID go hard towards marring the harmony of the evening,) the Opera remains the same in its representation as last year. We own we are surprized and disappointed that Mr. HAWES, who, en passant, we perceive, has presented WEBER with a silver Cup (a proof that MR. HAWES had a cup TOO MUCH at the time,) should have omitted the grand finale, depriving us of the pleasure of hearing one of that master's greatest efforts, and compelling us to hear airs arranged b[illegible] o[illegible] a[illegible] a[illegible] H. t[illegible] t[illegible] v[illegible] M[illegible] p[illegible] s[illegible] b[illegible] and it will therefore only be necessary to say, that BARTLEY, WRENCH, and Miss KELLY did all "their little utmost" to save the piece, and one WILLIAM CHAPMAN and a Miss GRAY wice wersa, with the latter of whom we must make free enough to recommend not to attempt singing, until she has learned speaking, and by no means to entertain a belief that she can do either, by the injudicious applause of the quantity of "orders gray" that were this evening in attendance upon her. Mr. ARNOLD's opera of Broken Promises continues to attract the attention of the people, and the substitution of Miss PATON for Miss STEPHENS, has given a novelty to its original disposition—the song to the air of Kelvin Grove by this lady, is among the highest specimens of ballad ever heard in a Theatre; and, joined to the inapproachable acting of Miss KELLY, whose Susan is the finest combination of the serious and comic we can call to mind, is at once an unusual treat to the real lovers of the Drama, and a most gratifying reflection on the spirit, the exertions, and the great abilities of the manager of this establishment.

We are still groaning under the pressure of insipidity with which it has pleased "the powers that be" to inflict us this year, at the once delightful little Haymarket, though we must own that a very agreeable exception, to this otherwise general rule, has been presented within these few days, in the shape of a three act comedy, from the pen (it may be called) of Mr. THEODORE HOOK—ninety-nine lines out of every hundred being a faithful transcript from that gentleman's admirable tale of Doubts and Fears in the second series of SAYINGS AND DOINGS, by the REVEREND MR. FALLOWFIELD, who is himself an intelligent, literary, and very agreeable personage. The piece throughout is well acted, and in the instance of Grojan may claim that peculiar originality, yet at the same time identity of character, which have so firmly and so deservedly obtained for MR. LISTON, the reputation he is now in the enjoyment of—the jokes which so forcibly bespeak the brilliant source from which they spring, could not be in better hands, and with every acknowledgement to the matchless author and equally matchless actor, we own we were unusually amused. So far so good—but on the other side of the question, we have witnessed something sufficiently deplorable to "make the Angels Weep," for the utter ignorance, for which the manager of this theatre has now become quite popular, shines out every day clearer. With a laudable determination to establish what the profession denominates an independent Company, he started two months before his usual time with the best performers then disengaged in town and country—they are entrusted with the responsibility of the whole business of the Theatre, as they should be, and thus become identified with their characters and the audience—but the instant the sluices of the Winter Theatres are let loose, the whole order of things is overwhelmed. MRS. GIBBS pounces right upon MRS. HUMBY, in parts for which she is no more fitted than DAW himself, by which means he totally undermines the value of MRS. HUMBY's public estimation—because on a general principle MRS. GIBBS is a charming actress, and far beyond the other—then MRS. GLOVER is ousted from HER OWN Mrs. Simpson, of which she is the excellent original—then HARLEY, great as he is, pops upon that odd compound, WEST, and reduces his previous importance to a mere nothingness—and thus things become topsy-turvy. It is DAW's misfortune rather than his fault, that Providence alotted him the management of a Theatre, for a man more incapable of sustaining its onus, or actually comprehending its commonest functions, never appeared in the theatrical world—and by this odd fatality the abilities of our best artists are insulted, misused, and eventually sacrificed, and the genius of our dramatists rendered unavailable. With the company he has, much, very much more, should have been done, though we are nevertheless glad to be able to say that "Quite Correct," with the addition of Madame's legs in Midas, have lately drawn together, in pretty tolerable numbers, the idle fops of this monstrous town, and helped to repay the losses occasioned by MRS. CHATTERLEY's presence at Tothill Fields. Miss CHESTER's absence at Cheltenham, (for the recovery of her health from the hard work, as the papers say, of the late season) and Miss LOVE's confinement to the sea side for, as her mamma told HORACE TWISS, the benefit of the h'air. On the score of general remarks, we cannot omit to hint to LISTON, in spite of all our vast admiration of his abilities, the impropriety of going as far as he does with his audience—in Midas, we almost lose the Mountain Maid, so enchantingly sung by VESTRIS, through his buffoonery, and the whole order of the stage is thus thrown into confusion, and its charm entirely forfeited—but this is, you see, the result of favoritism, and to such a pitch is his arrived, that within these few days, he considered the low offer made to him by Covent Garden Theatre of 20*l*. per week, for their ensuing season, (the amount of his last salary there) as a hoax—devilish funny to be sure—for, with all our unbounded admiration of his abilities, he is no more entitled to take 50*l*. per week, which we hear is the case, from the Haymarket Treasury, than he is to be FIRST LORD of his Majesty's Treasury. VESTRIS, we understand, is going to be married shortly—well, happiness to her, for she is a charming creature. We cannot close these animadversions on the Haymarket, without suggesting, that two most glaring errors, which have been committ- "since our last" are, LISTON's attempting to g, which the leader of the band should see to Oh, where, and Oh where!" as the songs says) and e whole lot of the gentlemen bowing themselves back-rds out of a room—thereby opening the door with a part their person never created for such a purpose. RAY-ND, whoi s a very good actor, must look to this. We all further be obliged to Daw the next time he sits with ady in a private box next to ours, not to keep such a hum our ears.

The closing of the Opera has been deferred until Tuesday, in consequence of its having been found that SIGNOR VELLUTI has "metal more attractive" about him than people at first supposed—though of what cast the said metal is, it behoveth not us to say.

CHARLES KEMBLE is gone to Germany, and ELLISTON we hear, alarmingly ill at Stratford Place—the former we care not a button about, the latter we deeply lament.

Poor KEAN's London persecution is following him through the provinces, and the "bad business" which the bad company of the Brummagem Theatre has met with, is laid upon our Tragedian's immorality—fools!—The puffs in the Post about Miss FOOTE, smell very strongly of the Ninny interest, for there is not a line of them to be found in the Dublin papers—Cheltenham is in a fit because their AMATEURS have been playing elsewhere—Brighton Theatre has been honoured by the presence of the DUKE OF YORK, to see the farce, and, upon the whole, the general interests of this branch of the nation are on the "que vive." We are really right glad to hear it—they are, as their great master-spirit says, "the abstract and brief chronicles of the Times," and as such entitled to our highest consideration and respect.

We had written thus far, when the following official communication was sent to our office, and which, as it will account for many of the grievances herein complained of, we really much deplore:

BULLETIN EXTRAORDINARY.

Haymarket Theatre, Saturday night, 10 o'clock.

Very little alteration, for the better, has lately taken place in Mr. DAVID DAW—symptoms of DULNESS in the eyes are still apparent—his OPERATIONS are very weak—and although his NIGHTS have been somewhat better, for the last few evenings, upon the whole there is no visible AMENDMENT.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

VIENNA, JULY 22.—In our Paper of the 9th of June, we gave, from the Athenian, an account of the taking of Odysseus. We have now received the following particulars from a traveller, who left Athens at the end of May:—In the neighbourhood of Salona, Odysseus was abandoned by almost all his followers. They went over to the Greeks who were opposed to him, under the command of Goura. Just about this time he was informed by a Turk, with whom he was on a confidential footing, that it was intended to arrest him, by virtue of an order that had come from Constantinople, and to bring him dead or alive to Negropont. This plan was to be executed that night. Odysseus quickly took his resolution, concerted with his few followers a pretended flight, pursued them with loud cries, and in this manner happily escaped before the Turks well knew what was the matter. He hoped to be well treated by his countrymen, as they happened to be some of those who had formerly been under his command. Goura had him put in chains, and led him past the cavern where the family of Odysseus and his brother-in-law still reside. An attempt was made to induce them to give up this retreat, but it failed. Hereupon Odysseus was sent to Megara, where the people were going to stone him to death, and he was saved only by his guards covering him with their cloaks. From Megara he was brought to Salamis, and on the 11th of May, to Athens. In the streets of that city a woman struck him in the face with stones, and the populace were incensed against him, reproaching him with his arbitrary executions, and especially with that of a Papa, whom he had ordered to be walled up. The Government had given orders to send the prisoner to Napoli, but the Captains (of Goura) refused; answering, that Odysseus was safer at Athens than at Napoli. He was shewn to me. He is confined in the Acropolis in a square tower, opposite the Propylœa, and the rampart which he had built during the time he was Governor, and there is an inscription on a stone commencing, "This work, completed in common by Odysseus and Goura, the Generals of Greece."

QUEBEC, JUNE 20.—Yesterday, Charles Wood, set afloat, in fine style, the Baron Renfrew, by far the largest ship that ever was built, with more than 3,000 tons of her cargo on board, loaded on the stocks; she was immediately towed to the anchorage near the Falls of Montmorency, where she now rides triumphant, as one of the greatest wonders of the deep. She is a much more sightly ship than the Columbus; and from her greater breadth and depth of hold, is better adapted for crossing the ocean. Her rigg will be that of a four masted ship, and the pumps will be worked by a ten-horse power steam-engine. Two thousand tons of her cargo will consist of masts for the Royal Navy, such as were never seen in Woolwich dock-yard, where her proprietors have contracted that they shall be landed. The residue will be fir timber and deals, with about 1,000 tons of oak, and other specimens of the hard wood of this country. Towards the end of July she will be all ready for sea, when the Hercules, steam-boat, of 140 horse power, will tow the Baron for 200 miles down the river, whence she will proceed, under the care of Captain Walker, accompanied by Mr. Wood, for the Downs. From thence steam vessels will again convey this stupendous representative of naval majesty to her moorings at Deptford.

TRIESTE, JULY 12.—Accounts from the Morea say that Maurocordato and Celetto have been obliged to lay down their offices. The Moreots will not take up arms, and it seems that all the efforts of Colocotroni are vain. It is said that the Greeks have re-taken Salona, and driven the Turks to some miles distance from Missolonghi.

CORFU, JUNE 30.—Missolonghi and Anatolico are blockaded by 20,000 Turks; the first is bombarded by eight cannons and five mortars, which have in places damaged the works of the fortress. The besieged defend themselves with courage, but for want of cannon balls they use pieces of iron and stone.—The Members of the Government appointed by Maurocordato have all fled to Napoli di Romania. Zonga and Macri command in Missolonghi; the garrison is 8,000 strong; 2,500 Peloponnesians who had come to succour Missolonghi, and the many cruisers that were in the neighbouring seas, had returned to the Peloponnesus in consequence of differences between them and the inhabitants of Missolonghi, it being impossible for the Greeks themselves to agree long together. On the 30th of May, two Greek vessels arrived at Missolonghi with a large supply of ammunition. The head-quarters of the Turkish army are at Caravassara. It has orders to destroy Missolonghi by fire and sword, and to level it with the ground. The Seraskier intends to attempt to carry it by storm. A division of the Turkish army has attacked the little Island of Lesina in the lake of the same name, near Petoli, but was repulsed by the Greeks, with the loss of above 100 killed. Ibrahim Pacha continues his march into the interior, laying waste the country with fire and sword, committing all sorts of cruelties and excesses, so that he leaves a desert behind him. Calamatai was burnt to the ground by the Egyptian troops, which were advancing towards Maina, burning every thing on their way. Colocotroni and his adherents are at Napoli di Romania, in appearance passing the time in taking oaths of fidelity to the common cause, and secretly intriguing against each other, without moving against the Turks.

MAYENCE, JULY 22.—There is a great demand for oats in the corn markets of the Netherlands, as well as in England, from which country news has been brought that the barley crops have totally failed. It is believed there, that in consequence of the great rise in the prices, which are still advancing, the importation of that kind of grain will soon be permitted in England, and that the 15th of August is spoken of as the time when the permission will probably begin. In many parts of lower Germany the rape seed seems to have failed. Holstein, from which large quantities of this grain are usually exported to Holland, this year receives supplies from the Weser. The prices of oil have likewise risen a little in the Netherlands, and this market. Raw sugars, too, have risen in Holland, and the demand for coffee has become more brisk.

Letters, dated the 7th and 8th of May, have been received from Sierra Leone. They state, that his Excellency the Governor and Commander-in-Chief, Major-General Sir Charles Turner, had returned to the Colony from the Gold Coast, and was shortly to proceed to the Gambia, to make some necessary arrangements there. The rainy season had begun, and we are sorry to add, that the soldiers were getting sickly.

BANKS OF THE RHINE, JULY 17.—Though the assembly of the troops in the departments of the East and West Pyrenees is represented at Paris as nothing but an ordinary military arrangement for the increase and inspection of the regiments, it is certain that it is looked upon in a very different light in the Southern departments. The number of these troops will be more considerable than was at first stated. Inspectors are indeed expected, who are to superintend the reviews; but when these are over, the troops will still remain in their encampments, and be placed in such a state of preparation, that they will be able to march at the first order. This order is of course dependent on the turn which the affairs of Spain may take; but if we consider the state of that country, as is represented both in letters and verbal accounts of persons coming from it, we must be convinced that our Government acts with great wisdom in assembling this corps. All the accounts show the progress of the intrigues carrying on, which will probably be followed by some severe measures. The Spanish Ultras will not renounce the preponderance of which it is intended to deprive them, but will maintain it by every means in their power. This is the real state of the case. The Ultra party is endeavouring to overthrow the Ministry and its new system, and thinks to effect it by employing the means it has at command. A civil war is therefore considered to be almost inevitable.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ELOPEMENT.—On Saturday last, a young gentleman, the son of Mr. Allsop, Surgeon, of Uttoxeter, contrived to escape with the grand-daughter and heiress of the late Thomas Bainbridge, Esq., at Wood Seat, in Staffordshire, and who has a fortune of 50,000*l*. The parties have bent their way to Gretna Green. A pursuit was attempted but as the youthful pair had the start of eleven hours law, with "all appliance and means to boot," it was considered as a hopeless affair; and the Vulcan-bound couple may be expected to return in a few days.—(Pottery Gazette.)

DOGGETT'S COAT AND BADGE.—Monday the annual gift of the late Mr. Doggett, the Comedian, was rowed for by six young watermen, viz. three above and three below bridge men, and, after a severe contest, the three first boats coming in close upon each other's quarter; the prize was won by William Staples, of Battle-bridge Stairs. The whole of the distance was completed in about forty minutes.

On Wednesday the 20th ult., as some labourers were making a road at Shrivenham, Berks, they discovered about four feet beneath the surface, thirty-eight pieces of gold coin, of the reigns of Charles I. and Charles II., and one of the reign of Mary. Those of the Charleses were nearly of the diameter of a crown, and of the thickness of a sixpence, but that of Mary of the superficies of an eighteen-penny token, and of the thickness of the rest. The value of the gold is about fifty pounds. Mr. Dawson, we understand, claimed the pieces for Viscount Barrington, who is Lord of the Manor.

RECORDER'S REPORT.—On Tuesday, the Recorder of London made a report to the King in Council of the prisoners under sentence of death in Newgate, all of whom were convicted at the last Old Bailey Sessions—namely, Thomas Bright, aged 34, John Williams, 18, George Bruton, 25, William Harding, 22, James Davis, 22, and William Naylor, 20, for stealing in a dwelling-house to the value of 40s. and upwards; Thomas Hill, 17, for burglary; George Waters, 27, William Field, 13, Thomas Godwin, 11, James Norris, 11, and Mary-Ann Cook, 20, for housebreaking; Jane Davis, 23, Catharine Ferris, 20, and James Gravenor, 15, for highway robbery; Jeremiah Riley, 40, for returning from transportation; John Battle, alias Nathaniel Hartley, 40, and James Smith, 40, for horse-stealing; Charlotte Grov s, 23, and Charlotte Williams, 21, for stealing from the person; when His Majesty was graciously pleased to respite during his Royal pleasure all the above prisoners.

The Duke of Wellington has left England on his ordinary tour of inspection of the fortresses in the Netherlands, on which, in pursuance of the treaties with that country, a part of the indemnity paid by France is to be expended under the supervision of his Grace. He is accompanied by Colonel Jones, of the Engineers, who has the charge of detailed inspection.

The new Steam Vessel, Enterprize, sailed on Tuesday morning, from Deptford for India. Both the mercantile and scientific portion of the community are much interested in the event of this undertaking. Her burden is 500 tons. She has two 60-horse power engines. The boilers, which are made of copper, extend across the ship, with seven furnaces, each seven feet in depth. Although the Enterprize will make use of her sails when the wind permits, she will rely principally on her steam, and for this purpose she takes out not less than 300 tons of coals. The coals are partly contained in chambers within the sides of the vessel, covered with sheet iron, and partly in tanks beneath; which, as they are emptied of coals, will be filled with water, to keep the vessel properly ballasted. The cabins, of which there are 20, are furnished with every convenience.

DEATH OF THE DUCHESS OF DORSET.—We regret to announce the death of her Grace the Duchess of Dorset, which took place at Knole, on Monday evening last.

The Dublin Evening Mail says—The Rev. Mr. Hannan, formerly a Roman Catholic reader of St. James's parish, in this City, publicly conformed to the Church of England on Sunday, by receiving the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, according to its ritual, in St. Stephen's Chapel, Mount-street.

We congratulate all fair sportsmen on the prospect of the approaching shooting season. Almost every species of game has been unusually prolific in the present year. Pheasants, Partridges, and Hares, are very abundant, large, and vigorous. The corn is likely to be carried so early as to afford dangerous facilities to the depredations of poachers before the first of September.

Among the numerous improvements recently made in the vicinity of the Metropolis, we are happy to notice that an excellent new road has just been made over Battersea Common, which affords an improved communication with the whole of Surrey; the new road from Hyde Park Corner, over Battersea Bridge, being now the nearest to Epsom, and all that neighbourhood.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

MAL-CONDUCT ON THE PART OF AN ASSIGNEE.—Mr. Montagu said, an assignee had 1500*l*. in his hands which he ought to have divided among creditors; but which he refused to do. The Court made an order, in consequence of which he was compelled to attend a meeting, at which the Commissioners, under what was considered a very salutary Act of Parliament, called upon him to pay the money, with twenty per cent., which he, however, had not done; and therefore unless, at this season of the year, the Court could point out some means of enforcing the object of its own order, that order would be of no more use than a piece of waste paper.—His Lordship ordered a petition to be presented, to bring the matter before the Court.—Mr. Montagu said, that would be most willingly done, if the Court did not think it unreasonable.—His Lordship so far from considering it unreasonable, would be very glad to have such conduct brought before the Court, and therefore requested it to be presented and served, so as to have it brought on on Monday.

HODGSON v. HAWKINS.—This was a case of squabbling between partners, carrying on business in Sheffield, which, when the Court heard, a few days ago, his Lordship recommended to be settled by arbitration. The minutes of the order of reference were to-day mentioned for the Court's approbation; the parties on both sides having agreed to the intimation of the Court to refer it.—His Lordship referred all matters in dispute (including the question whether the partnership was, or was not, dissolved), without any reflection on the character of either.

IN RE ASHBY SCHOOL.—Mr. Horne was heard in reply to this petition, presented by the Rev. William Curties, which prayed that he might be declared to be the head master of this free grammar school.—The Learned Gentleman, rather amusingly, expatiated at some length on the learned abilities of the trustees in this matter, constituted of graziers, grocers, and little traders, who considered that nominated trustees, though without a conveyance of the legal estate, were invested with all the necessary powers of trustees; and could not comprehend why the Court of Chancery should be at liberty to take upon itself a right to interfere with them in what they thought proper to do, or not to do; and who, on this occasion, opposed this application, and insisted upon removing the Reverend Gentleman, who, when he entered the office in 1814, had the most satisfactory certificates of ability, &c., upon the ground of supposing him not a fit character to be in the situation any longer.—His Lordship was of opinion, regard being had to all the circumstances of the case, that Mr. Curties is the head master; that he is not removeable at the pleasure of the trustees (and that, even if he were, the trustees had not gone to work in a sufficiently formal manner, legally to remove him); that he is entitled to have all arrears of salary paid up to him; and that he must have the costs of this proceeding, reserving the question whether those costs shall be permitted to be retained by the trustees ultimately out of the charity funds, and with liberty to the trustees to present any petition they may be advised to the Court, for Mr. Curties's removal; giving liberty also to any person interested in the estate to present a petition for the removal of the trustees, if any person interested chooses to present such a petition.

COMMISSION OF LUNACY.

As the limits of our Journal would not admit of our giving the examination of the different witnesses in support of the alleged Lunacy of the REVEREND EDWARD FRANKS, the Commission for which has been held during the last week at the Gray's Inn Coffee-house, we have thought proper to introduce the summing up and reply, which will be found to embody the main points of interest adduced in the course of the proceedings.

Mr. WAKEFIELD, after the Jury had taken their seats, began to sum up the case for the Commission. He said he had a few observations to address. After the attention paid by every gentleman present, he did not think it necessary to go into details. The facts must be impressed on the Jury, and after a few observations, he should leave the case in their hands. He reminded the Jury that the inquiry was instituted for the purpose of ascertaining whether Mr. Franks was of sound mind, and capable of managing his affairs. The result of the inquiry would be their opinion whether Mr. Franks was of unsound mind. If they should be of opinion that he was insane, the decision would be beneficial for both the unfortunate gentleman and his family, as they would then have the full protection of the law. From the evidence they had heard, it was impossible to come to any other conclusion than that Mr. Franks had been of unsound mind for many years. He had not been found conducting himself—he had been conducted by others. When they considered two or three leading features, it was impossible not to be struck by the unfortunate gentleman's insanity. In 1815 Mr. Franks and his family resided at Campsall. Mr. Franks was, however, seldom there. He was living in Norfolk. It was necessary he should be at Norfolk, yet he might have been more frequently with his family at Campsall. During the separation of Mr. and Mrs. Franks, Mr. Dickenson was introduced; and about the time of that introduction one of the letters was addressed by Mrs. Franks to her husband. One way to ascertain the state of an individual's mind was to see not only how others treated him, but how he allowed himself to be treated. If he permitted himself to be treated unkindly and unworthily it was proof of insanity of mind.

[Here the Chief Commissioner stopped the proceedings, and intimated that he had received notice that one of the witnesses examined under the Commission had been taken away by a serjeant as a deserter. He wished, therefore, to have the serjeant brought before him. Inquiry was then made for the serjeant, but he could not be found. The corporal, it was said, had given him notice that he was wanted, and the Commissioner should be acquainted when he came.]

Mr. WAKEFIELD continued—What husband in his senses could permit a wife to write to him such a letter as that written in 1815. She well knew his habits and feelings. It was clear and evident that she wrote that indecent letter with a knowledge of his infirmity of mind; she allowed him to go to other women, in order that she might indulge her passion with her paramour; she knew his mind was so weak that he was likely to take the bait. Mr. Franks having permitted his wife to commit adultery, was strong proof of the bad state state of his mind. In 1815 it was allowed that he was in a state of high excitement. There was no proof that in 1816 and 1817, he was attacked with the usual violence of his disorder, but his mental disease was of a contrary character—it assumed the appearance of deep despondency. Between the two periods the separation took place. He went from high excitement to despondency, and yet it was said he had an interval of reason which enabled him to make provision for the younger children, but from the period of July 1817, to the present moment, there had been no reason to believe that this unfortunate gentleman's mind had emerged from darkness. In every stage in which they could trace him, they found the same delusion. In January 1817, his mind, though weak, might have some reasoning power. He then felt the truth of the information given to him by his friends, and acted like an honourable man. In 1821 how did he act? He took back Mrs. Franks without any expression of dissatisfaction or doubt of her fidelity. The letter which he wrote to his sister in 1818 stated that he had a desire to yield to the representation of Captain Mainwaring and Mr. Bellamy, but in 1821 his mind was not right, because he paid no attention to the same sort of information. In 1821, in the teeth of all that was said, he became reconciled to his wife, and had remained with her to the present time. If his mind had been sound he must have been made acquainted with the evidence given before the Commission. He had been told all the Jury had heard, yet nothing could make him believe the irresistible proof of his wife's infidelity. He took up 1821, as the fixed date of Mr. Franks' insanity. At that period there was proof of his utter incapability of ascertaining his wife's criminality. He had never since that period inquired about the guilt of a woman, whom in 1818 he pronounced to be lost and abandoned. He admitted with Mr. BROUGHAM, that wickedness was not insanity; but had Mr. Franks conducted himself like a sane profligate man. Had he not used an expression to his wife, in the presence of the waiter of a country inn, that no man in his senses would use? It was too gross to repeat; but could any man of sane mind use such an expression. How did she feel? She laughed, and treated him as insane. Her mind, callous to the grossness of the expression, made her consider it the language of folly.—The Rev. Mr. Franks, with an income of 8,000*l.* a year, had been refused two guineas by his steward. Was he not treated like a child? Mr. Franks was followed by Mr. Malcolm. It was said he was a courier, but that courier never left him until the Lord Chancellor's order for the Commission was issued. Mr. Franks had been in the custody of those who opposed this proceeding; they of course had an opportunity of knowing his real situation. The Jury were to judge from the evidence, and if it should be said, from the evidence of 1822, that Mr. F. was then of sound mind, that circumstance would not interfere with the evidence offered on this occasion. There were persons who had an interest in opposing the protection to be afforded by a Commission under the great seal. Mrs. Franks was sharing his fortune. He begged pardon for using the word share. That lady and Mr. Dickenson could live in affluence at Winthorpe Hall, whilst he remained at a country inn without two sovereigns in his possession, or with common prostitutes. This man, who borrowed a scarlet coat, thought proper to dole out small advances to Mr. Franks. All these circumstances proved that Mr. Franks had been suffering under a manifest insanity. Dickenson and Mrs. Franks had had him under their charge since 1821, and the Jury were to say, doing their duty conscientiously, whether during that time he had been a man of sound mind. If they found him of unsound mind such a verdict would be most humane. The effect would be that the unfortunate gentleman would be protected, and his property taken care of for his family. They would also get rid of the disgrace of a clergyman continuing to act as Mr. Franks had.

Mr. PEPYS said he appeared in behalf of the eldest son and heir of Mr. Franks. The circumstances which had led the Lord Chancellor to permit the eldest son to appear by Counsel in the proceeding, arose from the son having applied to the Court in June last to confirm some deed executed by his father. The Lord Chancellor permitted him, with reference to that application, to attend the inquisition, with a view of watching the evidence, and seeing that all was brought forward by the parties prosecuting the Commission which the interest of all parties required. He had nothing to do with the Commission, but he had to discharge the duty of making such observations on the evidence as might enable the Jury to fix the date of the lunacy. The deed to which he alluded was dated April 1817. The party who prosecuted the Commission had not laid before the Jury the time when it was executed. The deed had not been produced, and as to what Mr. Franks did in that deed the Jury were in perfect ignorance. He was not able to give them any information. Mrs. Franks and Dr. Dickenson would not lay before them any information as to what had been done by Mr. Franks! What securities this Doctor might have obtained from Mr. Franks they could not tell. All they knew was, that the income had been expended and the estate encumbered. The young gentleman, son of these unfortunate parents, having just attained the age of 21, was called on to execute a deed, but he was not desirous of giving pain to any of his family. He was only anxious the Jury should look to the dates of the securities, and fix the time of the insanity. The validity of those securities would be affected, should the Jury date the insanity prior to the execution of these securities. The unfortunate gentleman might have made a will, which would not be produced until after his death, and certainly it was of importance in that respect to fix the commencement of the malady. He should say the commencement was from the first visit made by Dr. Wright in 1815. The two points on which the malady rested were in existence in 1815. Those points were a delusion as to his wife's infidelity. The next point was, that he did not manage himself, but had been managed by others from that time. They found, from the evidence of Roebuck, and Lucy Bradley, that this extraordinary person (Dickenson) came attired as a quack doctor in 1815. He took possession of the house, and acted with indecent freedom. What must be the surprise of a gentleman of sound mind to find this doctor in possession of his establishment? What must be the surprise of a man in his senses when he found his wife in the habit of rubbing his legs and back in bed? She was found in his bed-room with her night clothes on. What did he do? The servant said he took little notice of it. The man wore his linen, yet he took little notice of it. Did not this prove a delusion as to his wife's infidelity? When they went down to Norfolk, Mr. Franks said, go back, I don't want you. After that they went into the house, and he was on good terms with them. He permitted his wife and the doctor to be locked up in one enclosure. He did this with a knowledge that Mrs. Franks had been in the doctor's bed-room. This continued down to the end of 1816. In October 1816, the malady of this unfortunate gentleman had increased. The medical gentleman stated that he was in a state of violent excitement, and various instances were given of his violence. Dr. Wright was clearly of opinion that he was then incapable of managing his own affairs. At that time it was the opinion of Mr. Hales that he was not competent to manage his own affairs. In June, 1817, he returned to Norfolk. Dr. Wright then found him in a state of depression. He was worse than he had ever been. That state of the malady he considered the worst. There was no reason to suppose that during the intervals of the attacks he knew what he was about. During the time the deed was executed, he was not attended by any medical man at all. What was the preparation of the deed? The draft was prepared in Norfolk, and they might ask what would be the conduct of any man who followed the advice of Mr. Hales. He suggested to Mr. Franks the expediency of providing for his younger children. There was no proof that Mr. Franks knew what was to be done, yet it was executed.

The CHIEF COMMISSIONER referred to his notes and read, that Mr. Hales asked Mr. Franks over and over again, whether he understood it. The answer was, yes.

Mr. PEPYS in continuation, still contended that Mr. Franks was not able to execute and understand the deed. He named certain individuals as trustees, and two persons were introduced who acquired a controul over this property during the life of Mr. Franks; was that proof of his sanity? It was clear from the evidence of Mr. Hales, his man of business, that he was not a person fit to be trusted with the management of his property. It was clear that Mr. Franks knew but little of the state of his property. He had long been subject to the discretion of others, and had arrived at that state when the law threw a protection over him. Would the Jury send him back to the custody of Dickenson again? Dr. Warburton having heard Dr. Wright's statement, was of opinion that the malady had existed from Dr. Wright's first visit, and the Jury certainly ought to place great reliance on the evidence of that Medical Gentleman. On the subject of the application made to the Lord Chancellor for a Commission in 1822, he wished the Jury to consider that the Lord Chancellor looked with anxiety to the circumstances which became the foundation of such a proceeding, and in some cases a reluctance to throw restraint on the person and property of an individual might have led to some delay. In Lord Portsmouth's lunacy, where application was made for a Commission, the Lord Chancellor refused it; and the consequence was, that he remained in the keeping of those persons from whom he was taken. On the second application the Commission issued, and it was found Lord Portsmouth's insanity had commenced long before the first application. On the part of the heir of the unfortunate gentleman, he had done his duty, and he left the Jury to decide the very important question left to their decision.

(This inquiry is adjourned to Monday, and will be concluded in our next.)

POLICE.

BOW-STREET.—Monday, William Orchard, the owner and driver of a hackney-coach, appeared to a summons, issued upon the information of Mr. Martin, M.P., to answer for having cruelly beaten and ill-treated one of his horses.—Mr. Martin claimed the right, as the person laying the information, to address one or two prefatory remarks. In a recent case, (the information against the bull baiters), it was contended for by Mr. Adolphus, and decided by Mr. Minshull, that the informer, because he might be incidentally liable to costs to the amount of from 4s. to 20s. if it should happen that he had preferred a groundless accusation, was incompetent to give evidence. Such a decision, if it were to be taken as authority, would render the Act a mere nullity in most cases, but it was well known that the opinion of Mr. Minshull ran counter to that of every other Magistrate in the kingdom who had ever acted upon the statute, and he (Mr. Martin) was happy to say that since the extraordinary determination of the point by the worthy Magistrate mentioned, Mr. Allen, of Union Hall, the Lord Mayor, and the Aldermen at Guildhall, had come to an exactly opposite decision. The argument of Mr. Adolphus was really the most absurd thing he had ever had the misfortune to hear: it was the veriest quibble ever uttered: it was the very quintessence of legal pedantry. As Mr. Minshull's decision, however, had taken place at this Office, and might be taken as a guide, he (Mr. Martin,) to obviate any difficulty on the point, had turned informer himself. He did not see the transaction, but he had given oath upon his belief, founded on information which he had received, and that he wished it to be widely known, was quite sufficient to procure a summons for the attendance of the offending party.—Mr. Frederick Augustus Edwards, a Student at Law, was called, and stated, that as he was passing through Piccadilly his attention was drawn to a coach-stand by the loud and incessant cracking of a whip, and he there saw the Defendant, whose coach was on the stand, with other coaches behind and before it, whipping one of his horses very savagely, a discipline which he continued for several minutes, in spite of the remonstrances and cries of "shame," of those who witnessed his brutal conduct. The horse, which seemed a quiet animal, trembled at every joint. When the witness spoke to him, he said, "you must speak to my master about it." It had since been ascertained that the horses were his own.—Mr. Martin—Aha! the atrocious fellow; we'll teach him that he must not beat his own horses though.—Another Gentleman corroborated the statement of Mr. Edwards, and the latter Gentleman added, that on Saturday evening last he again saw a man beating a hackney coach horse very unmercifully, and upon going towards him, he found it was the Defendant, although he must ere then have received the summons for the former offence.—Mr. Martin hoped this fact would go in aggravation of punishment, and that the Magistrate would inflict something more than the lowest penalty of 10s.—The Coachman, in his defence, said the horse was a blind one, and although a very good animal when actually at work, would not keep steady when on the stand, but was continually "dodging about."—The Magistrate told him he ought to be ashamed of himself to make such a defence. The very reason he had mentioned in excuse should induce him to behave with the greater kindness to the poor animal. His defence was a greater aggravation than anything which had yet been advanced; and it would be but common justice to inflict the full penalty of 5*l.*—The defendant hoped his Worship would be merciful, for he had a wife and three children, and no other dependance than his pair of plates, which he had held twelve years almost without complaint.—Mr. Martin—You are not fit to have a pair of plates, and I will have them taken from you. I will go to the Commissioners.—The Magistrate said, he feared if he fined the defendant in a heavy penalty, his wife and children would be the greatest sufferers. He should, therefore, reduce the amount to twenty shillings and costs.—The defendant said he could not pay it.—Mr. Martin—Then, sure man, you'll only have to go to the tread-mill, that's all.—Magistrate—Let him be committed for one month.—The defendant begged for mercy on account of his children.—Mr. Martin—Mercy! Why were you not merciful to your horse? I'll tell you what, my fine fellow, you'll get no mercy here, and what is more, if horses should have any thing to do with judging us in the next world, you'll have none there.—(A laugh)—You have no friends here, and if you get among the horses in the next world, you'll find no friendship from them I'll engage; so that you are as badly off as any poor devil can wish to be, I think.—(Loud laughter.)—The defendant was locked up, but he soon found the means of paying the penalty and costs.

Stockman, who was connected with the outrageous robbery of Mr. Crouch, at Warwick, after the late fight between Cannon and Ward, was on Wednesday committed to take his trial at the Warwick Assizes. The County Magistrate who was employed by the person whose duty should have called him to sit on the occasion, was disposed to dismiss the prisoner on bail, until the next circuit, unless the prosecutor would bear the expences of carrying him to the present Assizes. Crouch answered that he did not care about the money so as he could have revenge. The committal was then made out, and the parties bound over to prosecute.

A man of very genteel appearance in point of dress and person, about forty years of age, who gave his name Thomas Dutton Browne, was brought from St. George's watch-house upon the following detestable charge of assault:—A young lad named Cross, a helper in the stables of Lord Stanley, in Reeves's Mews, stated that he was at Astley's Theatre the night before, and accidentally saw the prisoner there, whom he knew nothing of, nor ever saw before. After the performance was over, witness stopped at a public house to have some porter, and then he again saw the prisoner, who entered into conversation with him, and joined him in drinking porter out of the same pot. When witness left the public-house, and was proceeding over Westminster-bridge, the prisoner came up to him, having followed him, and asked him if he would permit him to take hold of his arm, as he was very tired. This the witness consented to, and they walked together over the bridge. The prisoner then said, that he had no place in town to sleep, as he lived at Clapham Common, and would be obliged to the witness if he could accommodate him at his lodgings. Witness knowing what it was to want a bed, could not refuse him, and took the prisoner home to where he sleeps, at the stables in Reeves's Mews, when they went to bed; but witness had very soon reason to regret having done so, as the conduct of the prisoner convinced him that he had got a most detestable companion. He immediately got up, ran out to the street, called the watchman, and gave charge of the prisoner.—The watchman who took charge of the prisoner confirmed this latter part of the complainant's statement, and said, that the prisoner spoke very largely of himself and his acquaintances; that he knew Lord Derby and Lord Stanley very well, and many other noblemen.—The Magistrate having asked the prisoner what he had to say to the charge, was replied to by a question from the latter, to know if he (the magistrate) had received a letter from him that morning.—SIR GEORGE FARRANT said, I did receive a letter just now from some person, but I do not know if it was from you. I never pay any attention to such letters.—Prisoner—Have you read the letter?—Sir GEORGE FARRANT—Yes, I have; but, as I said before, I never attend to such letters.—Prisoner. I there mentioned who I am, and the name of a nobleman now in London, with whom I am well acquainted; my family connexions are of the first respectability, and every word of the charge against me is false.—Sir GEORGE FARRANT—This letter is signed "T. D. Browne." Is that your real name, and what profession are you of, or where do you reside?—Prisoner—That is my name, I am of no profession, but live on my private fortune, at Clapham-common, or near there. Where I reside, I live chiefly in retirement, owing to the decay of my constitution from an internal complaint—The Magistrate again asked if he had any reply to make to the charge made against him by the complainant.—Prisoner answered as before, that it was all false. The fact was, that when he laid down on the defendant's bed, and went to sleep, he suddenly awoke, and discovered the complainant's hand in his pocket, robbing him, and when he charged him with doing so, the complainant turned round on him and made this charge.—The Magistrate asked was it not a most extraordinary thing for a person appearing to be a gentleman as he did, to think of sleeping with a stable-boy?—The prisoner said, that being very tired, and so far from home, at that late hour, and not knowing where to procure a bed, he was glad to find any place to stretch himself on.—The Magistrate said, that surely he could get a bed at any hotel. He had money in his pocket (a sovereign and other money was found on the prisoner, as were several papers and backs of letters, having the names of several noblemen and others written on them.)—The Magistrate then told the prisoner that he must find two respectable housekeepers in £100, to answer the charge at the sessions, and he must give 48 hours' notice of bail.—The prisoner said, he could easily procure bail to any amount, but he should wish to have a private interview with the Magistrate some time in the course of the day.—"That," said Sir GEORGE FARRANT, "you certainly shall not have with me; I hold no such private communications with prisoners."—"What!" said the prisoner, "not any time before the Office closes?"—"No," said Sir GEORGE, "nor at any time after."—The prisoner was then locked up, and the complainant and the watchman were bound over in £40 each to prosecute the case at the sessions.—The prisoner is a man of very dark hair and complexion, about five feet eight inches in height, dressed in a black coat and waistcoat, and fashionable ducktrowsers, and of very genteel address.

GUILDHALL.—CAUTION TO VAN DRIVERS.—Thursday W. Bromley, the owner of the van No. 130,572, appeared to answer the complaint of Mr. Martin, M. P. for having cruelly treated, by overloading the horse he had in his van, on the 1st of August, in the Old Bailey.—Mr. Martin said, he should not press for the penalty to be enforced in this instance; but hoped after an admonition from the worthy Alderman, that this would be a lesson not only to the defendant, but to all other van drivers, not to overload their vans in the shameful manner, he was sorry to say, he so often observed.—The Alderman then, after admonishing the defendant not to be guilty of such an offence a second time, dismissed him.

ACCIDENTS, OFFENCES, &c.

On Monday morning last, the family of Mr. Barnard, belonging to the British Gallery, Pall-mall, were thrown into the most poignant grief, in consequence of the dreadful death of his daughter, a beautiful girl, about 20 years of age. A son of Mr. Barnard, a youth about 15 years old, has been ill for some time past, and the doctors prescribed for him change of air; and, in consequence, Mr. B. took a small cottage near Dartford, in Kent, and about three weeks ago the family removed there from town. On Monday morning the gardener loaded a fowling piece with pebbles to shoot the sparrows, but after trying to discharge it several times without effect, he placed it on some wood in an outhouse, and there left it. Shortly after, Master Barnard went into the shed with his sister, and seeing the gun, he picked it up, and the trigger by some accident caught his coat, and, melancholy to relate, the piece went off and shot Miss Barnard in the nape of her neck. The unfortunate girl fell instantly, and the cries of the youth alarmed the family, who ran to the spot, and found Miss B. stretched on the floor a corpse.

A lamentable accident occurred on Saturday se'nnight. A Lady, of the name of Shaw, accompanied by her husband and three children arrived in their native place by the Ostend steam-packet, from a residence of many years in Russia, and took up their temporary abode at the Ship-tavern, Little Tower-street, on the first floor landing of which the unfortunate Lady was standing with her youngest child, a little boy, six years old, in her arms, directing the porters in the disposal of the luggage, when stepping back to allow one of them to pass she pressed against a folding Venetian window, the fastening of which giving way, it flew open, and she fell into the yard, a depth of ten feet, by which sad mischance, the child was so much injured that it expired the same evening in St. Thomas's Hospital, whither the mother was also conveyed in a state of insensibility, but whose recovery is confidently expected. An inquest was held on Tuesday on the body of the infant, and a verdict of "Accidental Death" returned. It is but justice to state, that the family of Mr. Jeffreys, the landlord of the Ship, paid every possible attention to the sufferers.

On Sunday morning, between the hours of eleven and twelve, the house of Mr. Turner, a dissenting clergyman, in the Albany-road, Camberwell, was broken into during the absence of that gentleman and his family at the Albany Chapel, and robbed of 50*l.* in sovereigns, besides a quantity of plate. Information of the same was given at Union-hall, together with the description of three men who are suspected, and who were observed lurking about the neighbourhood previous to the robbery.

DISGRACEFUL RIOT AT LISSON GREEN.— Another of those disgraceful disturbances with which the dissolute Irish have lately kept one quarter or another of the metropolis in a state of alarm, occurred on Monday night.—Throughout the whole of Monday evening, and up to a late hour of the night, the neighbourhood of Lisson-green presented an extensive scene of outrage and violence. Some quarrel amongst the lower Irish residing in that part of the town, took place in the vicinity of the Diorama, in Regent's Park. A general fight was the consequence; but the combatants being driven from the ground, suspended operations for a time, and, having retreated to their own quarters in Lisson-green, the contest was renewed, and nearly the whole parish engaged in it on one side or the other. Bludgeons and missiles of every description were employed in the warfare. The constables, and the whole civil power of the place interfered, but the hostile parties united against them as a common enemy, and inflicted the most severe wounds upon them. No age, sex, or condition, was spared by the ruffians engaged in this disturbance. No one was permitted to be an idle spectator of the scene, as there were parties who made it their business to scour the streets and assault all whom they met. In this way several unoffending and highly respectable individuals, passing to their homes in the course of the evening, were most unmercifully beaten. The horse soldiers stationed at St. John's Wood Barracks, mounting fifty or sixty men, were at length called in, and, under the direction of the civil authorities, succeeded, by great exertions, in restoring tranquillity. The soldiers received some severe contusions. A number of the rioters were secured and examined on Tuesday at Marylebone Office. Several persons appeared as witnesses against them; and they were remanded to the House of Correction for further examination.

Attley Villa, the residence of Anwell Stewart, Esq., Alstone, Bucks, was in part destroyed by fire on Tuesday night. It broke out in the kitchen, and the smoke alarmed the inmates nearly to suffocation. A wing of the house, together with the coach-house and stables, was destroyed.

Tuesday morning, between eight and nine, a fire broke out in the house of Mr. Mills, two doors from the Marquis of Granby, Silver-street, Lomau's-pool, Gravel-lane, Southwark, which, from the confined situation of the neighbourhood, threatened much destruction; but, by the prompt arrival of engines, it was quickly subdued, and only the lower part of the house appeared burnt. A poor man, named Tissue, who slept in a back room below, and who has been bed-ridden these four years, was smothered before any assistance could be rendered him. The fire is stated to have happened in consequence of some straw, which had been deposited in the house about a week ago taking fire.

TO THE READERS OF THM LITTERARY GAZETTE.—Mr. T. CLERC SMITH, Bookseller and Publisher, 36, St. James's-street is under the necessity of laying the following statement before the readers of the Literary Gazette, edited by Mr. W. Jerdan:—In that paper, of July 16th, a paragraph appeared taxing Mr. Smith with having sent to the editor an unpaid letter, announcing a furth coming volume of Poems. Mr. Smith never having sent any such letter, nor held any communication whatever with the Editor of the Literary Gazette, wrote to him (Mr. Jeran) to state the fact, and in the following paper, of July 23, a slight notice was inserted to that effect. On Saturday last, July 30, a fresh pargraph was given to the public, affecting to recognise a third letter from Mr. Smith, and which being worded through in a style of of determined insult and offence, concluded by a charge of "folly and impertinence." Mr. Smith, feeling that he had not in any possible way given Mr. Jerdan occasion for this extaordinary conduct, never having written to him at all but to disclaim the alledged communication, called in consequence at Mr. Jerden's residence on the evening of Saturday last, when, not finding him at home, he left a note, pointing out the necessity for an immediate explanation. As Mr. Jerdan has had neither the good sense nor good manners to return him any answer, Mr. Smith cannot avoid resorting to this mode of acquainting the readers of the Literary Gazette, under whose notice the paragraph adverted to must have passed, with the true circumstances of the case, and to appeal to their judgment against a wanton and wholly unprovoked attack on the part of the above-named editor, calculated, as it was probably intended, to do material injury in many respects to Mr. Smith's character, and originating in some unworthy motive which he is wholly at a loss to explain.

GUNS WITHOUT LOCKS.—After much labour and expence, J. RIVIERE has succeeded in so far simplifying the machinery by which Fire Arms are discharged, as to render Gun Locks totally unnecessary. By this simple method of discharging Fire Arms (for which J. R. has obtained His Majesty's Royal Letters Patent,) accidents will be prevented, and the price of Guns and Pistols materially reduced. There are also considerable advantages which the newly improved Construction of the Gun and Pistol possesses over those now in use, and which may be seen at the Manufactory, 315, Oxford-street.

ALL BAD WRITING IMPROVED, at the Royal Systematic Writing and Short-hand Academy, 104, High Holborn. Whatever may be the age of the Pupil or his defects, whether the stiffness, formality, and tedious execution, often arising from bad habits in schools, or an effeminate, scrawling, illegible style—in either case, Mr. LEWIS will engage positively to remove all defects in a few short and easy Lessons, and enable the Pupil to write a quick and beautiful hand, fit for the Tradesman or the Gentleman.—Short Hand taught in Six Lessons.

BURGESS' ESSENCE OF ANCHOVIES Warehouse, 107, STRAND, corner of Savoy Steps, London.—JOHN BURGESS and SON, being apprised of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the ORIGINAL, to observe the Name and Address correspond with the above;—the general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection, J. B. and Son submit the following caution:—Some are in appearance at first sight "Burgess' Essence of Anchovies;"—others "Burgis's," and many more without address.—JOHN BURGESS and SON having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the labels previous to purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.—Burgess' New Sauce for general purposes, having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient sauce—will keep good in all climates.—Warehouse, No. 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy Steps.—(The Original Fish Sauce Warehouse.)

It imparts a luxuriant and matchless beauty to the complexion; affords soothing relief to Ladies nursing their offspring. To Gentlemen after Shaving, it allays the irritation and smarting pain, and renders the Skin smooth and pleasant.—Sold in Bottles (duty included) at 3s. 6d. and and 4s. 6d. by the sole proprietors, A. ROWLAND and SON, No. 20, Hatton-Garden, and by most Perfumers and Medicine-venders.

 Ask for ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, and see the Signature, A. ROWLAND and SON.

Also to preserve the Hair from falling, which is occasioned by excessive perspiration, ROWLAND'S MACCASSAR OIL

Is pre-eminently successful in nourishing the Hair, preventing its falling off in cases of perspiration, illness, &c. and has the unrivalled property of giving a most fascinating and delectable appearance to the Hair. Price 3s.6d.; 7s., 10s. 6d; and 21s. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S ALSANA EXTRACT, for preventing the Tooth Ache.—CAUTION.—In consequence of the high popularity of the above articles, flagrant impostors have counterfeited them; Copying advertisement, labels, bills and bottles, which renders it indispensibly necessary on purchasing either of the above to ask for "ROWLAND'S," strictly observing the Signature and Address in red, A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden.

LADIES and GENTLEMEN may rely on it, although there are Articles daily puffed in the newspapers for the Hair, but it is acknowledged as a fact, whoever makes a fair trial of the Original Thick RUSSIA OIL, has found it, through the Aromatic Oils it is prepared with, the wholesomest and best Oil for preserving and promoting the hair of ladies, gentlemen, and children, and if used constantly not a hair will fall off or turn grey, and is such a nourisher to the Hair, that if it has began to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour; will restore the hair on the bald part, if the least signs of roots are remaining, has been proved by hundreds.

A. PRINCE is proud to acknowledge the favour of his Gracious Majesty of Great Britain, in sending for six bottles of his celebrated Russia Oil. It ought really to be generally known—the principal Physicians have recommended those who wear false hair to rub their heads often with the Russia Oil, as, through the aromatic ingredient it is prepared with is wholesome and refreshing to the head. Observe, Mr. Marshal and other respectable Court hair-dressers, will not recommend any other article for the hair but the Prince's Original Thick Russia Oil, as they have experienced it is the best for dressing, preserving, and promoting the hair; but there are several hair-dressers, when Ladies and Gentlemen have their Hair dressed by them they recommend Bears' Grease, or other Oils for the Hair, though they know it is a humbug.

Ask for Prince's Russia Oil—the Ounce Bottle 5s.; a large bottle containing Five Ounces, 11. which is a saving. Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. PRINCE, No. 9, Poland street, Oxford street; Mr. Smith, Perfumer to His Majesty, 117, New Bond street; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders. Be particular, and observe his address, "A. Prince, No. 9, Poland Street, Oxford Street, London," on the cover of each bottle; without, it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose.—Purchasers ought to be particular, as counterfeits are in circulation.—Also, Prince's RUSSIA DYE is so improved, as there is no doubt that it will change Red or Grey Hair on the Head, Whiskers, or any part to Brown or Black in a few minutes.—Directions sealed up with each bottle, at half a guinea, or two bottles for One Pound

HUNTING.

Sir Bellingham Graham, it is said, has given up his intention of hunting that part of the county surrounding Shiffnal, and will adhere to the vicinity of Shrewsbury, &c. In consequence of this determination a meeting has been held at Wolverhampton, when it was resolved to establish a pack of hounds, under the direction of T. Boycott, esq. A few couples will be given up from Sir Bellingham's pack. A liberal subscription, amounting to about 1,200*l.*, was entered into towards defraying the expenses. The meeting was attended by—Lord Grey, Colonel Gataere, T. W. Giffard, esq. G. Whitgreave, esq. F. Holyoake, esq. H. Montgomery Campbell, esq. C. Tonguc, esq. W. Grazebrooke, esq. J. Ashton, esq. the Earl of Stamford and Warrington, Viscount Dudley and Ward, J. H. Hodgetts Foley, esq. H. Hordern, esq. and other proprietors of covers, are also subscribers to the fund.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

Trieste, July 28.—"I announce to you with great satisfaction that there arrived here yesterday three Austrian vessels, two from Smyrna and one from Constantinople. The captain of the latter, named Rangeneorch, had left that place 21 days prior, and on his way had received a visit from Tombasis, who informed him that the Greeks had succeeded in taking Ibrahim Pacha, the leader of the Egyptian troops, who had been wounded in the thigh, and who, on his being taken, was sent to Napoli. On proceeding further he met Captain Stoicovich, who was coming from Maina by the way of Zante, and that captain told him the same news. He received that intelligence on the 13th instant. The two vessels from Smyrna had received no visits, because they had had a favourable wind, and had therefore proceeded without stopping. Blessed be God, who has delivered us from our despair and thus filled our souls with joy! A vessel from Smyrna had met a fisherman's bark near Cerigo, and had learned that Ibrahim Pacha was in treaty with Colocotroni. The Turkish troops, which had been landed at Navarino, were taken from that place to Patras; for the commander, seeing that he could not have any communication with Ibrahim Pacha, was afraid to remain in the fortress of Navarino, as, on account of the want of water, it would easily become a prey to an invading force. We give implicit credit to the above, for we rarely find that the Greek vessels of war give false intelligence, and we doubt not but we shall speedily receive a confirmation, with the details of the engagement. Those brave Frenchmen are now become the servants of the Turks. The Amarantha, a schooner of war, is the courier of Mehemet Ali, and carried money and despatches for him to his son, to Candia, and to the fortresses of the Morea; and now another French man of war, the Courier, filled the same office and brought despatches from the Turks for Ibrahim to Navarino. These accounts are confirmed by the Osservatore Triestino of this place, and also by a vessel arrived from Modon, which deposed the same in the office of health.

Mexico, June 11.—Since the presentation by Mr. Ward of his credentials, and his reception as British Charge d'Affaires, we have nothing new in politics, nor indeed in any thing else, if I except the arrival on the 8th inst. at the Mint, in this city, of the first conducta (convoy) of silver from the Valenciana mine. It is sent here to be coined. The papers by the April packet have brought us Mr. Baring's speech on the Mexican mines. It is a pity that a man of Mr. Baring's standing in the world should speak so loosely. It was an odd coincidence, that Mr. Baring's denouncement of mining as a mere bubble, should arrive here just about the same day as the first arrival of silver from the mines. No member of the British House of Commons would speak as this gentleman did, if he knew the beuefit that the mining districts of this country are at this moment of time receiving from the setting of the mines to work, and the thousands of people who are honestly and usefully employed by them.

Zante, July 6.—The martyrdom of a monk of the convent of the Virgin Mary, in Mount Aracynthe, is the subject of admiration among the faithful here. This old man having been brought by the Turks before the tribunal of Rouschid Pacha, and asked what his name was, answered, "Ambrose." "Your country?" demanded his persecutors. "The monastery of the Holy Virgin," replied the monk. "And your dwelling?" "My dwelling-place," said he, "were these rocks, until they were levelled by your soldiers; and soon," lifting up a cross at the same time, "my dwelling will be in heaven." "What have you done with the sacred vessels of the church?" "I have rescued them from the defilement of your soldiers." "Where are they?" "That secret rests with myself." "Speak!" "You may put my body to the rack; God only has power over my soul." They immediately began to apply the torture; not a word however escaped him but "Kyrie eleison!" and "Lord have mercy on me!" They drove sharp instruments under his finger nails, but the martyr glorified God, and prayed for his persecutors, who, enraged by his patience of suffering, impaled him, and left him to perish in view of the trenches of Missolonghi. This news was communicated by a Piedmontese deserter. Such are the tortures to which Christians are subjected in the nineteenth century!

COLLERETO PARELLA, (IN THE PROVINCE OF IOREA,) JULY 24.

"A most dreadful storm, in the course of last night, has spread desolation over this district. The whole of yesterday the sky was covered with heavy clouds, and at midnight profound darkness prevailed, only broken by frequent flashes of lightning. Instead of the usual sound of thunder, a low universal rumbling preceded half an hour the destructive hail, which fell in impetuous torrents, driven by the north wind. The intense darkness, the sound of the bells, the crash of the hail, and that of the roofs and windows shattered to pieces, and the mournful cries of the country people, inspired universal terror, more easily conceived than described. At half-past one o'clock the fury of the tempest abated, and we heard only the distant rolling of the thunder.

"The dawn of day came but too soon to show us the extent of the disaster; the vineyards, which promised the riches crops, the fields which gave the most flattering hopes, are become a desert; as far as the eye can reach, not a trace of vegetation is to be seen: the fields, the roads, the roofs, are covered with hail. It is noon, and the stones are still the size of a hen's egg. On a wide extent of country, not a note of a bird is to be heard; the country people are gathering them up by basket fulls, killed and mutilated by the hail, and they found in the furrows numbers of hares and foxes, victims of this tremendous visitation. The damage done to the houses and other buildings is very considerable. It is impossible to estimate the extent of the injury, but it is certain that the vineyards and plantations of Meige are wholly ruined. The storm swept some square miles of the country. Half an hour before the storm, the barometer was at 27° 1′. Reaumur's thermometer 1 °."

Frankfort, August 2.—"In the Courier Français of July 29, there is a letter signed D. G. respecting the loan which the Grand Duchy of Hesse has just concluded with the house of Rothschild. M. D. G. finds that there is some artifice in the statement respecting this loan; for, says he, if Hesse can borrow at 4 per Cent. France might do the same, and it would be wrong to continue paying a higher interest. But M. D. G. not being a friend to the conversion of the Rentes, pledges himself that the house of Rothschild has not lent at 4 per Cent. but in Four per Cent. which is very different.

"Being on the spot, and having the plan of the loan before us, we have reason to think ourselves better informed than M. D. G. and we pledge ourselves to him, that this loan, in the form of a lottery, redeemable in fifty years, is not concluded in Four per Cent. but at four per Cent. We now add that it was filled up in a very few days; that the house of Rothschild was far from being able to comply with all the applications made to it, and that the loan, which opened at 96⅛, is already at 99.

New South Wales.—The following circumstance occurred the other night at the house of Mr. Robertson, watch-maker, in George-street, near the King's wharf.—It is well known that Mr. R. has a family of children. These children, five of them quite babes, have their bed-rooms up stairs, and lie two in a bed. About midnight, on Friday or Saturday last, Mr. R's eldest son was disturbed by some animal, which he supposed to be a cat; he gave a kick and it fell off the bed.—In a few moments after, the animal found its way into his sister's bed-room, and there, in like manner, created an alarm; it was knocked off the bed, and expressed great displeasure, by squeaking; it was then known to be a rat. The horrid animal was not to be retarded from the object in view by these rebuffs; he made another attack. Some moments after the second alarm, one of the little girls was heard to scream; but all the children being inclined to sleep, even the little creature that was wounded also fell asleep. The morning, however, presented a most dismal scene. The bed, containing Lavelette and Jenny, was drenched in blood. The rat had seized the children just above the nose, and immediately below the forehead. One of the teeth had entered a vein that caused the blood to flow most copiously. Lavelette was nearly in a state of insensibility, and quite colourless. It is supposed that the animal must have been satiated with blood, and then retreated. The houses in the lower end of the town are alarmingly infested with these horrid vermin. Plenty of good strong cats (instead of so many useless, annoying curs) would be of great advantage to large houses, where children constitute so great a portion of the inmates.

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

Andover.—In consequence of a pond, a short distance from Winterslow Hut, between Sarum and Andover, having become dry, some workmen were required to clean out a well not far from the pond. The well had not been opened for upwards of two years; and on Saturday the 23d ult. one of the men went down to it, when he found the remains of a man, which he took out. He went down again and brought up some other parts of a human body; but the head and arms were left in the well.

Gloucester.—So frequent of late have been the nocturnal depredations among the cottagers' bee-hives, in the neighbourhood of Tewkesbury, that nightly watches are now necessarily set in order to guard what, in many instances, constitutes the most valuable portion of the poor man's wealth. An ineffectual attempt having been made to carry away the hives of a labouring man, named John Shillam, at Beckford, on Tuesday night last, a person was placed to guard them on the following night. A little after twelve, two fellows entered the garden, and immediately proceeded to their work of plunder, while a confederate remained outside, for the purpose of reconnoitering; whereupon the guard fired a gun heavily loaded with shot, and wounded one of the villains so severely, that it is supposed, from the quantity of blood remaining near the spot, he could not long survive without surgical assistance being administered to him; and this circumstance will, we trust, be the means of bringing these cowardly plunderers to justice.

Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Aug. 6.—As might naturally be expected, the calamitous catastrophe consequent upon the riotous proceedings of the Union Seamen at Sunderland, last Wednesday evening, has produced a very deep sensation in this district. But with every bias to humanity, and most deeply deploring the sacrifice of the lives of our fellow-creatures, it is impossible not to admit it was demanded by the exigency of the circumstances. The conduct of the Magistrates is spoken of by every one as deserving of praise for their forbearance and humane efforts to avert the pains of military execution; but, unfortunately, there was no making any impression upon the riotous multitude. Nay, they had the temerity to attack the soldiers with brick-bats and various other missiles, some time before a single musket was fired. One or more of the soldiers, in fact, were knocked down, and somewhat seriously wounded in the face. In this state of things there was only one way of acting—force was to be repelled by force. And it is but justice to observe, that in discharging a very painful public duty, the Magistrates displayed great coolness, and seemed perfectly reckless of personal danger. The military at first were ordered to fire over the heads of the rioters; but when they saw nobody hurt, the mob seemed to defy the authorities, and to grow more outrageous than ever. Hence the dire necessity of proceeding to extremities in the way that has already been mentioned in my letter of the 4th inst. Instead of three, five persons, it appears, were shot; and two individuals, it is said, are missing, supposed to be drowned. The Coroners for Easington Ward and Chester Ward, P. Russell, Esq. and M. Hall, Esq. with two several Juries, have examined a great mass of evidence, with a view to ascertain all the particulars that surrounded the five unfortunate men at the time they came by their death; and a most diligent and ample investigation has been gone into. It lasted nearly the whole of two days, and the verdict is justifiable homicide. One of the Magistrates, John Davison, Esq., set off for London yesterday, in order to lay the whole details of the distressing affair before the Home Secretary. Nothing, certainly, can be said in defence of the seamen; for it is well known, that at the present moment the wages on the Wear and the Tyne are higher than what are paid to any other of the same class of men in the kingdom, or perhaps in the world. One of our local papers of this day observes, with great truth, "It is the duty of every honest man to tell these misguided individuals, that the proceedings in which they are engaged are intolerable, and cannot possibly be suffered with impunity. What right has one man to interfere with the private individual conduct of another? Let every man please himself, either to work or not, upon the terms proposed by the ship-owners. This might be fair; but it is not to be endured for a moment that men shall form combinations among themselves, dictate terms, and molest or murder all who do not conform to this abominable Association." When the last accounts left Sunderland all was quiet, and the ships were getting to sea as usual. Independently of two troops of the 3d Light Dragoons quartered there at present, a strong detachment of the Tyne Hussars, under the command of Captain Pemberton, is also there upon duty.

Monmouth.—On Monday last, a Court of Record, convened by the Mayor and Bailiffs for the express purpose of electing Burgesses, was held at the Town Hall. Each individual qualified to be present, had been personally served with a notice of the time and business of the meeting; and the conflicting parties assembled in considerable numbers. Great irregularity and confusion prevailed; so much so, that only two Burgesses had been elected at a late hour in the evening, when the Court was adjourned till the following morning. The attendance next day was not so numerous; and there being consequently less interruption to the business, thirty-one Burgesses were elected and sworn in, with comparatively trifling opposition. These proceedings, although avowedly conducted agreeably to the recent decisions in the Courts of Law upon the controverted points, are still objected to by the party adverse to the Independent Burgesses; and litigation and warfare seem interminable in this devoted Borough.

Glasgow.—Early on Saturday morning there was a complete row in Mile-end. It appears that a publican commencing business in that quarter had invited a number of expected customers to the "heating" of his whisky shop (which seem to be increasing to an extraordinary extent in and around Glasgow). After passing the night in a manner befitting the auspicious occasion, the merry company were breaking up and going home, when they happened to come in contact with Mr. Snodgrass' night workers, as they were coming out of the mill. A quarrel instantaneously ensued between them and the spinners. One of the party had put his arm round the neck of a girl; this gave offence, and a general battle ensued. The spinners being sober had the best of the fight; but the other side receiving reinforcements, they were forced to take shelter in the mill. An attempt was then made to scale the walls, and force the door of the mill; but being baffled in this, they continued in numbers about the street, daring the spinners to come out and fight them. On the approach of the civil power, they fled into public-houses; and the night-spinners were relieved, after being confined for three hours. As both parties retired into public-houses, it is not improbable there may be a fresh rencontre during the day.

Liverpool.—On Friday morning last, about two o'clock, this town was visited by one of the most awful thunder storms ever experienced here. Two claps, in particular, were most terrific, and made the stoutest heart tremble. The first occurred at a quarter before two o'clock.

——"When mankind were wrapt in sleep,
And worldly Fancy fed on golden dreams."

The thunder burst forth with the most sublime, yet terrific grandeur. The clap was so loud that it awoke almost every inhabitant. We have heard the peal compared to the sudden crash of falling houses; but it resembled more the discharge of a heavy piece, or rather of pieces of ordnance immediately under your window. The lightning which preceded the second peal was so vivid as to deprive of sight, for a few moments, any one who had the temerity to gaze upon its dazzling and appalling brightness. It was just as if a glowing sheet of flame had been passed before the eye of the beholder. The whole town was seen as in the blaze of the meridian sun. The Town of Liverpool steam-packet was on her passage from Dublin at the moment; and the captain describes the lightning as having been the most awful and terrific he ever beheld. The thunder immediately broke forth, not with a rumbling noise, as during ordinary thunder storms, but in one loud, tremendous clap, shaking the very buildings to their foundations, and striking terror and dismay into all who heard it. The rain, during this time, descended in torrents. The lightning which succeeded the second terrific clap, was but weak, compared with the sublime grandeur of the flash by which it was preceded. The thunder also became feeble, and soon muttered and died away in the distance. As is usual after any awful visitation of nature, a variety of rumours of the damage produced by this storm of thunder and lightning were in circulation; but we have not learnt that any very serious injury, as respects either person or property, has been sustained in the town or neighbourhood. A respectable man, who lives in a street leading from St. James's-street to Wapping, states that he was awake before and during the storm. His bed-room window commands a rather extensive view to the north and north-west. He says, that, the window-blind being drawn up, he saw, the instant the second terrific flash took place, something resembling a ball of fire, about as large as a foot-ball, come over Sparling-street, in the direction of his house. He trembled with affright, conceiving that he could not escape the swift destruction which was approaching. The house, which stands alone, slightly but perceptibly vibrated as the electric fluid passed by, and the bed on which he lay moved as if violently shaken. This awful phenomenon was also beheld by a person who lives on the opposite side of the street, and whose bed-room window commands a view in the same direction as the house of his neighbour. He had given the inmates up for lost, so convinced was he that the electric fluid, from the direction in which he saw it approaching, would strike and destroy the opposite house. Fortunately, however, it passed over the building without causing any injury, and continued its course towards the south-east. The Town-hall is, we believe, the only building that experienced even a slight injury. It must, apparently, have been enveloped in the electric fluid, which appears to have made the circuit of the dome within the stone balustrade, where there are four lead pipes at intervals to convey the water from the dome down upon the foot-walk of the balustrade. About six inches from the bottom of this walk, the fluid appears to have gone wholly round close to the dome, and flattened each of the lead pipes, leaving the appearance as of a bullet, two inches diameter, having been forced between each pipe and the dome, then passed inside the lantern, and came out through the upper part of the window (breaking seven panes of glass) into Castle-street. The sign of a public house in Great Crosshall-street, has been discoloured, by the action, it is imagined, of the electric fluid. The iron-work, to which an artificial bunch of grapes is suspended, was supposed to have been bent by the same powerful agency; but this appears a mistake, the bend having, it is evident, been made by the blacksmith who manufactured it.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE AGE.

Sir,—As a friend to truth and candour it will be satisfactory to me if you should think proper to allow this short letter a place in your columns.

I observed in the journal called the "Sunday Times," a paragraph stating that Mr. Wyatt, and not Mr. Nash, is the architect who has been preferred to Mr. Smirke, for the building of His Royal Highness the Duke of York's house in the Stable-yard.

The paragraph to which I allude is far from explicit or unequivocal, but it appears to me, that if it has any meaning at all, it is that Messrs. Benjamin and Philip Wyatt (who are the architects to the building in question) have obtained a preference to which they are not entitled.

I am aware that the paragraph does not absolutely make that broad assertion, but such is the only inference, I conceive, which any one unacquainted with the facts would be likely to draw from it. I am not personally acquainted with either Mr. Benjamin or Mr. Philip Wyatt, or with Mr. Smirke; but it so happens that I do know a good deal of what has transpired in the most respectable, and even in the highest quarters; and I assert without fear of contradiction, first, that Mr. Smirke had every possible opportunity given to him of altering and amending his original design, and of establishing the superiority of his taste and invention, if such superiority he had really possessed; and secondly, that in my conscientious belief, there never was a case of similar competition in which the ultimate preference was obtained more decidedly by a superiority of merit than in this instance.

I have long been of opinion that the injudicious zeal of an indiscreet friend is more dangerous than the open assaults of a decided foe; and upon this principle I would suggest to to Mr. Smirke's friends to consider well whether it would he for the interest of that gentleman to call forth, by hints or inuendos, or any other means, a full and complete exposition of the characteristic differences, the merits and demerits of the two designs respectively.

I entirely agree with the author of the paragraph in the "Sunday Times," that the architect's motto ought to be "Quod petis hic est," but at the same time I think it is but a fair equivalent to allow to the architect's employer the privilege of the old adage, "Sero quam serio;" or as we have it in plain English, "Better late than never:" so that if in his first choice he should not realize what he wishes, he may have the liberty of seeking it elsewhere.

Being a perfectly disinterested observer on this occasion, I beg to assure you that I make these remarks merely as

THE AGE.

LONDON, August 14.

THE KING.

Our most Gracious Sovereign attained the Sixty-third Year of his life on Friday; and if any proof were wanting of the increased attachment of his subjects towards him, it will be only necessary to allude to the celebration of the day both in the Metropolis, and various parts of the country. The present state of the prosperity, as well as tranquillity of Great Britain is such, that her people can have but one feeling on any question wherein the name of the Monarch under whose auspicious reign she has realized so much honour, is in the least respect concern-d; and in commemorating the return of his nativity, they have the proud satisfaction of claiming A King, at once the promoter of all their wishes, the patron of all their pursuits, and the support of all their glory; and at the same time they can indulge in the honest pride, to which all other nations are comparative strangers, of standing in the world, as respects the dignity of their nobility, the extent of their commerce, and the integrity of their princ ples, unrivalled.

The vituperation of the Lord Chancellor, under the auspices of Mr. Henry Brougham, continues without any abatement in point of rancour or malevolence, though weaker in every additional argument brought forth to its support. It would certainly be adviseable that some other principle were forthwith adopted for the arrangement of those articles, which almost daily figure away in the columns of the Morning Chronicle, because their system and accuracy are now become so thoroughly understood, as to lose the influence calculated upon, even among their own immediate partizans; and as far as respects those persons whom it is desirous to enlist under the same standard of opinion, it totally fails in the object proposed. Assertion is one thing, and proof another; and the proofs of the old Chronicle have yet to learn the wide difference there exists between criticism and infallibility. We are favoured by this rank old twaddle, in his Monday's Journal, with a letter from a Solicitor to the Lord Chancellor, which he informs us "comes from a most respectable quarter, and is eminently deserving of attention,"---the first of which positions we beg to doubt, and the second we know to be false, for the contents of the letter in question are made up of personal abuse and gross language, without even the appearance of argument to support its statements. If this "respectable solicitor," instead of attempting to exculpate his brethren generally, from the very proper censure they so frequently subject themselves to from the Chancellor, had cited some cases individually, where rebuke would be well bestowed, he would have done a real service, and thereby spare his Lordship the unpleasant task, he calls upon him to undergo, of naming the particular parties so richly deserving it; and if he had been at a loss whom to pitch upon, at the moment, by way of a beginning, he could not have done better than have alluded to the petition of "Hubbersty, in the matter of Middleton," praying that the bill of costs of a Mr. Garland, a solicitor, might be retaxed by the Master, with a view to the disallowance of certain items therein. This Mr. Garland, it appears, acted as solicitor both for the Committee and next of Kin, a practice in every sense of the word highly reprehensible—but that is not the worst part of it---for his bills contained double charges for attendance, on every proceeding, though in point of fact only one attendance was given; and charges were made for payments to the Master for copies for the next of Kin, of all the occurrences in the Master's office, though no such copies had ever actually been made---a system which, we agree with Mr. Horne in thinking, is deserving of the severest reprobation. But in order that we may point out some reason for the very sore feeling entertained by such "respectable solicitors" against the Lord Chancellor, we will give His Lordship's opinion on this very transaction:

"The Lord Chancellor said, that the practice of the same person acting as solicitor for all parties, has frequently been reprobated by this Court. He hoped that some remedy would soon be found for this evil. The present was au important case; the bond taken by Mr. Garland for payment of the costs disallowed on taxation, was most objectionable. He never remembered such a circumstance being brought specificially before the Court, though he had heard from the Bar, of solicitors making bargains that their bills should not be taxed. All such bargains were clearly illegal; and in the order which he would pronounce on this petition, he would show his strong reprobation of such a practice."

In addition to this sample of respectability, the Morning Chronicle has favoured us with two or three poetic effusions, in its usual style of pleasantry and harmony combined; and by way of founding them on the most authentic information to be had, gives the authority upon which it proceeds, after this fashion---"see Morn. Chron. of such and such a day"---as if the said Morn. Chron. were exempt from the possibility of committing an error. In one of these interesting sallies, we are treated with a translation of Mr. Shadwell's quotation of of which the following is a specimen:

castigatque.

He catigates with pains and penalties,
With Masters, peeping Clerks, and double fees.

auditque dolos.

Well, next he hears the silly things that come, and with reference to the first couplet, we sincerely trust, for the sake of decency, that the old gentleman means castigates, instead of what he has written; and in allusion to the second verse, we cannot sufficiently condole with my Lord Eldon on the character here given, by His Lordship's most violent opponent, of the different cases that pass under His Lordship's notice, or even applaud him enough for devoting eight hours a-day to the consideration of "the silly things that come" before him. Oh, Morning Chronicle!---Morning Chronicle, oh! if there is one head of a thicker quality than another in this land of Cockaigne, it is the doltish noddle that sends forth thy daily lucubrations to the world!
Ay, hears, and hears, and takes the paper home.

After wading through this mass of petty abuse, of accusation without testimony, of assertion without fact, we at last laugh outright at the blockheads who instigate it, for the accomplishment of a particular purpose, which they have no more chance of effecting, than the very printer's devils employed by them---and if we have one regret upon the subject, it is, that the venerated Nobleman against whom all this malice is levied, enjoying as he does the sanction and favour of His Gracious Master, and the approbation of that part of his countrymen worth possessing, should for a moment condescend to allow his mind to be diverted from its important pursuits by any such ribaldry; for, whether relating to the emoluments or abuse of the Court of Chancery, the people are too well satisfied with His Lordship to seek for any alteration, as far as he is personally concerned; for the memorable words delivered by him, on the passing of the Judges' Salaries Bill, have long since been registered by every one, as a spontaneous effusion of one of the most conscientious, upright, and exemplary men that ever flourished in the annals of the world:---we cannot do better than subjoin them:

"I can go no where without hearing the Chancellor's emoluments asserted to be four times their actual amount; and I believe that no man would be considered as adhering to truth who described them to be three-fourths less than what they are generally affirmed to be. I was myself in company a short time since, and I heard a gentleman assert that the salary of the Lord Chancellor was £40,000 per annum: another gentleman got up and said that this statement was not exactly correct, for he knew it to be £35,000 per annum, and no more; and that that was in truth the whole amount. Now this variation amounts to very little, as to the emolument of the situation I have too long held—I say too long, because if I had been done common justice to, I should not have been Lord Chancellor of England this day. I say to those who have endeavoured to turn me out, that they have not hit upon the right method; and I add, treat me with common justice, and you will find you can dispose of me as you wish, by fair means. As to the salary of the Chancellor, I now declare that the £10,000 per annum, to be received by the Chief Justice of the King's Bench, is as much as the Lord Chancellor has received for three years. I do not mean to say this is a fair average of the emoluments during the twenty-three years I have been in office, nor do I include in this calculation the fees received, as Speaker of the House of Lords; but in no year have I received the same emoluments, as when I was Counsel at the Bar. The emoluments of the two offices I hold, I imagine, fluctuate between £14,500 and £15,000 a-year. With respect to the abuses of the Court of Chancery, I declare that I have no offices to sell, and if I had, I would not dispose of them. The commission which has been established will remedy all these abuses." His Lordship then added in a low tone, and with much pathos, "I have discharged my duty, to the best of my power, and pray to God, that those who will have to succeed me will execute it more satisfactorily—more sedulously or anxiously, I can say, they will not attempt to execute them. They may make sacrifices to popular clamour, for insults daily received; but if the temper of the Times is to pull down the character and honour of men, in high judicial situations, and render them objects of scandal and calumny, the Peers of the Country can no longer exist, after such characters have been sacrificed."

The following impromptu was made by Tom Raikes, during his recent visit to Oatlands, on hearing Ball Hughes boast that he had built himself a Study near the Grotto, which no one knew any thing about, and that he was consequently free from intrusion:---

"My garden neat
Has got a seat,
That's hid from every eye, sir;
Where, day and night,
I read and write,
And nobody's the wiser!"

His Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester went to see the Living Skeleton on Monday last, and seeing Luttrell in the room, said: "Pray, Mr. Luttrell, can you tell me if the gentleman is married, and whether he has any family?" "I should hope not, your Royal Highness," said Luttrell, "because he would thin the population."

Mrs. Mitchell was complaining to Glengall, that, at Almack's last Ball, Lord Kinnoul very rudely attempted to stare her daughter out of countenance---on which Glengall replied---"Without any reference to your daughter's countenance, I can only say, if she will but stare His Lordship out of his countenance, she will be conferring a very great favour on the late Miss Rowley."

The disgraceful exhibitions which have lately taken place in the vicinity of Warwick call forth the severest animadversions from every respectable member of society; and although no language can pourtray, in a manner sufficently forcible, the disgusting and brutal character of the parties concerned, we have no hesitation in saying, that a very great portion of the opprobrium so universally evinced on the different occasions, should fall on those persons who, either by a dereliction or ignorance of duty, or both, were not instrumental in suspending such occurrences. The selection of a neighbourhood like this for any public spectacle of so degenerated a nature, ought to excite double circumspection and energy in the minds of the magistracy; for it must be naturally sup

FASHIONABLE INTELLIGENCE.

Friday was the anniversary of his Majesty's natal day, when he completed his 63d year. Several public buildings exhibited the standard of England. A number of vessels in the Thames displayed a variety of colours; the annual grand gala was given at Vauxhall upon the occasion. The day appointed for the celebration of this joyous anniversary, when it is observed as a national gala, is the 23d April.

The Duke of York is about to leave town to join a grouse shooting party, at the Duke of Rutland's seat in Derbyshire.

Marriage in high life.—On Saturday evening was married by special licence, by the Rev. P. Dodd, Rector of Penshurst, Philip Sidney, Esq., only son of Sir John Sidney, Bart., of Penshurst, to Miss Sophia Fitzclarence. The bride was given away by His Royal Highness the Duke of York.

The infant son of the Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry was baptised on Thursday eveuing at his Lordship's residence, Holdernesse House, Park-lane. The sponsors were, their Royal Highnesses the Dukes of York and Cambridge, and the Right Hon. Lady Anne Becket.

The Marquis of Hastings, with the Marchioness, Earl of Rawdon, and the Ladies Hastings, arrived at Loudon Castle on the 6th instant. At Old Cumnock, ucar which stands an ancient castle, called Terenzean, which gives the title of Baron to the Lords of Loudon, the noble party were met by a band of music, and the whole of the inhabitants of the town and neighbouring country. It is unnecessary to add, that the whole couutry was delighted with the return of this popular nobleman to the lauds of his children's ancestors, where they have been chieftains since the expulsion of the Romans.

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

SIR THOMAS HARE'S CLAIM.

IN THE MATTER OF MARSH, STRACEY, AND CO.

Mr. PEPYS presented a petition from the assignees of the joint estate, praying that the proof that had been admitted of the demand of Sir Thomas Hare should be expunged, on the ground that the money in question never came into the bank.

The case, as stated by Mr. PEPYS, and answered by Mr. HART and Mr. BICKERSTAFF, appears to be, that Sir Thomas Hare had agieed to borrow a sum of 15,000*l.* from some trustees, of whom the late Mr. Fauntleroy was one; that on executing the mortgage he verbally requested Mr. Fauntleroy to pay certain sums thereout, and to vest the remainder in the Four per Cent. Annuities. That residue amounted to about 11,000*l.*, of which Mr. Fauntleroy vested the sum of 1,911*l.* 6*s.* 4*d.*, but the dividends were regularly credited to Sir Thomas Hare in the books of Marsh, Stracey, and Co. There was no proof, however, that the bank had ever received the money, at least noue to the satisfaction of the Vice-Chancellor, hut he directed an issue to try whether there was any and what sum due to Sir Thomas Hare from Marsh, Stracey, and Co. at the time of issuing forth the commission agaiust them.

Mr. HANT, at the conclusion of the argument, hinted that perhaps it would admit of a somewhat deeper investigation, for that, if Marsh, Stracey, and Co. had not received the money, it had not been paid at all, and that therefore the mortgage pro tanto was worth nothing.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR gave no opiuion on this point; nor indeed was it required, as the cestui qui trusts of the mortgage were not before the Court; but the decision on it will depend upou the fact whether Sir Thomas Hare left the money in Mr. Fauntleroy's hands as his agent, or that it was not to be considered as paid to Sir Thomas until applied according to his directions.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

BOW-STREET.—Monday, a respectable looking young woman dressed in deep mourning, made the following application to Mr. MINSHULL, the Sitting Magistrate:—She stated that a brother of her's, who had been a long time ill, died on Saturday morning in St. George's Hospital, and on learning that he was dead she went to the hospital to look at the body. An undertaker, however, who had already brought a coffin in which she was told the remains of her brother had been placed, told her she could not see the body, but she was of course at liberty to come on Monday morning, the time fixed for the funeral, and follow it to the grave, and then perhaps her request might be complied with. She went yesterday morning at the hour mentioned by the undertaker, but found that he had left the hospital with the funeral half an hour before. She followed and overtook the supposed corpse of her brother, which was followed only hy another brother and a male friend, and preceded the usual way by the same undertaker. Her mind was not then quite free from suspicion of something wrong, and when they arrived at the church-yard, and she saw the coffin uncovered, she felt at once convinced that it could not possibly contain the body of her brother. He was a very tall man, and (having died of dropsy) very bulky, and the coffin was short and narrow, and had the appearance of as having been made for a mere boy. She requested while the coffin was yet above ground to have it opened, and the undertaker said he would go to the parish sexton and ask whether it could be done. He returned in a few minutes, and assured the applicant that the sexton said the coffin could not be opened, and consequently the ceremony proceeded, and the coffin was put into the ground. Still dissatisfied, however, she applied to the sexton, and to her great surprise learned from him that if an application had been made to him before the actual interment, he would have sent for a carpenter, and caused the coffin to be opened; hut, as it was, he had no power. He advised her, however, to go immediately to a magistrate, and request his interference.—Mr. MINSHULL said, that as it was St. George's Hospital, he must refer the applicant to Marlborough-street or Queen's-square, those offices heing much nearer, and any occurrence at that hospital being more immediately within the jurisdiction of the magistrates there.—The applicant said, that the interment took place in the church-yard of St. Paul, Covent-garden, and that the sexton advised her to come here. In answer to a question from Mr. MINSHULL, she said the interment took place in Covent Garden because her brother had lived many years in the service of Mr. Robins, the Auctioneer, and that gentleman ordered the funeral at his own expense.—A young woman who came with the applicant, and said she was her cousin, said she was quite satisfied that the body of their deceased relative could not lie in the coffin she had seen.—Mr. MINSHULL, after some consideration, said, he had no power to interfere. The only step he could take would be to give an order for the opening of the ground, and he knew of no law that would authorize him in issuing any such order.—Mr. ROCHE, the Vestry Clerk of Covent-garden, suggested that the parties might apply to the Churchwardens on the subject.—Mr. MINSHULL told the applicants they could certainly apply to the Churchwardens, but he had no power himself to interfere. He knew that their suspicious must be very distressing to them, but he could not step beyond the law.—The young woman went to Mr. Cribb, one of the Churchwardens, who in consequence waited on Mr. Minshull to learn if the application had actually been made here. Mr. Cribh, on being told in the affirmative, said, that he and his colleagues would most probably accede to the request, as there certainly appeared some ground for it, but they must first be properly advised on the subject.—We learned that a consultation afterwards took place at Mr. Roche's office, and upon reference to Burn's Ecclesiastical Law, and other authorities, it was found that the Churchwardens had no authority to open the ground, the power to do that being vested exclusively in the Archdeacon of the diocese. These gentlemen were therefore obliged to refuse the application. We do not at present know if it is the intention of the relatives of the deceased to pursue the inquiry further.

On Thursday evening last at eight o'clock, Mr. William Christmas, the late clerk of Messrs. Hoares, the bankers, in Fleet-street, who has been several weeks in custody on charges of embezzling Exchequer Bills to the amount of 1000*l.* and upwards, the property of his employers, was brought from the House of Correction and underwent a final examination. The prisoner when first taken into custody was privately examined before Sir R. BIRNIE and remanded for a week, but when the appointed day arrived, the order for his being brought up was countermanded, and so it was from time to time until last night. This delay, of the cause for which we are not aware, gave rise to a pretty strong opinion that it was not the intention of the firm to prosecute, and there was a rumour that the charge was to be withdrawn, on the condition that the prisoner should leave the country. We have reason to believe, however, that as far as the prosecutors were concerned, there was never the least idea of compromise, though overtures were certainly made on the part of the prisoner, but rejected by Messrs. Hoares.

Mr. LAW attended for the prosecution last evening, and Mr. HARMER appeared as the prisoner's solicitor.

It appeared from the evidence of Mr. William Watfield, a paymaster of Exchequer bills, that it is the custom every year, upon a new issue of those bills, to call in the old ones, and persons presenting the latter have the option either to take the new bills in exchange, or money. In September, 1824, the bills paid in September 1823 were called in, and new bills given in exchange. This witness produced a list of Exchequer bills of 1823, to the amount of 475,400*l.* brought in to the Pay Office, to he exchanged for the same amount of bills of 1824, with interest, on account of Messrs. Hoares. The witness next produced a receipt for the bills, signed on the back, "Wm. Christmas, for Messrs. Wm. Hoare and Co." and a draft for the amount of the interest upon the bills. Mr. Watfield further stated, in answer to a question from Mr. Law, that there were never two Exchequer bills of the same number issued in the same year.—The issue of each year commenced at No. 1, and went on.

Mr. Robert Cotton, of the house of Messrs. Hoare, deposed that the memorandum and signature, on the receipt produced by Mr. Watfield, were the handwriting of the prisoner.

Mr. John Turner Watts, stock-broker, stated that on the 22d of June, he received from, and sold for Mr. William Christmas, (the prisoner,) Exchequer bills Nos. 3534, 5 and 6, each for 100*l.* and paid the produce, with the usual deductions to him. They were bills of the last new issue of 1824. On the 25th of June witness received from the prisoner three more Exchequer bills for 100*l.* each, Nos. 3527, 8 and 9, which he also sold. On the 14th of July he received and sold four other bills of the same issue for 100*l.* each, Nos. 10,530, 1, 2 and 3, making altogether 1,000*l.* Witness received drafts for the amount of these bills from Mr. Harman, and paid over the money to the prisoner. The witness was never concerned for the house of Hoare and Co.

Mr. Meyrick Hoare was called to prove the names of the several partners of the firm.

Other evidence was then called to prove that the prisoner had brought to account 1,000*l.* less than he had received in the Exchequer bills mentioned.

Sir R. BIRNIE having understood that this was the whole of the evidence intended to be offered on this charge, asked the prisoner if he had any remark to make, at the same time cautioning him that it was not absolutely necessary for him to speak. The prisoner said he should have an observation or two to make before the close of the examination.

A second charge was then preferred against the prisoner, and substantiated by evidence, for embezzling a 30*l.* note, part of the interest upon the bills, which was paid to him in money at the Bank of England.

Mr. LAW said this was the close of his case against the prisoner, and he presumed Sir R. BIRNIE would think there was sufficient to warrant a full committal.

Sir R. BIRNIE replied in the affirmative.

Mr. HARMEN said he had one request to make on behalf of the prisoner. He had been in an ill state of health almost from the moment of his apprehension on these charges, and had, indeed, been in the Infirmary the greater part of the time of his confinement in the House of Correction, and it would be a very great indulgence to him to be permitted to go back there till the Sessions, instead of being sent to Newgate. His comforts would be greater, and he would have the benefit of the attendance of the same medical gentleman. Mr. Harmer added, that he believed it was the wish of the prisoner to make an observation himself on a subject of considerable delicacy.

The prisoner, advancing to the table, said: "It has gone abroad that my present unhappy sitnation is owing to my acquaintaoce with a certain lady (Mrs. C., an actress, is the person here alluded to;) and I wish to take this opportunity of declaring publicly that there is no foundation whatever for such a supposition. I solemnly declare that it is not true, and that my present predicament is owing entirely to unfortunate speculations on the Stock Exchange. (The prisoner here produced a written account, in which it was made to appear that he had lost upwards of 6000*l.* by speculations in the funds, or in Joint Stock Shares.)

Sir R. BIRNIE---You had better have said nothing, for you don't know what you are doing. I cautioned you before, but if you will talk, I must hear you.

Prisoner---My only object, Sir, was to clear the character of a lady who has been most unjustly calumuiated.

Mr. LAW said this was all extraneous matter. He had to apply to the Magistrate on another subject. He understood that Mr. Vickery, the Governor of the House of Correction, had seized 1,300*l.* and upwards from the prisoner, and as it was already proved that he had embezzled more than 1000*l.* belonging to Messrs. Hoares, it was more than probable that part of this money was the produce of that embezzlement, and he (Mr. Law) had to request that the 1,300*l.* might be impounded, to be dealt with hereafter as the Judges should direct.

In a conversation which followed upon this, it was explained that after the prisoner was first sent to the House of Correction, some friends sent him about 1,300*l.* in the hope that he would be permitted to make up his deficiencies. Mr. Vickery took it from him, from a fear that some fellows in the prison might rob him of it, but gave it up again upon his formal demand.---The prisoner was fully committed.

WORSHIP-STREET.—Journeymen's Wages.—Two journeymen summoned on Tuesday a Mr. Case, a master carpenter, who lives in Bricklane, Spitalfields, for having refused to pay them an advance of 6d. per day, which they said had been consented to by the masters generally. Mr. TWYFORD and Mr. BRONERIP, who were the presiding magistrates, inquired whether any agreement had been made to that effect. The men admitted that none had been made. Mr. TWYFORD thought that the advance had not been so long established as to be generally known. For his own part, he always understood 5*s.* per day to be the settled wages of a carpenter, and in the absence of a specific agreement or proof of an advance having taken place, he could not depart from the former established regulations. The complainant then agreed to take the 5*s.* per day, which Mr. Case immediately paid him, after which he required the costs of the summons, when Mr. Case appealed to the Bench, and said that he had tendered the wages to the complainants on Saturday night, and asked if he should be obliged to pay the costs, after his loss of time in being obliged to attend here.—Mr. Case was then desired to pay the Complainant his wages only, without costs. The other complainant on the first summons then agreed to receive payment after the same rate, and the parties then left the Office.

MANSION-HOUSE.—Mr. J. Pitcairn, a tradesman of respectability, residing in the City, was, on Wednesday, charged with having illegally obtained bills to the amount of 500*l.* the property of a person named Tigow.—Mr. Tigow stated that the bills which had been forcibly detained were drawn upon the Minerva Mining Company, and that he negociated with the defendant for a dividend of half-a-crown in the pound, to be paid him on his foregoing all claim upon them. The terms were agreed to, and the defendant signed an agreement to pay the money. He then asked to look at the bills, and on getting them into his possession he refused to give them up.—On the complainant's cross-examination, he refused to state how or from whom he got the bills. He had, he admitted, been recently a prisoner in the King's Bench prison.—Mr. HARMER said that a partner in the Minerva Mining Company had become insolvent, and was now in the King's Bench prison. From thence he sent forth bills which had been before paid, and which were understood to be dead, in order to force Mr. Hunt, who was a solvent partner, and a gentleman of property, to pay them over again. Such was the allegation of Mr. Hunt to Mr. Pitcairn, who was his friend, and who had proposed to rid him of the annoyance of a law-suit by compromising with the present holders, and inducing them to forego all claim upon them on a consideration of 2*s.* 6*d.* in the pound being given. The complainant no sooner got the agreement into his possession than he declared his intention not to give up the bills. Mr. Pitcairn, who had them in his hands, refused to part with them, and thought himself fully justified in detaining them from a person who would give no account of how he got them.—The complainant said he only agreed to forego his claim upon the bills, but he never intended to give up possession of them. He was ready to return the agreement.—Mr. HARMER. So then, other persons were to have them, and get money upon them in the same manner?—The LORD MAYOR said, that as the complainant had not legally given up possession of the bills, they still belonged to him and ought to be restored. No improper motive could, however, be imputed to Mr. Pitcairn, who had acted in the best manner for the protection of Mr. Hunt.—Mr. Pitcairn said, he readily yielded to his Lordship's opinion, and he gave up the bills to the complainant, who put them into his pocket, and was about to leave the office, when Mr. Harmer reminded him that he had forgotten to give up the agreement.—The complainant only replied, that he had not got it about him.---The LORD MAYOR. How can you, Sir, tell such a falsehood? But this minute you said you were ready to give it up. It must be produced before you quit the room.---The complainant then produced it, and gave it up. He apologised by saying he was not aware he had it.

ACCIDENTS, OFFENCES, &c.

At eight o'clock on Monday evening, an Inquisition was begun at the Triumphant Chariot, Pembroke-mews, Grosvenor-place, before Thomas Higgs, Esq. Deputy Coroner for Westminster, on the body of Mr. Samuel White, aged 46, who died that morning in St. George's Hospital, where he (the deceased) had been conveyed with his throat cut, and otherwise dreadfully beaten.

The Jury returned the following verdict:—"That the deceased cut his throat in a state of mental derangement, of which wound he died;" and the Jury strongly reprobated the inhuman and barbarous conduct of William White, for cruelly beating the deceased, who was his brother.

Tuesday night an Inquest was held at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, on the body of Johanna Rourke, aged 30, who was supposed to have been murdered by her husband, who is at present in custody on the charge of murder.—Ann Herring, of No. 2, New-street, North-square, deposed that the deceased lived in the same house with her husband. On Monday fortnight, witness was alarmed by screams which proceeded from the first floor, where the deceased lodged. Witness went down stairs, and heard high words and blows between her and her husband. Witness begged of him to desist from beating her, but he would not, and eventually he forced the deceased out of the room; she was dreadfully beaten about the head and face; she complained to witness of being very ill, and went to a doctor; she showed witness her legs and arms, which were covered with bruises; the deceased ultimately went into the hospital, where she died. Several witnesses corroborated this testimony.

Mr. Pierre, surgeon, attended the deceased, who was afflicted with a dangerous disease called the "land scurvy," which caused her death, and certainly not the blows.

Mr. Wormal, the surgeon, corroborated the above witness, and the Jury returned a verdict of—"Died by the visitation of God."

Tuesday morning, during the absence of the mother, a child, two years of age, the daughter of one Marshall, a shoemaker, Crown-court, St. Catharine's, fell out of a two-pair of stairs window, and was killed on the spot.

On Tuesday evening a gentleman dismounted from his horse in Portland-place, and gave it to be held by a boy on the spot. The gentleman had scarcely entered the house, when a boy mounted the horse, and the animal ran off at full speed. The boy held by the mane until he reached the corner of All Soul's Church, when he lost his seat, and his foot catching in the stirrup, he was dragged a considerable distance, his head striking the ground. A gentleman named Valence, observing the perilous situation of the boy, ran from the pavement and caught the horse by the bridle; but, while extricating the boy, the animal struck the little fellow with his fore-foot on the head, which dreadfully lacerated it. He was taken to the Middlesex Hospital, under the protection of Mr. Valence, where every attention was paid to him, but little hopes are entertained of his recovery.

William White, slater, in the employ of Mr. Johnson of Paradise-street, Mary-la-bonne, fell from the scaffold of one of the new houses now building in Dorset-square, and being struck by one of the projecting poles in his fall, came to the ground nearly doubled. He was immediately conveyed to the Mary-la-bonne Infirmary.

Yesterday week, about half-past ten o'clock in the evening, a destructive fire broke out in one of the projecting wings of the east front of Messrs. Gott and Sons' mills at Armley. The whole of the building in which it originated was burnt to the ground, together with almost all the valuable machinery and other property which it contained. The damage sustained by its destruction is estimated at about 5,000*l.*

Wednesday morning, about three o'clock, the inhabitants of Old-street and its vicinity were alarmed by the discovery of a destructive fire, which broke out on the premises of Mr. Robey, an apothecary, situated at the corner of Anchor-court, Old-street. The fire, it appears, originated in the lower part of the house, and had communicated to the first floor when it was discovered by a watchman, who gave the alarm. The only persons in the house at the time were Mr. Robey, his sister, and an infant child, Mrs. Robey being from home. A favourite spaniel dog, which slept in Mr. Robey's room, by his barking and scratching on the bed, awakened his master, who, on seeing their danger, raised his sister and the child, but the flames had by that time gained such ascendancy, that their escape below was rendered impracticable, and, accompanied by the faithful spaniel, they retreated from the upper part of the house along the parapet of the adjoining house, occupied by Mr. Phillips, carpenter, through the garret window of which they forced an entrance. Meanwhile the fire raged below with indescribable fury, and had communicated to the house of Mr. Phillips, but the exertions of two parish engines prevented the flames from spreading further on that side. Mr. Robey's house being situated at the corner of a court, without any other outlet, and inhabited chiefly by labouring people, their situation, penned up as they were, was dreadful in the extreme. About an hour after the discovery of the fire, the engines began to arrive, at which time four houses in the court were on fire; and the inmates of the court then made a breach in a wall at the end of the court, to the premises of Dr. Rice, rector of St. Luke's, through which a man with an infant in his arms, and a woman far advanced in pregnancy, escaped without any other covering than a blanket. A horse kept in a stable belonging to Mrs. Howard, a tallow-chandler in the court, being brought to the opening in the wall, which was less than four feet in height, is said by his keeper to have crept through it like a dog; and two other horses also, belonging to Mr. Blake, a farrier in the court, were taken through the opening. The flames threatening the premises of Mr. Boulton, a cooper, and of Mr. Davis, a distiller, the horses from their stables were also removed; but the firemen having obtained admission to the rear of the court, and being plentifully supplied with water, the progress of the devouring element was effectually checked. About half-past five o'clock the walls of Mr. Robey's house fell with a dreadful crash, and Vann, the police officer, who had been actively engaged, and other persons, narrowly escaped being buried in the ruins. Not a vestige of property from Mr. Robey's or the other four houses was saved; but we are happy to add that no loss of life was sustained.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

RECOGNITION OF HAYTIAN INDEPENDENCE.

An Extraordinary Express from Paris has just brought us the Etoile of Friday, filled with gratifying intelligence. First, a telegraphic Dispatch from Brest and one from Calais, announce that the proposals made by the French Government to St. Domingo have been accepted, and that the independence of Hayti is recognized. The terms are of course stated very briefly, from the nature of the communication, but they appear liberal and just.

"Calais, Aug. 11, Ten o'Clock, P.M.

"The following has been received here:

"TELEGRAPHIC DISPATCH, DATED PARIS, AUG. 11.

"An arrangement has been concluded with St. Domingo, which will pay an indemnity of one hundred and fifty millions to the ancient French proprietors.

"The French flag, and the merchandize which shall be imported under that flag, shall pay only half the duties. On receipt of this dispatch, the French vessels which sail for St. Domingo, must be sent under the white flag."

EFFECT OF JEALOUSY.—An inquest was held on Monday night, and again by adjournment on Tuesday night, before Mr. Higgs, Coroner for Westminster, at the Triumphant Chariot, Pembroke-mews, Grosvenor-place, Pimlico, on the body of Samuel White, a labouring man, who resided in Haystack-lane, Paddington, who cut his throat in a fit of jealousy. Many exaggerated and unfounded reports were in circulation respecting the death of this individual. The following facts were proved in evidence:—The deceased was near 50 years of age, and had lived with his wife 21 years; he was a drunken, passionate, and jealous husband, and, in his fits of jealousy, he had repeatedly beaten his wife so dreadfully that she had left him; but she had gone to live with him again on his expressing his sorrow for his conduct. A short time ago, a brother of the deceased returned from sea, where he had been 25 years. Recently the deceased had taken it into his head, when he was intoxicated, that his brother and his wife carried on a criminal intercourse, and on Sunday week, about one o'clock in the morning, the deceased struck his wife a violent blow on the head, and the two brothers went into the garden and fought. The deceased received several blows with a broomstick, and the neighbourhood was alarmed by the cries of "Murder!" It was stated that the wife put her head out of the window, and exclaimed, "Give it him, it serves him right." This language was addressed by her to the brother. On the following day the brother was charged by the deceased, at Mary-la-bonne Office, with an assault, and after the case was heard, the deceased forgave his brother, and the warrant against him was discharged. On Wednesday se'nnight the deceased went to his wife who had left his house, and entreated her to return and live with him. She said she would not, for he had blasted her character by charging her with being criminal with his brother, and he made an oath he would kill himself if she did not. On the same morning the deceased returned home in a dejected state, and shortly after he was found lying on the steps of his door, having his throat cut with a razor, which lay on the ground by his side.

Mr. S. C. Griffith, of Connaught-terrace, surgeon, stated, he was called in to attend the deceased on Wednesday morning, and found him lying on the sill of the door where he resided, in Haystack-lane, Edgware-road; and a person was kneeling down, holding his hand to the wound. There was a vessel bleeding, which he secured, and applied a bandage, and then had the deceased conveyed to the Hospital. He was insensible all the time. A razor was lying on the ground bloody.

Mr. Henry Pitman, house-surgeon of St. George's Hospital, sworn, stated that the deceased was brought into the Hospital on Wednesday se'nnight, with a wound in the throat between two and three inches in length, and several bruises on the body; he regularly attended him till one o'clock on Monday morning, when he died; the cause of his death was the inflammation in the throat, which extended to the lungs; he could only speak in a low tone of voice, and said he had been beaten by his brother; the bruises were on the chest, head, loins, arms, and other parts; the blows did not appear to be inflicted with a sharp instrument, but might be done with the fist.

In addition to the above evidence, several persons came forward, who stated that the deceased had repeatedly charged different persons, who had defended his wife from his violence, with being criminal with her.

The wife, a very decent woman, was examined, and she satisfied the jury that the reports against her reputation were unfounded.

Mr. Pittman was re-examined, and deposed, that the blows did not cause the death of the deceased, but the wound in the throat.

The Jury returned a verdict—"That the deceased died from a wound which he inflicted in his throat, when in a state of insanity."

The brother, who has been for several days in custody, will therefore be liberated.

CURIOUS ACCIDENT.—Tuesday a comic accident happened in Blackfriars-road. A well-dressed female going from Rowland Hill's Chapel to the New Cut, was knocked down by a gentleman riding at a sharp pace, and supposed to be dangerously hurt. The passengers crowded round the unlucky horseman, who inquired whether the lady was much injured? "Oh yes," said one of the mob, "you have knocked out her teeth. She is in a bad way." "For God's sake!" exclaimed the gentleman, "take her to a surgeon." Upon examination, the lady did not appear much distressed. There was no appearance of blood. Her teeth had certainly been knocked out, and were hanging on her face, but they were artificial teeth. Her fall had broken the silver wire by which those ornaments were fastened, and the appearance of one row out of the proper position occasioned the alarm felt by the passengers. Fortunately for the fair one she was more frightened by the awkward occurrence than injured by coming in contact with the horse; and after a female friend had assisted her to make good the derangement of her dentes canines, and the other false tenants of her muchoire, she was able to walk home and dispense with the attendance of a medical man. She required the dentist only.

Olab Phelair, the celebrated Persian poet, died lately at Ispahan, aged 96. He was the Voltaire of Persia, and has left behind him a very considerable number of manuscripts on mathematics, astronomy, politics, and literature. The Sophi had just granted him a considerable pension from the Treasury; he was very expensive in his living, his principal food being the flesh of larks, which were brought from Europe, and he went very rarely on foot. He has left no children.

THE AGE.

"THE VERY AGE AND BODY OF THE TIME."

No. 15. SUNDAY, AUGUST 21, 1825. Price 7*d.*

FIRST TIME IN THIS COUNTRY.—FRENCH CORONATION FIRE-WORKS.

TO MORROW EVENING, MONDAY, 22d AUGUST, By Monsieur Ruggieri, Artist to Charles the Tenth. GRAND NAVAL GALA. Under the Especial Patronage of his Majesty. ROYAL GARDENS, VAUXHALL. The Duke of Clarence, Admiral of the Fleet, and the Glorious British Navy. The Proprietors beg respectfully to state that they have expressly engaged Monsieur Ruggieri, Artificer Brevete to the King of France, and the Gardens at Tivoli, to make the same extraordinary display as exhibited by him at the late French Coronation, in Honour of this highly National and Popular Celebration, and to inform the Illustrious and Distinguished Characters who intend to visit the Royal Gardens TO-MORROW EVENING, that they intend to offer one of the most splendid and appropriate NAVAL GALAS ever seen in this country.

The Gardens will be entirely ornamented with Transparencies, Trophies, Laurels, Banners, Devices, &c., and the Colours of the various Nations tastefully displayed.

The Concert, Vocal and Instrumental, will consist of Original Compositions, and celebrated Naval Songs; the Military and other Bands greatly augmented for the occasion; an interesting Ballet expressly produced; with various other appropriate Amusements.

The Illuminations, consisting of Fifty Thousand variegated Lamps, will be displayed in innumerable Devices, illustrative of the Naval Prowess of England.

Particulars in the Bills of the Day.

Doors open at Seven o'Clock.—Admission, 3s. 6d.—No Orders admitted.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.—On Monday, (by particular desire) Sweethearts and Wives, with Frighten'd to Death, and Midas. On Tuesday—Quite Correct, with Midas, and the Critick, or a Tragedy Rehears'd. On Wednesday, (never acted) a Comedy called ROSES AND THORNS; or Two Houses under One Roof.

Principal Characters by Mr. Liston, Mr. Harley, Mr. W. Farren, Mr. Vining, Mr. Williams, Mr. Pope, Mr. West, Mr. Raymond, Mrs. Gibbs, Mrs. T. Hill, and Miss P. Glover.

The Burletta of Midas will be repeated every Evening, until further notice.

ENGLISH OPERA HOUSE.—A new and considerably enlarged Orchestra has been constructed, in which a select and powerful Band, of unprecedented extent, will be led by Mr. Wagstaff.

On Monday, and during the week, TARRARE, THE TARTAR CHIEF; with Presumption, or the Fate of Frankenstein.

On Tuesday—The New Opera, with Belles without Beaux, and the Rival Soldiers.

On Wednesday—The New Opera, with Bachelors' Wives.

On Thursday—The New Opera, with the Promissory Note.

On Friday—The New Opera, with the Vampire.

Tarrare, Mr. Braham. Ninetta, Miss Paton.

SIGHTS IN ENGLAND, AND FETES IN FRANCE.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Two Horse Pieces the same Evening, never known before.—On Monday, August 22, and during the week, for the first time, THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO, performed at Half Price, to afford full latitude in the production of a new and costly Spectacle, called SIGHTS IN ENGLAND AND FETES IN FRANCE; offering as its principal feature the CORONATION OF CHARLES X. King of France, with the unequalled addition of the Horses. The whole of the company will be embodied in this spectacle, assisted by upwards of 200 auxiliaries. Magnificent Horse and Foot Processions, King's Carriage drawn by Eight Horses, &c.—In Part Three, a characteristic Military Ballet, composed by Mr. Dnerow, in which he will represent the character of Jean Henri, a noted Tambour Major.

In the Circle, the first appearance in London of Mr. Woolford.

Places for the Boxes to be taken at the Box Office from Ten to Four.

Boxes, 4s.—Pit, 2s.—Gal. 1s.——Doors open at Half past Five.

 To commence with Sights in England, and to conclude with the Battle of Waterloo.

ROYAL COBURG THEATRE.—On Monday, Aug. 22, will be performed (1st time) a Grand Melo Drama of interest, in Three Acts, founded on historical facts, called ANNE BULLEYN, The Second Queen of King Henry the Eighth. Principal characters by Messrs. Bengough, Cobham, Kemble, and Rowbotham; Mrs. Bretton and Miss Watson.—After which, 19th time, the BURNING OF THE KENT EAST INDIAMAN; to which will be added, 7th time, the LIVING SKELETON!—The whole to conclude with a new scrious Pantomime, called the ASSASSIN OF SMOLENSKO, or the Beggar Robber.

NEW SURREY THEATRE.—Monday, August 22, and during the Week, (by permission of the Author, Mr. T. Dibden) KOULI KHAN, EMPEROR OF CHINA. In the piece a Ballet.—The admired Skipping-rope Hornpipe by Mrs. Serle.—THE RIVAL TRICKSTERS.—A new song, called The Living Skeleton. An Irish song, by Mr. Bryant. THE ISLAND APE; in which Mons. Gonffe will exhibit his extraordinary tricks, leaps, ballancings, &c. which have excited the most insatiable curiosity in the fashionable world; to describe them, were it possible, would exceed the limits of an advertisement. He concludes by running round the fronts of the Boxes and Gallery, never attempted but by himself.—First time, a new melo-drama, in three acts, (written by Mr. C. Dibden,) called MAURICE, or the MYSTERIOUS HOST.

In the Island Ape, Mons. Gonffe is as much the mania of the fashion in London, as Masurier, the Brazilian Ape, is in Paris. The New Surrey Theatre is positively crammed every night, such is the avidity of the public to see this extraordinary performer; and, which is rarely the case when uncommon expectation is excited, he surpasses in representation every previous notion that can be formed of his astonishing talents. There is scarcely a name of rank which is not to be seen in the Surrey Theatre Box-book.

EXHIBITION (at No. 8, Soho-square, near the Bazaar) OF MODELS OF THE MOST INTERESTING OBJECTS IN SWITZERLAND, upon a very large scale, by which the Artist has been enabled to combine the most faithful representations of the natural grandeur of Swiss scenery, with the most perfect accuracy of detail. That of Mont Blanc, including the Valley of Chamouni, 14 feet by 8, is eminently calculated to give a correct idea of this magnificent object, with its snowy mantles, its extensive glaciers, and the numerous needles by which it is surrounded. Also a Model, upon a large scale, of that wonderful work of Buonaparte's, the Road over Simplon into Italy. One of Mont Righi, with the Valley Goldau, represented in the state of devastation caused by the falling of the Rosberg, in 1806. One of the Passage of St. Gothard and the Devil's Bridge. Also the interesting Passage of Mont Ceifis. Models of the Cities of Geneva and Edinburgh; and various others, all executed with due regard to accuracy and effect.—Admission 1s.—Small Models of the above made for Sale.

ANATOMIE VIVANTE, OR LIVING SKELETON,—In consequence of the immense concourse of persons who have visited the Anatomie, and the great fatigue the repeated exhibitions have occasioned him, it has become necessary that some future time be allowed him between each exhibition.

He will be on view, daily, at the Chinese Saloon, 94, Pall-mall, at the following hours, previsely, viz.: 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 o'clock.—Aug. 14th, 1825.

GREAT ROOM, SPRING GARDENS.—NEW ADDITIONS.

THE TOMB OF BUONAPARTE, at ST. HELENA, with the whole Ceremony observed at his Interment, displaying upwards of 2000 Figures, is now added to the New PERISTREPHIC PANORAMA, Great Room, Spring Gardens; representing all the interesting events that occurred to that Individual, from his defeat at Waterloo till his death; Thirteen views of St. Helena; the Battles of Genappe, Trafalgar, &c. The Figures and Ships of War being on the largest scale, and accompanied by a full military band, to give a complete sensation of reality.

THE EGYPTIAN TOMB, discovered by the late Mr. BELZONI.—The Exhibition of the Egyptian Tomb, with a variety of Models of Temples and Pyramids explored by the late Traveller, is now open at 28, Leicester-square. Admittance, 2s.—Children, 1s.

Pins of every description, Needles, bead, betweens, blunts, book-binders, carpet, chenille, cot toning, cross-stitch, embroidering, glovers, groundowns, harness, lambing, loping, mattress, netting, packing, quilting, rug, saddlers, sail, sharps, surgeon, tambour, veining yarn, &c. Fish-hooks, lines, and tackle; gilt, plated, black, and white Hooks and Eyes. Thimbles, gold, silver, metal, white steel, &c. steel thimbles lined with silver; bodkins, knitting-pins, meshes, cap-pios, quilters, &c. Improved travelling and dressing-cases, with complete fittings; work-boxes, reticules, and needle-cases in tortoise-shell, Morocco and Russia leather, &c.; cutlery; scissors, penknives, razors, tweezers, &c.; combs, fancy, gilt, and steel goods; beads, bracelets, buckles, centres, clasps, cork-screws, ear-rings, elastic girdles, neck-chains, necklaces, purse-snaps, reticules, slides, tassels, watch-chains, ditto guards, and every other article in the fancy line; gilt, silvered, and coloured lustre pins, hair pins, needle and brass points; brass, copper, and elastic wire.—A liberal allowance to merchants, captains, and others.

Just published by Lavenu and Co. 24, Edward's-street, Manchester-square, and W. Card, 28, Quadrant, Regent-street,

"TO THEE, MOST HOLY AND MOST HIGH," a Sacred Ode, suggested on reading the truly constitutional Speech of His Royal Highness, Frederick Duke of York, in the House of Lords, April 25, 1825. The Poetry, a versification of the 75th Psalm, arranged for the Piano-Forte and Voice, harmonized also for a choir of four Voices, respectfully inscribed to Charles James, Lord Bishop of Chester, by R. Taylor, price 2s.—"I have been brought up from my early years in these principles, and from the time I began to reason for myself I have entertained them from conviction, and in every situation in which I may be placed, I will maintain them."—Vide Speech.

Just published, with Engravings,

PHRENOLOGY, by the Author of the celebrated Comic Songs, "Oh, 'tis Love—Bubbles—The Bazaar—Home, dear Home, a Parody—and the Hussars."

 The title pages of these Curious Songs having been imitated, the Public will avoid the imposition by observing that the name and address of the Publisher on every copy should be T. Holloway, No. 5, Hanway-street, Oxford-st.

NEW MUSIC.—Just published.—STUDY FOR THE PIANO FORTE; consisting of a daily practice on the scales in all the major and minor keys, prefaced and interspersed with various observations calculated to fix the system of fingering in the memory, and to facilitate reading at sight; with detached examples, and a table of the major keys with their minors and relative minors. The whole intended as a preliminary and indispensible step to the practise of more difficult and extensive studies. Composed and arranged by F. J. Krose, price 4s.—Published by Goulding, D'Almaine, and Co. No. 20, Soho-square.

NEW MUSIC.—TARRARE, now performing at the Theatre Royal English Opera House, under the direction of W. Hawes; published by WELSH and HAWES, Argyll Rooms, 246, Regent-street.—"Revenge, he cried," a celebrated song, sung by Mr. Braham, with distinguished applause, three times every evening, arranged by Wm. Hawes, 2s.—"Silly Woman, ah why cherish," a bravura, sung by Miss Paton, 2s. both in the above Opera.—"There's a tear that falls," an admired ballad, sung by Miss Stephens in the Opera of Broken Promises, 1s. 6d.—A Grand March for the Pianoforte, by J. N. Hummell, 4s.—Mayseder's Variations on Rossini's air, "Serenai vaghi rai," arranged for two performers on one Pianoforte, by Moscheles, 6s.; the same Variations may be had for one performer on the Pianoforte, 4s. An assortment of Second-hand Pianofortes and Harps on Sale or Hire.

A regular Trader.—To succeed the Prince Regent,

FOR VAN DIEMEN'S LAND and NEW SOUTH WALES, the fine coppered Ship, PRINCESS CHARLOTTE, burthen 400 Tons, JOSEPH BLYTHE, Commander; will load in the London Dock. Has very superior accommodations for Cabin and Steerage Passengers. For Freight or Passage apply to Buckles, Bagster, and Buchanan, 33, Mark-lane.

ALL BAD WRITING IMPROVED, at the Royal Systematic and Short-Hand Academy, 104, High Holborn. Whatever may be the age of the Pupil, or his defects; whether the stiffness, formality, and tedious execution, often arising from bad habits in schools, or an effeminate, scrawling, illegible style—in either case, Mr. Lewis will engage positively to remove all defects in a few short and easy Lessons, and enable the Pupil to write a quick and beautiful hand, fit for the Tradesman or the Gentleman.—Short Hand taught in Six Lessons.

NOTWITHSTANDING the great advance in NUTMEGS, THOMAS HOLLINS, of the Old Established Tea and Noted Spice Warehouse, No. 22, Saint Martin's Court, is determined to supply Families at the old VERY LOW PRICES, viz. 8s. per pound; and which is considerably under the present Wholesale Prices. Also very Superior Teas in Original China Packages.

SODA WATER.—WM. CLARK, No. 21, MAIDEN-LANE, Covent Garden, Soda Water Manufacturer to the Royal Family, most respectfully informs the Nobility, Gentry, and the public in general, that he manufactures the above article of a very superior quality: it is warranted to be free from all metallic impregnations in consequence of its being prepared in glass machinery.—N. B. Superior Jamaica Ginger Beer, and Fine Sparkling Lemonade, (in glass bottles.) They are warranted to keep good to twelve months.

THE BRITISH SPECIFIC, for re-producing and promoting the GROWTH of HAIR.—The principle of its operation is to cool and contract the pores which are opened by a redundancy of heat, occasioning a relaxation of the roots, and render them incapable of retaining the hair; to counteract which nothing is better calculated than the British Specific, as, from its invigorating and oleaginous properties, it almost immediately arrests the falling off, and affords such effectual nourishment to the roots, that persons giving it a fair trial may assure themselves of its speedily restoring it, even where it has become completely bald, however long it may have been so, and, if grey, gradually to restore it to its natural colour. The superiority of this preparation (the invention of a medical man) derives additional recommendation from its being, unlike other compositions for the hair, so extremely clean and agreeable that its application is a real pleasure, and is only requisite to be generally known, to receive the preference of every article in use for similar purposes. To be had only of D. Peden, 15, Burlington Arcade, Piccadilly, in bottles 6s. each, or cases of four bottles for 1*l.* forwarded tu order, on receiving the amount, post-paid.

GENUINE EAU DE COLOGNE.—Just received direct from Messrs. R. F. and M. Farina, of Cologne, a fresh supply of this celebrated article, of the finest quality, and to be had of J. C. Hose, late Kinnard, 309, High Holborn, two doors from Chancery-lane.

Solicitors—Messrs. Lowdham, Parke, and Freeth.

In consequence of the numerous applications for Shares, the Directors turned their attention to a more extensive employment of the capital of the Company than was at first contemplated; and independently of the wide field which presents itself for a most profitable sale of the article of every description to the inhabitants of South America, the Directors have made a most advantageous and beneficial arrangement for the purchase of one of the oldest and best established concerns in the trade, from the 30th of June last, the capital of which, amounting to a considerable sum, is to remain with the Company for a certain period, and, together with the stock, is to be paid for by the Company by easy instalments to the sellers, who have agreed to take such security as the first legal advice at the Bar shall think right between the parties, but without any personal liability on the part of the Subscribers or Members of the Company, thus putting the Company in possession of an immediate source of profit, and giving them all the advantages arising from the possession of a long established business and the employment of an extensive capital, without any personal liability on the part of the Subscribers to those furnishing them with such immediate and extensive means of carrying on their operations. An advance has also taken place of Seventeen and a Half per cent. on Paper since the Company was first in agitation, occasioned by the extensive and increasing demand; at the same time that the raw material remains at the price it did prior to this advance.

Under these circumstances the Directors consider they would not be doing justice to the beneficial arrangements they have made, if they did not extend their means of carrying on the same by an increase of capital, from 250,000*l.* to 500,000*l.* in Shares of 50*l.* each, thus giving the Public the opportunity of partaking of the advantages to be derived from their exertions; they have therefore thought it right to make these circumstances known, and to notify to the Public that applications (post-paid) for Shares will be received at their Bankers, Messrs. Everett, Walker, Maltby, Ellis, and Co. Mansion-house-street; or the Solicitors, Messrs. Lowdham, Parke, and Freeth, 63, Lincoln's Inn Fields, London, until the 29th instant

Only such amount will be called for as the Directors may consider from time to time advantageous for carrying on the objects of the concern.

BRADBERRY'S PATENT SPECTACLES, upon unerring principles, to preserve the sight to extreme old age. It is necessary to caution the public against the use of improper Spectacles, as their effects prove injurious, instead of beneficial to the eye. The unremitted and anxious study Mr. Bradberry has paid to his glasses for upwards of 30 years, has called forth the most distinguished approbation of their merit from the medical profession, and from many thousands of persons of the highest rank and respectability.—To be had only at 38, Holles-street, the first door out of Oxford-street, next to the large Fruiterer's at the corner, facing Hanover-square, and at no other place in the United Kingdom. Orders from the country immediately attended to. Removed from 332, Oxford-street.

BURGESS' ESSENCE OF ANCHOVIES, Warehouse, 107, STRAND, Corner of Savoy Steps, London.—JOHN BURGESS and SON, being apprised of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the Original, to observe the Name and Address correspond with the above;—the general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection, J. B. and Son submit the following caution:—Some are in appearance at first sight "Burgess' Essence of Anchovies;"—others "Burgis's," and many more without address.—JOHN BURGESS and SON having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the labels previous to purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.—Burgess' New Sauce for general purposes, having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient sauce—will keep good in all climates.—Warehouse, No. 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy Steps.—The Original Fish Sauce Warehouse.

ROTTERDAM ANNUAL FAIR.

THE Public are respectfully informed this great Annual Fair commenced on Sunday the 14th of August, and will continue for three weeks. The Steam Packets, the KING OF THE NETHERLANDS, Captain J. Slater,

QUEEN OF THE NETHERLANDS, Captain J. Pearson, depart regularly every Wednesday and Saturday, from off the Custom-house, at Eight o'clock in the Morning, for the conveyance of Passengers, Carriages, and Luggage, to Rotterdam. For further particulars, application to be made to the General Packet Office, 358, Straud; and for securing beds, to N. W. Symonds, Agent, Crescent, Minories.

AMPLE COMMAND OF MONEY.

WHILE one hears this exclamation on every side, Thousands feel the pressure of want, and deride the mockery of the cry. It may be, that this plentiful command exists among a few leading capitalists; and that the city men who draw their resources from their ink, may boast of their facilities to create artificial riches; but there is no real and general plenty—and the truth becomes manifest enough by the difficulty every person finds in borrowing money when he wants it, unless he has some Government or Mercantile Security to offer, or a landed estate of twice the value of the sum he would wish to raise. The writer, however, professes to procure Loans upon every description of convertible security, upon terms fairly apportioned to the risk which may be incurred, of delay or loss, as to the repayment; and he may be communicated with personally, or by letter, post-paid, addressed to Mr. E. H. G. (letter A.) No. 8, Carlton Chambers, Regent-street, Pall-mall; but he will only treat with people of consideration, and not upon trifling subjects, or about loans of less than 100*l.*—Attendance from eleven till six only.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

BRIDGEWATER, AUGUST 12.

CIVIL SIDE.—Before Mr. Justice GASELEE.

EVANS v. BULPIN.

The above case of breach of promise of marriage was expected to have come on in this Court yesterday, but to the great disappointment of the female part of the assembly, it was agreed to be referred for the second time.

BREACH OF PROMISE OF MARRIAGE.

WILLMONT v. BRUFORD.

The defendant pleaded the general issue.

Mr. Sergeant PELL (with whom was Mr. Sergeant WILDE) stated the case to the Jury.

Witnesses were called for the plaintiff, who proved the defendant to have courted the plaintiff.

Mr. MEREWETHER addressed the Jury for the defendant.

Mr. Justice GASELEE charged the Jury, who retired, and after a consultation of nearly two hours returned a verdict for the plaintiff—damages 550*l*.

CROWN SIDE.—Before Mr. Justice LITTLEDALE.

EXTRAORDINARY CASE OF SHEEP-STEALING.

This was the case of the Brooks's, (father and son,) which was particularly alluded to in Mr. Justice Littledale's charge to the Grand Jury on Tuesday, and appeared to excite considerable interest, from the very peculiar circumstances of the case, and the rank of the prisoners, who were farmers in a respectable situation in life. The prosecutor, who is an extensive farmer, had for some years lost large numbers of sheep from time to time, without being able to discover by whom the depredations were committed. In last April 33 sheep were stolen out of a flock of 120, and the discovery of 25 of the missing sheep in the prisoner's grounds led to suspicions being attached to them, and finally to the present proceedings. The prosecutor lives at Compton Martin, and is the holder of three farms, and the owner of seven or eight hundred sheep, and the prisoners' residence was at Cheddar, where the elder Brooks rented a farm of about 60*l*. a-year. Both the orisoners are respectable, well-looking men, particularly the younger Brooks.

The prisoners on their arraigument pleaded Not Guilty.

Walter Brooks and Robert Brooks (the son) were then put to the bar, indicted for feloniously stealing, on the 1st of June, at Cheddar, in this county, two sheep of the value of 20*s*. each, the property of Edward Cole. In a second count of the indictment, the sheep were laid as the property of Henry Baron Mendep; and in a third count as that of Henry Welbore Ellis, Viscount Clifden.

The following witnesses were called in support of the prosecution:

Edward Cole.—I live at Compton Martin, about five or six miles from Cheddar, which is a parish in this county. I am an extensive farmer, and keep 700 or 800 sheep. I know the prisoners at the bar, who are father and son, and both farmers residing at Cheddar. I believe they rent a farm of about 46*l*. a-year, and keep about 140 sheep, which they depasture on the right hand side as you go up Cheddar Cliffs. I have known Walter Brooks 30 years. I formerly resided in Cheddar parish, which I left for Compton Martin last Lady-day. The sheep-mark formerly used by Brooks was T. W. in pitch, on both sides, and two strokes of ruddle (red ochre) across the shoulder. I sold Walter Brooks six sheep in 1822; they were five full-mouthed ewes, and one two-toothed, coming two years old. They were marked E. C. on the off-horn, the top of the near ear was cut off, and a hole in the middle of the off-ear, and they were redded on the pole. There was also an E. in the circle, on both sides, which was the usual mark of all my sheep. About two or three years ago, and after I sold him the six sheep, Brooks made an alteration in the marks of his sheep. Prisoner redded his sheep in the pole, like mine; and on the sides he stamped B. in a circle, with a fleur de lis at top. This was put on both sides, about the middle, like mine. It was made as nearly like mine as possible. I had an enclosure on the left side of Cheddar Cliffs, into which, on the 7th of April last, I turned out 120 sheep. About the 9th or 10th of June I took them home, and on going to wash them missed 33 of the number. In consequence of some information I received, I went to a field of W. Brooks, between Cheddar and Draycot. This was on the 20th June. I found six sheep of mine in the field. I went to a Magistrate, procured a warrant, and at seven or eight o'clock next morning I went to the field with James Hunt, a constable, and my brother. We took the six sheep to Cheddar. They were redded in the pole, and marked with "W. B." on each horn; the near ear was cut as I left it, with the top cut off; and the off-ear was also cut off below the middle, but part of the hole was still visible. Two of the six sheep were marked with "B" in a circle on both sides; the others were as I left them, without a pitch mark on either side, as we had not so marked all the 120 sheep. Some of the 120 sheep which had been turned out were born as far back as 1822, but none so far as 1820. We took the six sheep to the inn at Cheddar. Previous to this, and before I got to the field, I took Robert Brooks in Starr's slate (sheep pasture). Before I took him I spoke to him, and said, "You're among the sheep." He said "Yes." I asked if he had seen any of my sheep there? He answered "He had not." I then dismounted from my horse, and took the prisoner. He asked "What I took him for?" I replied "I only take you for a small child;" he said, "If that's all, it's very well." I had not taken him forty yards before he said, "I won't go any further with you; d—n you, you are taking me for sheep stealing." I said, "Brooks, I have not said any such thing to you." James Cole then met us, and we took him to the George, at Cheddar—prisoner repeating to every body he met that we had taken him for sheep stealing. I delivered prisoner over to James Hunt, the constable. I then went and took the sheep. The father, Walter Brooks, was afterwards taken, and the prisoners were brought together, and the warrant read to them. In about an hour we all left the inn together, and I proceeded to Captain Waldegrave's, the Magistrate's house, which is about six or seven miles from Cheddar. The prisoners were examined. About a week ago I showed the six sheep to a person named William Ham. There was only one lamb in the field along with the six sheep. The lamb was the prisoner's. Two of the ewes were four-toothed. (two years old coming three,) and the four others were six-toothed (three years old). The two four-toothed sheep were marked with a B in a circle on the sides; but the remaining four were not so marked. All the six sheep were showed to Ham, and he touched one of the two marked on the side, and I sawed off the horn of that sheep which he now has.

Several witnesses were afterwards examined to confirm the charge.

Mr. Justice LITTLEDALE charged the Jury, who returned a verdict of Guilty against both the prisoners, but recommended them to mercy, on the ground of their previous good character, in which recommendation the Jury were joined by the prosecutor.

EXECUTION.

YORK, Saturday.—This morning the awful sentence of the law was carried into execution with respect to Isaac Charlesworth, convicted at the Assizes, on the 21st ult. of highway robbery.

About eleven o'clock a few persons began to collect in front of the drop, which was erected on the side of the castle facing St. George's Fields:—these were increased in number by the arrival of others, who continued to collect at the spot, till twelve, the hour appointed for his execution. Of those who were present, a large proportion were females.

At twelve o'clock, the Under Sheriff, Mr. George Bulmer, accompanied by the keeper of the castle, Mr. Shepherd, proceeded to the condemned cell. When they arrived, they found Charlesworth praying fervently, calling upon the Lord Jesus to forgive his sins. He was led forth, as soon as the cord was fastened to his arms, and walked to the scaffold with a firm step. He was a fine young man about twenty-two years of age. His countenance had rather a wild cast; and he closed his eyes as soon as he mounted the scaffold. The reverend Chaplain read the admirable service appointed by the church on these occasions, most impressively; as soon as he had pronounced the blessing, the hangman performed his melancholy office; and in two minutes the bolt was withdrawn, and life was extinct. Before the rope was put about his neck, Charlesworth expressed a wish to address the crowd, but he abandoned his design.

Johnson was charged with a rape on Mary Finch, a dwarf, residing at Leeds. Finch swore positively to the crime having been perpetrated in all its particulars, and the Jury found him guilty. In passing sentence Mr. Baron HULLOCK did not hold out to him the smallest hopes of mercy. A day or two after the trial, however, some circumstances transpired which gave a new aspect to the case. The prosecutrix had alleged, that on the night in question she had been a long time at a show, where a giant and a dwarf were exhibited, and after Leeds fair this show was removed to York. The proprietor (who left Leeds the morning after the offence was committed) heard some rumour of the circumstance, but knew nothing of its serious nature till after the trial. He corroborated the statement of the girl as to her having been at his show on the evening in question, but declared he had himself been compelled to give her in charge to a watchman, as he found it impossible to get rid of her; and the night previous she had strongly urged a person belonging to the man's show either to go home with her, or to permit her to go home with him. On the same evening a very respectable tradesman in Leeds saw her in Lower-head-row, in a state of intoxication, and several lads and others were taking great liberties with her person. These facts came to the knowledge of some gentlemen in York, on Tuesday after the trial, and on the same evening they waited upon the Under Sheriff, and communicated them to that gentleman, who listened to them with the greatest attention, and promised to put the matter in a train for inquiry.—In the meantime inquiry was set on foot in Leeds; and, in addition to the deposition of Mary Finch herself, which we subjoin, Margaret Hargreaves, of Ainsley-street Quebeck, Leeds, the witness to that deposition, made affidavit that she heard Finch say she was inclined to swear Johnson committed a rape upon her, under the idea that if she did not do so, she would be committed to Wakefield House of Correction.—Sarah Hollings, who lives in the same street, declared that she heard Mary Finch say she would rather have remained all night than have been discovered by the watchmen; and Mary Mixon, of the same place, made a similar declaration. All these persons, who appear to have known the prosecutrix, agree that both on account of her natural understanding and her moral character, her evidence ought to be received with great caution.—John Myers, of the same street, also made affidavit that he heard Mary Finch affirm and say, that Johnson was with her by her own consent; and another person declared that he had an illicit connexion with her.

A petition, founded on these documents, was drawn up, and signed by upwards of 300 inhabitants of Leeds. A gentleman of that town, Mr. Liveseye, proceeded to Durham with the petition, to which Mr, Baron Hullock paid immediate attention; and the result was, that a reprieve was sent to York. Johnson has spent a great deal of time with Charlesworth, and is of course overjoyed at having escaped so dreadful a fate. He has hitherto borne but an indifferent character, but he promises to reform.

The following is a copy of the confession of Mary Finch, who is either very depraved, or of very obtuse intellects; we would fain hope the latter:—

"I, Mary Finch, residing with Thomas Marsden, in Meadow-lane, do, on a second consideration, acknowledge that James Johnson, now in York castle, did not force and compel me against my will and consent; and therefore desire my Lord Judge to be merciful to him, and to set James Johnson at liberty. As witness my hand,

MARY FINCH, her ✕ Mark.

July 27, 1825. Witness, MARGARET HARGREAVES.

CLONMEL.

John Keily was put to the bar. The indictment ran that he did murder one W. Hackett, at Kilmolash, on the 23d April, by giving him one mortal wound of which he died.

His Lordship addressed the Jury, and observed, that if the charge of murder had been brought home to their minds, it was by circumstantial, and not by direct evidence, as no one had proved that he saw the prisoner kill the deceased. The Learned Judge then read his notes of the evidence, and after a few general observations, concluded by intimating that in many instances circumstantial evidence was more satisfactory than direct testimony, as the latter is frequently got up by perjury.

The Jury deliberated for about an hour, when the fatal verdict was handed in—Guilty.

Clerk of the Crown—Look to him, gaoler.

The prisoner on hearing his terrible doom announced, called out for "A long day!" but betrayed no emotion.

The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE told him that was impossible. He had not given a "long day" to the victim of his atrocious vengeance, nor paused before he deprived a fellow-creature of life, and brought sorrow and desolation on an unhappy family. He had caused a wife to deplore in anguish the loss of her husband, and taken away the only support which she and her poor children had in this world. His Lordship, after commenting with much force and feeling on the enormity of the crime which the prisoner had committed, conjured him not to indulge the slightest hope of mercy on this side of the grave. His days were numbered; he had but a few short hours to live, and let him avail himself of every moment that yet remained to implore forgiveness of the Almighty, whom he had so grievously offended, and before whose tribunal he must so shortly appear. His Lordship then pronounced, in the most impressive manner, the awful sentence of the law, and ordered that the prisoner should be executed on the ensuing Thursday, and his body given to the County Infirmary for dissection.

Just as the CHIEF JUSTICE had concluded, the prisoner, addressing himself to Mr Riall, said—"Well, I hope you are satisfied now; you are the man who have hung me." There was nothing whatever in the countenance of Keiley to indicate a cruel disposition; on the contrary, it had a mild and gentle expression, and it was remarked that his features were of the finest character, bespeaking at once both dignity and intelligence, though his condition in life was only that of a humble farmer. He was only 24 years of age, rather above the middle size, and his figure was perfect symmetry.

EXECUTION OF JOHN KEILY—THURSDAY.

Scarcely was this atrocious criminal removed from the bar, when he felt all the horrors of remorse in the very bitterness of his soul. He despaired of making peace with his God, yet implored the mercy of Heaven in a sort of delirious devotion. His cries were terrific—no language could describe the agony of his compunction. The Roman Catholic chaplain of the gaol immediately proceeded to his cell, and succeeded, after some time, in preparing his mind to receive the consolations of religion. During the night he prayed incessantly, and offered up his supplications with tears of penitence streaming down his cheeks. At an early hour yesterday morning he was visited by Dr. Fitzgerald, a magistrate of this town, to whom he made a full disclosure of all the facts relating to the murder.

During the whole of yesterday and last night, Keily still prayed and wept almost without interruption. This morning, at an early hour, the fatal rope which was so soon to terminate his existence attracted the public gaze, while it hung out over the drop in front of the prison, and a large body of armed police, together with a considerable military force, formed a circle immediately opposite the door, forbidding access to any person who had not the express permission of the Sheriff. About 12 o'clock the whole street was crowded with spectators. The silence of death prevailed on the occasion, and nothing was heard to disturb the awful scene, which in a few minutes more was to take place, except the wild shriek of horror which at intervals was raised by the distracted mother of the criminal. Frantic in her sorrow, she kept her eyes fixed on the rope, and tore her hair in handfulls from her head while awaiting the dreadful catastrophe which was to deprive her for ever of an only son. It was impossible to behold her without feelings of pity and pain, and many of the multitude were dissolved in tears. In the mean time, the different prisoners, tried and untried, presented a scene which it was truly pleasing to contemplate in such characters. Just at the moment that Keily was led out for execution, they all threw themselves prostrate on the earth, and poured out ejaculations to Heaven to have mercy on his soul. The solemn procession moved along through the dark passages of the prison, followed by the executioner, who wore a black crape over his face. The penitent murderer now presented himself, with his arms strongly pinioned, and his eyes up towards that dread tribunal which he trembled to approach. He varied not his prayer from the time he left his cell; but no prayer could be more suited to a man who had the blood of his fellow-man to account for. He ceased not to exclaim, while the Priest still continued to exhort, "JESUS, son of the living GOD, have mercy on my soul!" With this ejaculation on his lips he was launched into eternity, exciting no other feeling among the crowd than that of intense horror at his crime. In consequence of the rope not having been properly adjusted, he struggled a long time, and it was nearly fifteen minutes before the vital spark was entirely extinct. After hanging about forty minutes, the body was cut down and taken off in a cart to the County Infirmary, amidst the screams and lamentations of a group of mourners, who were allowed to place themselves beside it.

Col. Bagwell, Massey Dawson, Esq., and some other gentlemen of distinction, were present at the execution.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—MONDAY.

JACKSON v. BOURNE.

The LORD CHANCELLOR said, his intention in this case was to make an order, founded on these principles, namely, that under the circumstances it was necessary to order a manager; and under the circumstances of the case, regard being had not only to the interest of third persons under both the plaintiff and defendant, but regard being had to their own individual interests, the carrying of the road, and the running of the vehicles, not upon the rails (of the railway mentioned in the pleadings), but upon the space between the rails, was not what the Baddington Colliery was entitled to, and therefore an injunction would have no issue to restrain that: but the Court would not draw up the order without giving a reasonable time to see whether the parties could settle their disputes between themselves without an order of the Court.

Mr. SUGDEN intimated that there was no chance of the parties agreeing.

His LORDSHIP then said he should make his order.

Mr. AGAR trusted the order would not be to restrain his client immediately, because if the restraint issued forthwith, the effect would be to ruin his client.

His LORDSHIP, on the contrary, certainly did not mean to make an operative injunction immediately, but to give a reasonable time.

EXPARTE BUINS IN THE MATTER OF CROWTHER, A BANKRUPT.

Mr. KNIGHT and Mr. MONTAGUE closed their arguments in this matter to-day. It stood till to-day, that the commission might be produced, together with the proceedings under it; as it was expected, Mr. Lester, the solicitor, had made an alteration, something similar to the alteration he made in "Exparte Crane in the matter of Dods;" and upon their being produced, it did appear an alteration had not been made.

Mr. KNIGHT, in reply, contended, that in a case where the most gross fraud, and the most barefaced concert between the bankrupt and petitioning creditor was not attempted to be denied—where it was as clear as the sun at noon-day, that the commission was the commission of the bankrupt, and not of the petitioning creditor.

His LORDSHIP believed that Mr. Parnell, the petitioning creditor, had been duped in this business, and that there was no imputation whatever to be attached to him in a moral sense. The Court had no doubt whatever that this was the bankrupt's commission; but there were cases in which a commission was a bankrupt's commission, and yet that it could not be distinguished from the petitioning creditor's. With a view to that point, his Lordship felt it his duty to the petitioning creditor to read all the affidavits, because, as the commission would have to be superseded, his Lordship would be sorry to supersede it at Mr. Parnell's expense, without having it fully understood that nothing improper was to be attributed to the conduct of Mr. Parnell.

EXPARTE CRANE IN THE MATTER OF DODS, A BANKRUPT.

This was the matter that stood over till to-day, to give the assignees an opportunity to amend their petition, bringing the circumstances attending Mr. Lester's alteration of the commission after the great seal was fixed to it, before the Court with more particularity.

Mr. ROSE to-day stated the petition had been amended, and he had only to submit to the Court that the assignees were to be considered perfectly innocent, and entitled to all the costs they had been put to.

His LORDSHIP said, undoubtedly the assignees could not be considered criminally answerable for any thing that had been done, but civilly answerable they would have to be; that was to say, the solicitor under a bankruptcy who had the keeping of the commission, &c. was to be considered the agent of the assignees; and if that solicitor thought proper to make an alteration in the commission, they unquestionably would have to be civilly answerable. In this case, there having been a mistake in the bankrupt's name in the commission, if an application had been made to the Court for leave to alter it, the first question the Court would have asked would have been, had the commission been opened? If it had, then his Lordship would have said, it would have been impossible to give the liberty prayed, because the Court had not the power to give it. Here, however, (and this was the first instance of any thing of the kind having happened in his Lordship's experience,) the solicitor under the commission took upon himself the power to do that, which the Court had not the power to do, and which rendered the commission a commission that could not stand for one moment, therefore the Court was bound to supersede it, ordering the assignees to be civilly answerable.

Mr. HART then stated, there was a great deal in this matter that had not yet been disclosed, nor was it his wish that it should be related. Whatever might be sworn, no man could doubt that this was a concerted commission between the solicitor, the petitioning creditor, and a person of the name of Stevens—a sort of go-between—on whose affidavit the docket was struck; therefore the calamity that Mr. Rose's clients dreaded falling upon them, they had brought upon themselves with their eyes open. Under these circumstances, he (Mr. Hart) applied that his clients, Messrs. Hurd and Johnson, might be at liberty to take out a new commission against the bankrupt. The Learned Gentleman contended that his clients were entitled to this permission at his Lordship's hands, as a bonus for their activity in watching over the purity of proceedings in bankruptcy, and in bringing this abuse before the Court.

Mr. ROSE, at considerable length, opposed this application; and thought that as the Court, as far as it possibly could, exculpated his clients from blame, would give them the advantage of taking out a new commission.

His LORDSHIP inquired what had become of Mr. Lester.

Mr. HORNE said he was in great distress.

Mr. Coles (a partner in the house of Messrs. Amory and Coles, who instructed Mr. Rose,) said he had absconded.

His LORDSHIP said, he thought he had done wisely. This was a monstrous case. There were forty persons who could take out another commission; and if Messrs. Hurd and Johnson would furnish the Court with an affidavit that a Mr. Brown (for instance, who had proved a debt,) would take out a new commission, Messrs. Hurd and Johnson should be at liberty to do so for him.

Mr. HART said that affidavits should be furnished in less than four-and-twenty hours.

Mr. ROSE then said, the last part of his petition was a part, which, even if granted, he feared would not much benefit his clients, that in case the commission was superseded, the Court would order Mr. Lester to pay all the costs.

His LORDSHIP had no objection to that. The order he should make would be, that Mr. Rose's clients should pay the costs, they having liberty to recover them over against Mr. Lester; that Mr. Lester should not be at liberty to take out another commission in this matter without previous notice to the Court; and that the proceedings should be impounded, with liberty to Messrs. Hurd and Johnson to see, and to take extracts from them. Whatever his Lordship might think proper to do with respect to giving directions, as to proceedings between the Attorney-General and Mr. Lester, was another question, which he would say nothing upon at present.

READING BANK.

In the bankruptcy of the Reading Bank, application was made to the Vice-Chancellor to regulate the appointment of assignees, by removing some persons and appointing others. A young attorney, who had recently established himself in Reading, was objected to chiefly on the ground that they already had one attorney among the assignees. Some of the affidavits made by the creditors, for the purpose of giving their votes in favour of particular individuals whom they wished chosen assignees, were objected to, on the ground that they did not appear to have the description in writing which the law required, to make their evidence in support of a prosecution for perjury. The Vice-Chancellor considered the affidavits in the nature of exhibits before the Commissioners of Bankrupts, and received them only in that character.

Mr HART this day advocated an appeal against the order of the Vice-Chancellor, and contended that the affidavits were admissible in support of the application made for a more regular appointment of assignees.

SOCIETY for PROMOTING the ENLARGEMENT and BUILDING of CHURCHES and CHAPELS.

PATRON.
HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE DUKE OF YORK.
PRESIDENT.
HIS GRACE THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.

The ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of this SOCIETY, held at the Freemasons' Tavern on the 25th of May, was numerous and most respectable.

The Report showed how much good the Society has been instrumental in effecting, with means comparatively small. It has made grants in 335 cases; and, by the expenditure of 86,130*l.* has been instrumental in providing an increase of accomodation in Churches and Chapels to the amount of 113,714 sittings. Of this number 84,548 are for the use of the poor. The assistance given by the Society has all but exhausted its finances; and such is the increasing population of the country, that Church room to a much greater extent is still required. Applications are even more numerous now than they were at any former period; but unless the Public, whose aid is earnestly entreated, and on whom the Society depends (for it is at present supported entirely by voluntarily contributions) shall supply the means, assistance can be no longer afforded. The Parliamentary Grants are specifically appropriated to the building of additional Churches, and in places where the population exceeds 4,000 persons—they cannot be applied to improve, enlarge, or rebuild. These are the great objects of this Society, and these objects have been promoted with no inconsiderable success during the seven years of its existance. It has opened the doors of the Established Church to thousands who were before excluded from joining in its worship. Will not, then, the friends of that Church come forward and enable the Society to continue its useful exertions? His Majesty has been graciously pleased to make a donation of 1,000*l.* and the Committee cannot but indulge the hope that the example of the Sovereign will be followed by his subjects in every rank of life, for every pound that is subscribed will be the means of furnishing an additional sitting. They can appeal to the good which has been already done in various places, by supplying the spiritual wants of the population. They may venture to say, that the interests of religion and morality cannot be more effectually promoted than by the support and encouragement of this Society.

Price 3*s.* 6*d.*; 7*s.*; 10*s.* 6*d.*; and 21*s.* per bottle.

CAUTION.

The high popularity of the above invaluable articles have excited the envy of empiricism, whence emanate delcterious imitation and palpable false-hood; foisting on the Public pestilerious preparation as the original; imitating the labels, bills, bottles, and advertisement. To prevent this imposition, the Proprietors solicit particular attention on purchasing, to ask for "ROWLAND'S," and observe the Signature in red ink, "A. ROWLAND and SON."

THE LIFE OF LORD VISCOUNT NELSON, of the Nile, &c. by Mr. HARRISON, with the assistance of original and authenticated communications, from the dearest of his Lordship's Family and Friends. The Public are respectfully informed that this greatly honoured Work is now completed, elegantly printed in two octave volumes, enriched with a beautiful Portrait of the Hero, painted by Sir Wm. Beechey, R. A. price 1*l.* 3*s.* boards.

A fine edition, on large paper, hot-pressed, with proof impressions of the Portrait, price 2*l.* 6*s.* extra boards.

"This Life of Nelson deserves the attention of Europe. Private particulars have been furnished by his Lordship's family to the Author. Public papers have been communicated to him from the offices in which they were preserved. It is likely to remain the prominent, acknowledged, and standard biography of a Hero who has carried British Naval Glory to its highest pitch, and who has contributed to awaken in the remotest corners of the world, a belief in the vincibility of Frenchmen. The work is drawn up with becoming courage. The most curious particulars of the Court, of the Ministry, and of the Army of Naples, are conjugated with the indifference of a posthumous history. It were useless to make a regular analysis of a work which will soon be in general circulation. We think highly of its literary execution; the due proportion and detail is observed: there is little of declamation, and much of document.—Ann. Rev.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

LANCASTER.

CRIMINAL SIDE.—Before Mr. Justice BAYLEY.

MURDER.

Joseph Standing was indicted for the murder of Martha Standing, his wife, at Manchester, in the month of July last

Mr. ARMSTRONG stated the case, and called the following witnesses:—

John Bowen knew the deceased, and met her on the morning of the 29th June last in the street, at about half-past four. I said to her, "You get up by times this morning:" but she made me no answer. She seemed to walk steadily.

The prisoner denied all knowledge of this witness, and wondered how he could know his wife.

Mr. Justice BAYLEY.—He does not say he knows you.

John Hardy examined.—I live near the prisoner, and on the morning of the 29th June went to call him up, without any previous request on his part that I should do so. I went to call him within a quarter to five o'clock. He lived in a cellar, down several steps. As I was going down I saw his wife lying on the flags, her feet towards the door and her head towards the steps. I called the prisoner, who immediately answered, and he and I left the place together. As we were going into Chapel-street I looked at the prisoner, who seemed very much flushed. The first question he asked then was—"Did I see his blossom?" I understood him by that to mean his wife. I told him I did; and he said, he thought she was dead. I said with some surprise, "dead!" and a second time he said, "yes, dead." I observed, if he thought so, that he had better return back to the cellar, and he did so. He asked me what I thought he should do with her. I told him I did not know, and that I should have nothing more to do with the business. I said I thought it would be best to ask the police, and he subsequently did so. The prisoner and his wife did not live very happily together.

By Mr. Justice BAYLEY.—Several persons live over the cellar in which the prisoner resided, and the neighbourhood about is very populous. I heard nothing of any screams or cries being made by the deceased. If any noise were made, it must have very easily been heard. I saw the prisoner kick her before then, at my house. She was between 33 and 34 years old.

John Birdelaw examined.—I am a surgeon at Salford, and was sent for, on the 29th of June, to attend the deceased. I have been in practice for three years, during two of which I was employed in the Manchester Infirmary. I was called in to attend the deceased about two o'clock. The body had been laid out, and I found the face very much discoloured; it had a darkish brown appearance. The eyelids were blackened as if from a previous blow, and there was a small mark upon the right side of the lower jaw. It had a light colour, like a bruise. I also observed a mark across the fore part of the throat; it appeared to begin by the projection of bone near the ear; it went under the jaw, and was lost in the root of the hair. Just under the left side, the mark was so deep that I could insert my nail in the furrow of the line, but that line was white, and the skin had a blue tinge above and below it. I also found the mark of an old scratch on the right collar-bone. I then opened the head. On cutting through the skin of the head the blood flowed very freely, and I opened the head. I found the brain what we call healthy, but all the vessels were amazingly full of blood. From these appearances I can only come to one conclusion, that the woman died from strangulation. I have no doubt about it. A narrow cord only could have made the mark. I saw the mark in her neck could not have been made with a handkerchief; I think it impossible. I have heard the situation in which she was found, and that could only be, supposing she had hanged herself, that some person cut her down and placed her near the door

By the JUDGE.—The appearances I have stated might have been produced by epilepsy or by apoplexy, and they would have left the vessels full; but it is not usual to have the scalp full. But for the mark round the throat, I could not say but that this woman died of apoplexy. I did not know her when alive. She appeared to be a very strong woman. I have heard that her habits were very intemperate, which would certainly induce apoplexy. She was not particularly short-necked. One description of apoplexy arises from the extraordinary fullness of the blood In case of a fit, the vessels frequently swell about the throat—sometimes very considerably. I think a cap-string might occasion a mark, but not an indentation as in this case, or under any other similar circumstances. The mark on the throat was where the cap-string would press. I saw no division of the skin under the left ear, though it was considerably depressed. I have seen a great many persons in fits; and in cases of epilepsy the convulsions are very strong. If a woman were in a fit, and her cap-string tight, the first thing I should order would be to cut it.

The prisoner being called on for his defence, declared himself as innocent as the child that is yet to be born.

By the COURT.—Have you any witnesses?

Prisoner.—None but her sister, who was present on the morning before.

Mary Griffiths was then called, but did not appear.

Mr. Justice BAYLEY, in recapitulating the evidence to the Jury, said that the prisoner was indicted for one of the highest crimes a man could commit. The principal evidence against him was that given by the surgeon; but, exclusive of that, it presented a very peculiar case. There was the prisoner's wife returning at a quarter before five o'clock to her husband's home, the husband telling persons before that that she had fallen down in a fit; and nothing so far could militate against the husband, who asked several persons what he should do, and who advised him to go to the police-office for advice. Now a man so conducting himself could not be conscious of using violence, or such violence as might after endanger his own life. However, he would leave it to the Jury to weigh all the circumstances of the case, and, if they had any doubt, they were bound to give the benefit of it to the prisoner. He did not mean to impeach the very positive direct examination of the surgeon; but where the life of a fellow-creature was at stake, it would be necessary for himself as well as for the Jury, to be fully satisfied before they pronounced a judgment, about the certainty of which they might one day or another call themselves to account for. The Learned Judge then adverted to the evidence with the greatest minuteness, pointing out to the Jury the various parts of it which had any leaning in the one way or the other; and the Jury, without leaving the box, found the prisoner Not Guilty.

Mr. Justice BAYLEY.—Gentlemen of the Jury, I think your verdict a very proper one, for, to say the least of it, this case has presented itself to us under very strange and extraordinary circumstances.

LEWIS v. COOKE.

Mr. VENABLES opened the pleadings, and the ATTORNEY-GENERAL stated the nature of the action. It was briefly this:—

The plaintiff, it appears, is the lessor of the Olympic Theatre, in Liverpool, who had let it to the defendant (John Cooke, the equestrian, for the use of his company,) at the rate of 600*l.* per annum. The term stipulated for the use thereof was sixteen weeks during the season, after the close of the theatre. The defendant had paid all but the last fortnight's rent (75*l.*), which he refused to pay, and had left Liverpool without performing the last fourteen days, not assigning any reason.

The assignment between the parties, dated Sept. 18, 1823, was then put in and read.

A witness proved the defendant's hand-writing.

Here Mr. Sergeant CROSS rose, and took an objection on behalf of the defendant, and said that the instrument put in was not good in law, it being on a twenty shilling agreement stamp, and not on a five pounds, to cover the ad valorem duty, and that it being in the nature of a lease to "set and let," it required the additional sum, and under these circumstances the plaintiff must be "called."

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL asked his Lordship if he thought the objection fatal, and on his Lordship replying in the affirmative, the plaintiff was nonsuited.

BADGER v. ROBERTS.

This was the last cause tried, and the ATTORNEY-GENERAL congratulated the Jury that they had been discharged in one day, which was unparalleled in the Lancaster Assizes.

The Court rose at half-past eight o'clock.

CROWN SIDE.

James Windle, charged with having violated Mary Ann Allwood, an infant under the age of eleven years, at Ashton-under-Line, was found Guilty, and sentenced to three years' imprisonment and hard labour in the Castle of Lancaster.

Robert Nuttall, charged with killing and slaying William Lupton, at Colne, was Acquitted.

Grace Hayes, charged with having wilfully and maliciously set fire to a certain cow-bow at Blackburn, the property of Charles Davis, was Acquitted.

William Baldwin, charged with having burglariously broken and entered the dwelling-house of John Irving, at Burnley, and with having stolen therein a quantity of woollen cloth, his property; also with having stolen from the shop of the said John Irving a quantity of linen cloth, his property, was found Guilty—Death.

John Howard, charged with having stolen, at Newchurch, from the person of John Baron, one pocket-book, two bank post bills for the payment of 150*l.*, and provincial bank notes for the payment of 13*l.*, was found Guilty.—"Transported for life."

George Garnett Thompson, charged with having assaulted Mary Teasdale, at Bolton-by-the-sands, with intent to violate her, was Acquitted.

CORK, AUG. 18.

TRIAL OF ARTHUR KEEFFE AND THOMAS BOURKE FOR THE MURDER OF THE FRANKS FAMILY.

Mr. Serjeant GOOLD opened the case. He said the two prisoners at the bar, Arthur Keeffe and Thomas Bourke, were charged with the murder of three individuals—a husband, his wife, and their son. The transaction occurred on the 9th of September, 1823; the place at which it occurred was called Lisnagourneen, which is situated about two miles from Kildorrery, and was the habitation of the unfortunate Franks. The circumstances of this horrid transaction were already known, in consequence of a prosecution which took place in the spring of 1824, when three brothers, named Cremen, were convicted. At that Assizes, it was only right to state that the prisoner Keeffe was in the dock, and that his trial was postponed at the instance of the Crown. It was also right to state, that at a certain period of that Assizes Keeffe expressed his willingness to go to trial. It was further right to state, that at the last Summer Assizes he was ready, and that his trial was farther postponed at the instance of the Crown. Since then circumstances came to the knowledge of government, which led to the subsequent arrest of the prisoners, who were now about to be put on their trial for one of the most barbarous murders that ever disgraced any nation of the earth. It would appear that Arthur Keeffe was married to a woman named Kearney, the daughter of James Kearney, by his first wife. In her right Keeffe had, or asserted, a right to considerable property after the death of Kearney. Kearney married a second wife, by whom he had children, and about the period alluded to, Henry Franks, son of Thomas Franks, was paying his addresses to one of the Miss Kearneys, and his marriage with her was actually agreed upon. How far the marriage thus contemplated interfered with the pretensions of Keeffe it was not for him to say, nor for the Jury to consider; but certain it was Keeffe had made declarations, from which it appeared that he conceived his pretensions were likely to be injured by the proposed marriage. Property, it was well known, was the great source of crime. To retain and possess that property which is not our own has given birth to all varieties of crime. The time to which he alluded was fitting, and the instruments were many and willing. The character of the Franks gave facilities which could not be afforded under other circumstances. They were regarded as severe landlords to their tenants, and this gave facilities to those who were disposed to injure them. It would be for the Jury to consider, but it was very distinctly stated, that the murder was no sudden thought. On the 7th of September, the Sunday preceding the murder, a meeting was held near Mr. Lowe's house, at which the murder was determined upon. At that meeting, it would be proved that Keeffe was present, and concurring. The murder being resolved upon, arrangements were made for carrying it into effect. Appointments were made for meeting in a potatoe-garden, near the house at Lisnagourneen. It would be necessary for the Jury to attend particularly, not only to the place, but to the hours at which this transaction occurred. Agreeably to the previous resolution, some of the murderers proceeded to the potatoe-garden, where others were collected before them. A whistle was then given, and the parties arrived in different directions. After a time the party rushed into the house. The family had dined in their kitchen, and the cloth still remained on the table. The ruffian band instantly proceeded to effect their sanguinary object, and in a very short time the whole family was butchered. It would be proved, by four different persons, that Arthur Keeffe was present commanding the party, and whilst any life remained, crying out, "Boys, do your duty." He was dressed in a green coat, and held a whip in his hand. All the witnesses would depose, that the captain, whom they called Keeffe, wore a green coat, and had a whip, and that he never afterwards was seen in that green coat, although he had frequently worn it before. There was another minute circumstance. Keeffe had a dog of a particular description: a policeman, who came from Kildorrery upon hearing the transaction, saw this dog in a lane near the premises. This of itself was an unimportant circumstance, but taken with other things it appeared strange, and minute circumstances were often found to elucidate a doubtful transaction. It would be for the Jury to compare and consider all the evidence, and to give the case a humane as well as a firm consideration. As to Bourke, he was seen by almost all the witnesses. There was a curious circumstance connected with him. He had a shirt over his clothes during the transaction, which he left on the premises. This shirt the gardener's wife had washed, and hung on a bush, and in the evening Bourke was discovered taking the shirt from off the bush He (Mr. Serjeant Goold) would be glad if the verdict of the Jury absolved the prisoners, or either of them, from the commission of this horrible crime. If, on the contrary, they believed the concurring testimonies of so many witnesses who had no previous means of concert, and no motive for fabrication, they would best discharge their duty to themselves, their country, and their God, by giving a verdict against the persons guilty of this barbarous murder.

Timothy Sheehan, an approver, deposed that he remembered the night of the murder. Being desired to turn to the dock, and look if any of the persons who had assembled on that occasion were in it, after a considerable pause he identified Bourke, but he did not, he said, see any one else that was present. Witness described himself as having tried to save the Franks, but as he could not get any assistance he ran back to the door. The two Cremens were of the party inside, and a man was standing near the table, who wore a green coat, and had a switch or a whip in his hand. Witness had seen this person at a meeting on Sunday, when he wore a pair of leggings. Being asked if he would know that man now, he replied that he would. He was then desired to turn to the dock and see if he was there. He did so, and immediately pointed out Bourke as the person. (A sensation pervaded the entire Court at this identification, as it was generally supposed he would put the wand upon Keeffe.) The witness, on further examination, stated, that there were other persons at the murder, whom he knew then, but he would not know now.

On cross-examination by Mr. O'CONNELL, the witness stated that he was never frightened; that though he was examined before Justices of the Peace, he was never sworn till he came on the table. He was asked if he knew the name of the man he had identified, and he said he did not. Major Carter had pointed out a man to him at the guard-house at Doneraile, where he was himself in custody, and Bourke is very like him. "I believe," said Mr. O'Connell, "they threatened to hang yourself?" "They did, sir," replied the witness; "there was one Dandon there, and he told me if I didn't turn King's evidence they would hang me, and so I did." "And you would swear any thing to save your life?" "I would, sir."

Edmond Glareen, a resident under the same roof with the Franks' family, identified both the prisoners, and stated, that on the evening of the murder, Bourke, in company with another, called him out of the house, and employed him to tell three other men, who lay concealed a short distance off, that the Franks were at home. He and his family were then compelled to go to bed in the part of the tenement which they inhabited, where they remained till the murder was over. He had known both the prisoners previously, as residing in the neighbourhood. On the departure of the party, the witness said he rode to Kildorrery, and gave the alarm. The witness was cross-examined at great length respecting some apparent discrepancies in his evidence respecting Keeffe, owing to there having been two of that name present, which caused some confusion in his statement, and also respecting the localities; but nothing material was elicited. He further stated, that as near as he could guess, it was twelve months after the murder that he told the police he could give information about it. He was in custody himself at Doneraile and in Cork, charged with this crime. Walsh, one of the persons concerned in it, was gone to England. He afterwards admitted that he knew the murder was to take place three weeks before it was committed, but concealed it from fear. He denied that he had received any money from Mrs. Kearney to swear against Keeffe, though he knew they were on bad terms; and denied being influenced in giving his evidence by the hope of a place in the police.

Mary Myers, who lived with the Franks' family, was in the kitchen on the fatal evening, and described several circumstances of the murder, which she witnessed from beneath a table. She identified Arthur Keeffe as present, and inciting the rest of the assassins "to do their duty." On her cross-examination she admitted having once sworn before two magistrates that Keeffe was not there. She swore so to save Keeffe's life, whom she had long known. She is 19 years old. She thinks God would forgive a false oath that saved a man's life, but not one that took it away.

Edward Magner was one of the party at the house the night of the murder, and confirmed the last witness respecting Keeffe's words to the gang. The cross-examination of this miscreant, who admitted that "he would take the life of a sucking child, and wade up to his neck in blood if ordered," excited the utmost indignation. He also admitted that he had, since the murder, expressed his regret that "he had not killed the little girl;" he left the house after the murder, at eight o'clock.

Mary Glaveen, a servant of the Franks', identified Bourke as one of the six men who guarded her while the murder was acting. Andrew Batwell, Esq., a magistrate, and William Brett, a policeman, also proved the description given by some of the witnesses of certain particulars in the dress, &c. of Keeffe to be correct.

For the defence C. L. C. Williams, Esq., George Smith, and the Rev. T. Nash, gave Keeffe a good general character for honesty and sobriety; and Patrick Nayler did the same towards Bourke. His Lordship then summed up, commenting upon the material points, when the Jury found both prisoners Not Guilty.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF CHANCERY, AUGUST 22.

JUDGMENTS.

EX-PARTE BAXTER IN RE MARSH, STRACY, AND CO.

Lord CHANCELLOR.—He had deferred pronouncing a final judgment in this case until this day, in order that he might have sufficient time to reconsider the opinion which he had formed when the question was argued, and he had done so for one reason, namely, that at that time his opinion was different from that pronounced by His Honour the Vice-Chancellor. He had maturely weighed the arguments urged on both sides, and notwithstanding the very great respect which he entertained for the opinion of His Honour, he felt that the facts of the case submitted for his consideration would not enable him to come to any conclusion different from that which he had arrived at on the former occasion, and therefore the petition must be allowed. However, as the question was one of much importance and considerable difficulty, he had no object to re-hear it, if the parties opposed to the petition should be dissatisfied.

EX-PARTE WADE, A BANKRUPT.

His LORDSHIP observed, that in this case he had already expressed sufficient to enable the parties to ascertain what his opinions were. The question involved many points worthy of serious consideration; but he should not hesitate to supersede the Commission, were it not for certain consequences which were well known to the parties interested. He thought it advisable that all the parties should, instead of calling upon him to pronounce judgment, come to some arrangement among themselves, and in order to afford them opportunity of coming to such an arrangement, he should postpone his judgment for three weeks; but if, during that time, they should not think fit to act upon his suggestion, he should then be (as he was now) prepared to pronounce his judgment.

BLACKBURN v. LORD MANSFIELD.

His LORDSHIP observed, that in this case a bill had been filed to restrain the defendant from committing trespass upon the plaintiff's property. The defendant demurred, and the question now was, was this demurrer maintainable? He was of opinion that it was not, and he was therefore inclined to grant an injunction; but he should postpone his decision until Mr. Hart should be in Court on Wednesday next, when he should state the grounds of his opinion.

EX-PARTE BINNS.

The Lord CHANCELLOR.—So many points had been introduced by Mr. Sugden into his argument in this case, that he (the Lord Chancellor) after the best consideration which he could bestow, would not take upon himself to pronounce a decision without having previously obtained the assistance of the Court of King's Bench; and in order that no mistake should arise as to the points upon which he wished to have the opinion of the Learned Judges of that Court, he should draw up the order himself.

EX-PARTE COWDER, A BANKRUPT.

His LORDSHIP having recapitulated the facts of this case, said, if the party applying to supersede the commission wished for an issue to try whether there was a concert between the bankrupt, the petitioning creditor, and his attorney, to issue a commission of bankruptcy, he should grant it.

Mr. KNIGHT.—We are ready to take such an issue, any Lord.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Then you can have it.

HABEAS CORPUS.

IN RE JOHN WELCHMAN.

Mr. PARKER appeared to support the application of Mr. Welchman, who was brought up by Habeas Corpus, that he may be discharged from Bristol gaol, to which he had been committed by the Commissioners of Bankrupts, for having refused to answer certain questions proposed to him touching the property of his brother, Henry Welchman, a bankrupt. The Learned Counsel contended that the answer given by Mr. Welchman that the bankrupt had no claim to the money for which his stock had been purchased by his brother was sufficient, and that the Commissioners were wrong in their opinion that he ought to state where he had got the money to purchase his brother's stock.

Mr. KNIGHT having been heard on the other side,

His LORDSHIP said, that without giving any opinion as to the right of the Commissioners to insist upon an answer to such a question, under any circumstances, he was satisfied, that from all that now appeared, the Commissioners were not at the time justified in committing Mr. Welchman, and he must therefore be discharged. This decision did not preclude the Commissioners from calling Mr. Welchman before them at a future time for examination touching the bankruptcy.

His LORDSHIP said that he should, on Wednesday and Thursday next, dispose of all the bankrupt petitions.

NAVAL COURT-MARTIAL.

COURT-MARTIAL ON MR. THOMAS GOBLE, PURSER OF R.M.S. ANDROMACHE.

FIRST DAY.

Wednesday this Court-Martial, appointed by the Commissioners of the Fleet, met, for the first time, to deliberate upon and hear witnesses relative to the conduct of Mr. Thomas Goble, the Purser of his Majesty's ship Andromache. The following five Post-Captains are the persons appointed to form the Court: Captain White, President; Captain Sir C. Sullivan, Captain Sir William Hoste, Captain Couch, and Captain Munday. Mr. Bicknell, clerk to the Admiralty, conducted the prosecution, and Mr. Mincher, a legal gentleman from Portsmouth, appeared in defence of the accused.

The charges brought against Mr. Thomas Goble are divided into five heads, though the whole appear to originate out of one act committed by him, while Purser of the above-mentioned ship The first charge is—that of paying the ship's company in rix-dollars, at the Cape of Good Hope, at a higher rate of exchange than was really the case at the time such monies were paid. The second charge was—that of representing, between the first day of April and the last day of May of the present year, that the ship's company had not been entitled to any savings money between the preceding first of November and the seventh of January ensuing. The third charge was—that of having made payments to the ship's company contrary to the directions that he had received, as Purser of the ship. The fourth charge was in allusion to a payment which the Purser alleged that he had made to Mr. Tate, the senior Lieutenant, on behalf of some Madagascar lads aboard, the amount of which was 8*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.* And the fifth charge was his having accused Mr. Tate of having received such sum of money, which was not really the case.

On the opening of the Court, yesterday morning, the Commission was read, and it was announced that Mr. Twopenny, solicitor, of Rochester, was appointed by the Court to be Judge Advocate. After which the regular oaths were duly administered, and the list of witnesses was called over previous to commencing the important business for which the Court had been convened. At the desire of the President, a messenger was dispatched forthwith to the Chatham dock-yard, to require the attendance of an additional number of witnesses, who were there to be met with.

The business of the day then commenced, by the examination of witnesses, at about ten o'clock in the forenoon.

After an examination of several witnesses, in which nothing very interesting or decisive occurred,

The PRESIDENT, it being a quarter past five o'clock, then declared the Court adjourned till to-morrow (this morning) at ten o'clock.

Mr. Goble, who was in the custody of the Provost-Marshal, requested the indulgence of the Court to permit him to go on shore for the night. The birth that he had had the previous night he had found excessively inconvenient, especially as it afforded no accommodation for his consulting with his legal adviser. The Court consulted for some time on this request, and at length informed the prisoner that they did not choose to take any steps in the affair themselves, but as he was in the custody of the Provost-Marshal, if the officer thought proper he might take him on shore; but then it must be on his own responsibility, as he was answerable for the safe custody of his prisoner. The Provost-Marshal feeling under no apprehension as to the safety of his prisoner, said that he had no objection to accompany him on shore, and therefore the matter was finally arranged in that manner.—The Court then adjourned.

ACCIDENTS, OFFENCES, &c.

Tuesday afternoon an Inquisition was taken at the Horse and Groom, in Oxford-street, on the body of Mary Slaughtery, aged 65.

Mr. Howship, a surgeon, said he had viewed the body of the deceased woman, and found it in a state of rapidly advancing putrefaction, rendering it impossible to ascertain the cause of death by dissection. After other evidence had been adduced, the Jury returned a verdict—"Found dead, but that the body, in the opinion of three medical gentlemen, is in so putrid a state that it cannot be ascertained whether her death was occasioned by the violence she received from a man unknown."

Tuesday evening an Inquisition was taken at the Five Bells public-house, Limehouse, before J. W. Unwin, Esq. the Coroner, on view of the body of David Morris, in the service of a barge carrier, of Limehouse, a young man 19 years of age, who was supposed to have been kicked into the City Canal by the violence of his horse, and drowned. The Jury returned a verdict of—"Accidental Death."

On Wednesday an Inquisition was taken at the Brown Bear, in Leman-street, Goodman's Fields, on the body of Mr. W. Kislington, a shopkeeper in the neighbourhood, the circumstances attending whose death are somewhat singular:—

Miss Maria Bellenger stated, that on Sunday night, about eleven o'clock, she was in the yard attached to the deceased's premises, and hearing a noise she gave an alarm, calling out "William, there are thieves on the roof of the house." The deceased immediately seized a poker, ran up stairs, and got out on the roof. Witness shortly afterwards proceeded up stairs, and found the deceased in one of the attic rooms, extremely weak, and bleeding profusely from a wound which he received, as he told her, in falling through the sky-light: she immediately sent for a surgeon, but the deceased survived only five minutes.

Mr. Burton, a surgeon, said that he was called on to attend the deceased about twelve o'clock. On arriving at his house he found him dead, and, on examining the body, discovered a wound three inches below the left groin; its orifice was small, and the blood being arterial, led him to suppose that the femoral artery was cut. On examining his small clothes he found a piece of glass, which he produced; it was about two and a half inches long, by half an inch broad, and tapering towards the top into a very fine point. This had penetrated into the femoral artery, which was the cause of his death.—Verdict "Accidental Death."—What renders the above circumstance the more deplorable is, that the alarm of thieves was perfectly groundless, and that the deceased was but a few weeks married, and only 22 years of age.

Last Sunday morning, about the hour of three o'clock, as the watchman on the Booth-street, Spitalfields beat, was going his rounds, he perceived a volume of smoke forcing its way from the casements of the front windows of the Rose and Crown public-house in that street; he immediately gave the alarm, and endeavoured to arouse the family, but without effect; and it was not until the door was burst open, and several persons rushed up stairs to the bed-room of the landlord, Mr. Petres, that he and the other inmates were made sensible of their alarming situation. So great was the violence of the flames, and the rapidity of destruction, that its inhabitants had but just effected their escape in almost a state of nudity, when the roof fell in with a most tremendous crash, carrying the different floors to the basement. Mr. Petres, we are happy to state, will be but a partial sufferer to this calamity, as his stock, &c. was insured.

A serious accident befel Mr. Reed Belton, painter, in Surrey-street, last Sunday evening He was travelling in his gig with Mr. Wilmot, his friend, when the horse shyed between the bottom of Brixton-hill and the Church, run the vehicle on the bank, and overturned it. Mr. Belton, who was driving, had his arm and collar-bone broken, and his friend escaped unhurt.

Wednesday morning one of the Sydenham stages, passing the Mansion-house, overturned, owing to one of the fore wheels coming off. There were six outside passengers, one of whom, Mr. Graham, of Bridge-street, had the misfortune to have his ankle-bone broken. He was taken into the Marshal's room, and had every attention paid him previous to his being removed to his residence; fortunately none of the other passengers sustained any serious injury.

Last Friday night week, some heartless, cruel monster, cut the tongue out of a horse belonging to a poor and industrious man, named John Savage, living near Swords, whose whole support was gained by carrying fish to market on his car.—Dublin Freeman's Journal.

On Wednesday evening Mr. James Alsford, a highly respectable tradesman and inhabitant of Brown-street, Portman-square, in a moment of madness, nearly effected his destruction in the following dreadful manner:—He had been confined to his room some days with a complaint in his head, which produced a delirium of the most serious kind; and when it was thought he was composed for the night, and while the nurse was sitting down by the bed-side, he sprang from the bed, jumped through the window into the street, and fell upon his head. He was immediately raised up and taken into the house; and in addition to the many bruises occasioned by the fall, his right shoulder is dislocated, and his skull fractured so dreadfully, that his death is momentarily expected.

On Wednesday, the 17th instant, as Mr. Gosling, of No. 2, Brunswick-square, accompanied by his footman, was gathering mulberries in the garden of Mr. Gosling's country-house, the hough on which they were standing broke, and precipitated them to the ground. On removing Mr. Gosling, his leg was found to be broken; and a mortification having taken place, he expired at his country-house on Monday last, leaving a wife and family to bewail his loss. The footman, we are happy to say, was not seriously injured.

A melancholy accident occurred on Monday. As the galley of the Nimrod brig of war, lying off Carrickfergus, was going to board the above ship, about two o'clock, it unfortunately upset, and we lament to say that Lieut. Everard and three seamen were drowned; the remainder of the crew (Mr. Pierce, midshipman, and three seamen,) were picked up by the boat of the Swedish ship Tapperkell, much exhausted. All the seamen lost belonged to Carrickfergus. Lieut. Everard bore a very high character in his Majesty's service, and was a young man of exemplary conduct, and highly esteemed by Capt. Rochford, his brother officers, and crew. The bodies have not yet been found.

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

LEAMINGTON.—William Allen Hurrell, son of William Hurrell, Esq. of Foxton Hall, Cambridgeshire, became some time since the favourite admirer of Miss Theodosia Cavendish, the protegée of Lady Musgrave, then a visitor at this fashionable watering-place. The attentions of the young gentleman did not escape the notice of her Ladyship, and she wrote to apprise his father of the acquaintance. The match did not meet the wishes of his parent, and a denial was the result. The young gentleman was in consequence told his visits would not longer be permitted, and the lady became more strictly watched. But love is ever fruitful in device; and opposition, it is well known, when directed against the stronger passions of our nature, only increases desire and sharpens ingenuity. The youthful pair contrived to keep up a correspondence, and on Thursday evening, while the family of Lady Musgrave were at the assembly, the young lady having been previously locked up in her apartment, the ardent lover contrived to introduce himself into the house, broke out a panel from the door of the chamber in which the fair captive was confined, and brought her forth in secret triumph through the aperture he had thus made. The hero of the story had arranged his plans well. A chaise was in readiness to receive the fugitives; and without a moment's delay they made their escape, and were married on the following morning at West Bromwich. This conclusion of the affair seems to have been apprehended by the friends of the young gentleman, as the uncle set off post to prevent the anticipated match from taking place, but arrived six hours too late to effect his purpose. The happy bridegroom is of a very respectable family, and the lovely bride is of high descent.

DEVIZES.—The Marquis of Lansdown presided last week at the Anniversary Meeting of the Devizes Boar Club. Among the company present were John Tylee and William Tucker, Esquires, the Vice Presidents; Sir J. D. Astley, Bart. M. P., J. Pearse, Esq. M. P., J. C. Hobhouse, Esq. M. P., and upwards of 100 other gentlemen resident in the town and neighbourhood. The dinner was of the most sumptuous description, no less than four bucks and three turtles having been presented on the occasion.

TAUNTON.—Samuel Martin, an Excise-officer, about 50 years of age, who has been living at Box for some years past, shot himself in his bed on Wednesday, the 3d instant. It appears that the deceased had long laboured under bodily infirmity, and experienced great agitation of mind from domestic trouble. In the evening of the day above mentioned, he requested that his pistol might be brought to him; the instrument of death was accordingly conveyed to him by his wife, and with it he speedily committed the dreadful deed which ultimately terminated his life. A woman residing in the neighbourhood, on hearing the report of a pistol, repaired to the house, and on entering the room found the deceased extended on the bed, and his wife standing beside him. Surgical assistance was promptly afforded, but the wife, who was in a state of intoxication, commenced an assault on the gentleman who attended, with such violence as rendered it necessary to confine her in the watch-house for the remainder of the night. The unhappy man lingered till Friday last, and in the interval spoke of his wife in terms of the greatest affection, repeatedly affirming that he himself had perpetrated the rash act. An inquest has been holden on the body, which, after a long deliberation, pronounced their verdict—"Insanity."

We stated in our last, that a woman in the parish of Llanddulas, in the county of Brecon, had disappeared, and was supposed to have been murdered; and that a person named John Evans had been apprehended on suspicion of having perpetrated the crime. Since then the fact of the woman, whose name was Margaret Williams, having been murdered, has been ascertained, and Evans has been fully committed to take his trial for the murder. The particulars which have transpired respecting this atrocious affair are as follow:—About two o'clock in the morning, on Monday, the 8th instant, the unfortunate woman was called from her bed by some one, when she went out of doors, very thinly clothed, and did not return. On its being ascertained at a later hour that she had disappeared, a suspicion was raised that she had come to an untimely end, and as she was pregnant by the said John Evans, and some suspicious circumstances being against him, means were taken in the course of the day for his apprehension. Evans, on discovering that he was suspected, and that there were persons desirous of taking him, attempted to escape; but in consequence of the determined conduct of his pursuers, who at length became numerous, he found, after he had gone some distance, that there was a certainty of his being overtaken, and in consequence, got into a deep pool of water, in a retired situation, for concealment or for drowning himself, which last, and also cutting his throat, he is said to have attempted, when he was about to be taken. In consequence of this conduct, and his offering a considerable sum of money for leave to escape after he was apprehended, the original suspicions against him were greatly increased, and on the following day (Tuesday) he was confined in the lock-up-house at Llandovery for security, as stated in our last. The matter having caused a very great sensation in the neighbourhood, great exertions were made to discover the supposed murdered body, but for some days in vain. Evans all the while strongly denied that he knew any thing about it: it was however confidently believed that he had perpetrated the crime, and it was also thought that his brother-in-law, Daniel Rowlands, was likely to know something of the matter. On some address being used by the constable, the bloody secret in a great measure came out, and Rowlands stated that Evans had brought the dead body to the house on horseback in the night, requesting him to lend a spade, and afford his assistance in burying the corpse. Rowlands likewise stated that the spade was lent, and that he went some part of the way with him, but from a horror of the proceedings he soon returned; he also described the direction in which Evans had taken the body, and the probable place where it was buried, which being examined, the spot was discovered in a retired situation, and on removing the earth, the remains of the unfortunate woman were discovered buried, with the thin clothing she had on when she left her house, on her side, about two feet below the surface; the person burying her having covered the grave with the original sods, and trod them with his feet without shoes, and carefully spread the spare earth at some distance, to prevent a discovery. On examination of the body, it was found that death was occasioned by the dislocation of the neck of the unfortunate woman. When the circumstances attending the discovery of the body were made known to Evans, he acknowledged his having buried it, but denied his committing the murder. On Saturday last he was fully committed to Brecon gaol. His trial takes place this day at the Great Sessions for that county, now holding here.—Carmarthen Journal of Saturday.

POOLE.—A very handsome monument has just been erected in the Church of Canford Magna, to the memory of the late Admiral Russell. It consists of a large tablet of statuary marble, surmounted by appropriate naval trophies: underneath is the Admiral's coat of arms, with the motto "Che sara sara." The whole is placed on a dove-coloured ground. It was executed by Mr. H. Harris, of this town, and is highly creditable to his abilities. The tablet contains the following inscription which we copy as a just statement of the departed gallant Officer's naval career:

Sacred to the Memory of
THOMAS MACNAMARA RUSSELL, Esquire,
Admiral of the White,
Late Commander in Chief
In the North Seas.
He actively served his Country Seventy Years,
With Ardour, Bravery, and Ability;
And combated her Enemies in Thirty-six Engagements.
His most undaunted spirit of Enterprize,
During the first Revolutionary Wars of America and France,
Was Unrivalled.
In 1784 he was offered the Honour of Knighthood,
And, at the close of his brilliant Career,
He received the Warmest Acknowledgments from the Admiralty,
For his Superior Conduct, as A Naval Chief.
His Successful Blockade of the Texel,
During the Threatened Invasion of our Shores,
Was conducted on a New and Admirable System of His Own;
He was the First
Who had ever dared to Anchor a Fleet there,
In the Strongest Gales of a Northern Winter,
And on an Enemy's Lee Shore!
Heligoland
Surrendered to Him, by which He secured Invaluable
Advantages to His Country.
The Magnanimous, Intrepid, and Generous Heart
Of a British Seaman,
Was United in Him with the Urbanity of a Courtier.
He departed this Life
On the 22d of July, 1824, in His 85th Year.
Elizabeth, His Wife, died
On the 2d of March, 1818, in her 66th Year.
This Tribute to Departed Inestimable Worth,
Is Affectionately Inscribed by his Son-in-Law,
George Edward Patey, Lieut. R. N.

We cannot here omit paying a small tribute of respect to the affectionate regard of Lieutenant Patey, in thus erecting a monument to perpetuate the memory of his revered gallant father-in-law—it is an act which does honour to his feelings; and whilst it will hand down the deeds of the Admiral for posterity to look up to and imitate, they will also admire the affection which actuated his son-in-law.

WHITBY, August 23.—Our neighbourhood has been the scene of two interesting events—the confirmation of seven hundred children, by the Archbishop of York, on Saturday last; and the opening of Sneaton church (about three miles distant) by the venerable Archdeacon Wrangham, on Sunday. The number of children confirmed was less than at the former visitation, but it may be accounted for by its having taken place within three years of the last confirmation, whereas the usual period is four years.

At the opening of Sneaton church, there was such an assemblage of people to witness the ceremony that it was found impossible to admit them all into the church, so great was the desire of the inhabitants of this neighbourhood to show their respect for the liberality of J. Wilson, Esq. of Sneaton Castle, at whose sole expense this elegant little structure, together with the parsonage and school-house, have been erected. The Archdeacon performed the whole service in his usual impressive manner, and selected his text from the Second Book of Chronicles, Chap. VII. ver. 16. Of the sermon it is almost supererogatory to make any mention. The Archdeacon's powers of composition are so well known to the world, and the effect of his eloquent appeals to the heart and understanding so universally admitted, that it is only necessary to say, that the impression upon this highly interesting occasion was evidently deep, and will, no doubt, be lasting. The Church is of pure, but simple, Gothic taste, and does infinite credit to the good judgment of Colonel Wilson; it forms, at the same time, a very ornamental addition to the rural beauties of the ancient village of Sneaton. The Parsonage and School-house are quite in harmony with the style of the Church. Too much respect cannot be paid to Colonel Wilson, for the many useful and elegant improvements for which this vicinity is indebted to him. The Church at Sneaton was nearly in ruins: he has built a new one. The moors were a barren waste: he has established farms and planted thriving trees. The Esk was often impassable at high tide: he has had a bridge thrown over the river at Ruswarp, upon the simple and beautiful suspension plan of Captain Brown, R. N., who himself superintended its construction. In short, his object and his wish appear to be advantageous improvement; and wherever and whenever his ample means can be applied to useful purposes, his public spirit and generosity always make him a liberal contributor. After the ceremony of opening the new Church was performed, Colonel Wilson entertained a numerous party of friends with a handsome cold collation at the Castle, which rises so majestically above our town. The fineness of the weather added much to the splendour of the occasion, although the heat at Church, and the pressure of the congregation, caused several persons to faint during service.

THE AGE.

LONDON, AUGUST 28.

From information received from very high authority, we some time since directed the attention of our readers to the present occupation of Spain by the French troops, with an ultimate hope of arousing that supineness thereon which predominates so powerfully in this country; and as the intelligence we have within these few days been put in possession of, is still more confirmatory of the disposition of that Government, we venture again to say a word or two upon the subject. The encampment at both extremities of the Pyrenees is understood to amount in force to 28,000 men, disposed there for the purpose of watching a favourable crisis for advancing into Spain, and enforcing the adoption of that policy its agency meanwhile has attempted the establishment of; but the nature of that policy, however differently described by the advices which have reached us, has either the determined object of retaining a monarchy which shall be subject to its own directions, or rejecting any that shall not; and whether such determination consists in the abdication of FERDINAND, or the enthronement of CARLOS, matters little in the general agitation of the question which we have to consider, viz. THE PERMANENT OCCUPATION OF THE FRENCH. The least uninformed, or the most bigotted person, cannot but see that the present movement of the invaders is by no means the point for us to consider, at least as respects their disposition towards the reigning power---we are to enquire into the ultimate objects of those formidable encampments at Perpignan and Bayonne, and how far the CERTAIN objects they have the desire to carry, may be detrimental and eventful to the interests of the BRITISH NATION; and we feel that we are speaking the sentiments of the country generally, on making such enquiry, when we state, without the least reserve or doubt, THE LASTING POSSESSION OF CADIZ---"the point proposed"---would be of the most vital import to the commercial intercourse and power of this kingdom. Our minds have been so settled upon this point, that we did not require an additional argument to convince us of its accuracy, or to awaken us to a sense of its danger; but to those who may not be so sensitive or so positive as ourselves, we cannot do better than submit the following statement of an occurrence, which has been already in a disconnected shape before the public:---

"On Monday, the 11th of July, 1825, Mr. —— received a polite letter from Count FERRIERE, a Naval Officer commanding a French vessel of war in the Bay of CADIZ, stating, that he had received a Billet from the Ayuntamienta; but that, previous to taking possession of his lodgings, he had thought proper to send his boatswain on shore to examine them. He stated that he should require a separate kitchen, counting-house, &c. Mr. —— replied in terms equally polite to the Count, regretting that it would not be in his power to have the honor of receiving him, as he had removed nearly all his furniture over to Port St. Mary's, and that he had given up the house in which he then was. The following day an individual from the Ayuntamienta, called, in Mr. ——'s absence, in company with Count FERRIERE's boatswain, and was informed by Mr. ——'s clerk that they might examine the house, and convince themselves that it was impossible to receive the Count, in consequence of there not being any furniture in the house.

"The individual from the Ayuntamienta expressed himself satisfied, and told the boatswain to inform his master that he had better procure another billet. On the following day, the 15th of July, a corporal, and four or five FRENCH soldiers, TOOK POSSESSION OF MR. ——'S HOUSE, and KEPT HIM and all in the house prisoners for nearly two hours!! A FRENCH officer then called, and, inquiring for the master of the house, said to him, I come here by the command of the FRENCH GOVERNMENT! to know whether you will receive Count Ferriere or not? Mr. —— replied that he could not receive him, for reasons which he had stated by letter to the Count, and verbally to the Ayuntamienta. The officer then said, that he would take possession by FORCE. Mr. —— told him that he could not prevent him doing so, but that he thought the question of right would become a matter of debate between the two Governments. The French officer then called in the corporal, and, pointing to Mr. ——, said, that person is a prisoner by command of the Lieut.-General Viscount Gudin; the other people may leave the house. In a few hours afterwards, another FRENCH OFFICER, with twelve or fourteen French grenadiers, entered Mr. ——'s house, and, with great insolence, INSISTED upon knowing why he would not receive the Count? Mr. —— told him that, being a prisoner in his house, he had called for his Consul's protection, and that he could not give any other answer to him than he had previously given to the officer sent by Viscount Gudin. The OFFICER snapped his fingers, and said he did not care THAT! for the ENGLISH Consul, nor did he care whether Mr. —— was an Englishman, or a Greek, or a Mahometan—it was all the same to him—that he would take possession of the whole house by force, and, if necessary, he had orders to bring 30 more grenadiers. He THEN took possession of the whole house; and the only furniture found in it was a bed and a few chairs, in a room which was occupied by Mr. ——, and a bed occupied by his clerk. The officer left a sentry over the furniture, and Mr. —— was kept a prisoner in his house till seven o'clock at night, and was then only released by the influence of his friend the French Consul. It is worthy of remark, that Mr. —— had at the time a French officer billetted upon him in Port St. Mary, and that the French General Viscount Gudin was acquainted with this circumstance. As soon as the Spanish Governor was made acquainted with the violent measures adopted by the French General he sent an Aid-de-Camp to Mr. ——, who expressed the Spanish Governor's regret, at what he was pleased to term the illegal conduct of the French General Viscount Gudin."

A stronger instance than this of military impudence we never remember to have met with; and yet we shall perhaps be told, this is no verification of the position to which we have alluded. It really makes one laugh to hear of a FRENCH OFFICER snapping his fingers and saying, "He did not care that! for the English CONSUL," or whether the person he was insulting (because he happened to have fourteen grenadiers under his command) was an Englishman or not; when, but a few years ago, this very ragamuffin, most probably, fled among nearly ten times as many thousands of his countrymen, before a handful of those Englishmen whom he now dares to snap his fingers at!---when he, and all his jackanapes nation, bit the dust at our feet, and fell prostrate beneath our banners;---what, that puppet-show! their CAPITAL, yielded twice to our victorious arms, and our troops paraded through their streets. The treatment experienced by this Merchant demands the strictest investigation on the part of our Consul at Cadiz, and, if found to be as correct as it is here detailed, calls for the most ample APOLOGY that can be made by this Naval COUNT, and his emissary the FRENCH Officer, and every party concerned; or, it is to be hoped such conduct will convince our Government of the peril awaiting them, and point out to those insolent runagates the probability of our snapping at them something more chastising than OUR FINGERS.

AUGUSTUS STANHOPE, son of LORD HARRINGTON, and brother to the fascinating PETERSHAM, who was, by sentence of a Court Martial, expelled the army, in September, 1816, for cheating the present LORD YARMOUTH (then LORD BEAUCHAMP, a lad sixteen years of age,) to the amount of 16,000*l.* at cards, has, in company with a Mr. TWISDEN, (whom it is unnecessary to particularize,) within these few days, not only menaced, but, we understand actually struck THE MARQUIS OF HERTFORD, in consequence of HIS LORDSHIP's refusal to pay the amount for his son, then a minor. It is not essential to expatiate on LORD HERTFORD's general conduct, or on this particular instance of it, for there does not exist a more honorable, or a more generous man---whose actions, more particularly those of a pecuniary nature, are at once upright and princely in the extreme; and who, instead of refusing to pay a son's debts, would be the very first man we know to investigate their extent, for the purpose of liquidating them: but in this instance, LORD HERTFORD, with the rest of the world, is too well aware of the infamy of the transaction, to compromise for one moment the honor of his house, or counteract, by the high sanction HIS LORDSHIP's countenance to such a black affair would of course impart, the very proper opinion entertained of this matter by Government; and that our readers, while they admire LORD HERTFORD's manly and paternal conduct, may fairly judge of the grounds on which it is constituted, we subjoin the minutes of the Court Martial, held on the ci devant LIEUTENANT, THE Honourable AUGUSTUS STANHOPE:

Horse Guards, Nov. 18, 1816.

"At a General Court Martial held at Cambray, in France, on the 23d of September 1816, and continued by adjournments to the 26th of the same month, LIEUTENANT THE Honourable AUGUSTUS STANHOPE, of the 12th Regiment of Light Dragoons, was arraigned upon the undermentioned charge, viz:---

"For behaving in a scandalous, infamous manner, such as is unbecoming the character of AN OFFICER and a gentleman, in conspiracy with a certain other person, to draw in and seduce LORD BEAUCHAMP to game and play with them, for the purposes of gain and advantage; he, LIEUTENANT STANHOPE (having engaged LORD BEAUCHAMP to come to his quarters in Paris, on Sunday the 17th March 1816, upon an invitation to dine with him) did, in company and in concert with such other person, draw in, seduce, and prevail upon LORD BEAUCHAMP, to play with them at a certain game of chance with cards, for very high stakes, whereby, on an account kept by them, LIEUTENANT STANHOPE and the said other person, or one of them, of the losses and gains in the course of the play, he, LIEUTENANT STANHOPE, claimed to have won of LORD BEAUCHAMP the sum of 8,000*l.* and upwards, and the said other person claimed to have won of LORD BEAUCHAMP the further sum of 7,000*l.* and upwards."---"That, in further pursuance of the said concert and conspiracy, he, LORD BEAUCHAMP, at the same time and place, was required by LIEUTENANT STANHOPE to write and sign two promissary notes and engagements to pay, at the expiration of three years, the said several sums of money so claimed to have been won of him, LORD BEAUCHAMP, by LIEUTENANT STANHOPE, and the said other person respectively."---"That he,

Lord Beauchamp, was at that time about 16 years of age, IGNORANT OF and UNUSED TO PLAY, and affected by the wine he had been prevailed upon to take by the parties."

Upon which charge, the Court came to the following decision:---The Court having maturely and deliberately considered the charge exhibited against Lieutenant The Honourable Augustus Stanhope, of the 12th Regiment of Light Dragoons, together with the evidence PRODUCED ON either side, do find him guilty of THE SAID CHARGE, and do sentence him, Lieutenant Stanhope, to be discharged His Majesty's service accordingly."

In return for the amusing acount we last week gave of Tom Raikes, we have received an excellent joke from him, in an enclosure from Paris, and cannot lose the opportunity of submitting it to our readers. Tom says it has created great astonishment in the French circles, that Dr. Blomfield and Mr. Calcraft, M. P., two gentlemen so strenuously opposed to each other on one subject---the Catholic Question---should have been crowned with the same reward—viz. The See of Chester.

FASHIONABLE CHANGES.

Mrs. Lane Fox and George Anson, Esq. on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Rutland, at their seat, Baslow, Derbyshire.---Morning Post, Friday. Libellous Post.

It is a disposition, as well as a determination to fulfil an important duty, that compels us to turn a deaf ear to the several applications made to us this week, to induce us to withold any animadversion on the disgraceful scenes which have occupied public attention within these last few days: and although we fully participate in the feelings of those noble individuals nominally connected therewith, in whose behalf these appeals have been made to us, we cannot be silent; decency forbids it—human nature would blush at us, and manhood change its nature. By a species of fatality, or by the common consent of some of those miscreants whose existence pollutes the earth, our Metropolis has within these six days been visited, as will be found fully detailed in our Police Report, with an exposition of enormities, at which—if we say the sense revolts, we speak calmly—we would say, the understanding is paralyzed; and although on a cursory survey of the different cases, there exists but a trifling distinction in all this commission of crime, there still is one instance so magnitudinous in its extent, and so fatal in its example, that we are more particularly compelled to advert to it. John Grosset Muirhead, who married the sister of the present Duke of Athol, and aunt of the puritanical Lord Glenlyon, a man of fortune, intellectual attainment, and at the advanced age of 72, has gone through two examinations at Marlborough-street, by which the actions of more than half his life, having been subject to investigation, proclaim a profligacy for forty years, very nearly without a parallel in the annals of beastiality; and thus from a quarter where, by the direction of rank and education, the purest examples might be expected, we have had to encounter one of the most appalling disclosures the imagination can possibly picture. We do not envy Mr. Harmer the legal distinction of being selected as the conductor of this wretch's defence; and with reference thereto, we cannot withold our astonishment that a solicitor of the least respectability should entertain a desire to lessen the amount of bail required for this thing's appearance, while every other individual one meets, is praying that a Bill will be introduced in the next Session, to render this a non-bailable offence; and, indeed, so strong are our feelings on this subject, that we here intimate, in the most undisguised manner, our firm resolve to watch, with every possible scrutiny, the names of the bail that may be given for the appearance, both of this, and the other reptiles now in custody; and to expose, to the utmost derision and scorn, the slightest flaw in the character of any fellow, who shall be found filthy enough to undertake the responsibility. The very consequence of our national character is implicated by the appearance amongst us of such barbarians, unless every effort is used to extirpate the monsters from out the groaning land; which can only be done by a proper exposition of all parties who may be in the remotest manner connected with the offenders, and also by an infliction of the severest justice on the criminals themselves; and however sorry we may feel to differ with so intelligent a Magistrate as Mr. Dyer, we have no hesitation in thinking the conduct of those persons keeping the oyster-shop in Long-Acre, open to the severest censure; and we know no juster retribution that could befal them, than the total desertion of a place that could for a moment receive, or, in plainer words, countenance the proceedings of such degraded beings.

Sawnie Forbes and Elliston were some time since discussing the merits of their respective managements, when Elliston said, with a touch at the Scotchman's penury: "With all your success I would not be seen in such a coat as the one on your back."---"E'cod," said Sawnie, "I just think the coat till my back, is a deevlish deal better than the coat till your stomach, for a' you'll say."

We had occasion last week to animadvert, with some severity, on the outrageous conduct of the Chief Magistrate of Bow-street, in the case of Mr. Gamble; and it is our painful duty this week to record another instance of the gross behaviour of the same person. We allude to the ejection, on Thursday last, of two Reporters to the Press from the Bow street Police-office, by Sir Richard Birnie, in terms of blackguardism only on a level with those adopted by him on the former occasion; and we cannot allow this opportunity to pass by without pointing out to this Officer the impropriety, as well as illegality, of his conduct; and, at the same time, to suggest to those gentlemen who have been the objects of his resentment, the service they will be rendering the public by bringing an instance of such uncalled for interference, at once, before A higher Power, whereby a proper rebuke may be given to authority extending beyond its limits, and to conduct without any limits at all. If Sir Richard Birnie ever read the works of one Shakspeare, he will find in the play of Measure for Measure these words:---

"————— Man, proud Man!
Dressed in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assured;
His glassy essence, like an anory ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high Heaven,
As make the Angels weep."

THEATRICALS.

Our readers will readily admit that it required some extra degree of courage to go to the performance of any piece entitled Roses and Thorns; but if they could all be aware of the exact quality of the said Roses and Thorns, they would set us down for the bravest fellows going, when we tell them that we literally sat out the whole performance. It is a hacknied subject herein to repeat our settled opinion of David Daw, as there cannot be a doubt that he is the greatest booby ever entrusted with the management of a theatre; but in case any man should be found bold enough to doubt this assertion, we beg to refer him to the representation of the three-act comedy, under the foregoing title, produced on Wednesday at the Haymarket, and his doubts will all vanish. The prediction we gave of this exhibition a fortnig tago, from hearing it read, has come to pass; for whether as respects its construction, its portraiture of character, or its dialogue, a worse article was surely never submitted to human inspection---a vehicle by which vulgarity is passed off for wit, plagiarism for ingenuity, and buffoonery for humour---wherein the only reliance for success rests upon the representatives, (who certainly, for the most part, fulfilled every expectation that could be entertained by author or manager,) a dependance, in most instances, of the utmost hazard, as a principal performer should never be removed from the range of his abilities, or he will very likely endanger the safety of a play, or, what is of more consequence, his own reputation; and without going further into an examination of the materiel entrusted to them, we need only say that, in particular, the similes introduced throughout (which are invariably used for illustration, and above all aggrandizement in dialogue) are here of the very coarsest nature; for, in one scene alone, the love of a sour disposition for the gentle sex is compared to that of a CAT for a mutton chop ON A GRIDIRON, and the said sour personage to a hippopotamus; and all this Mr. Daw calls comedy! Mr. Farren's personation of the Admiral was perfect, and one of the best things we ever saw Farren enact; but Mr. Liston was out of his element, and quite imperfect even if he had been in it: and here we must protest once more against the liberties taken with his audience by this actor, which, exclusive of their disrespect to the people, are productive of great confusion among those he is acting with, and throw a general air of ridicule over a profession, quite ridiculous enough as it is. It is distressing to place such an admirable comedian as Harley in such miserable situations as all those are allotted to Raffleton, for although he makes every one in humour with him, it is impossible to forget the expense at which it is done---in Mr. Vining's case we shall feel obliged to him to tell us from what military regulation he copied that mountebank dress he appears in at last. Of the rest, Mrs. Hill was eminently interesting. Mrs. Gibbs made something out of a mere nothing; and that little whining bit of goods, Miss P. Glover, made nothing of something, and---"here break we off." A gentleman near us said he thought the last act the worst ever seen. We differ with him, for the two others, if possible, are worse than the last.

The people are convinced, by their mighty attendance to see Turrare, that they have got at last a legitimate opera, supported by efficient singers, and not as heretofore by actors, with the singers (like so many birds in a cage) just let out when required to sing---and they think right---for the performers acquit themselves admirably in their acting. Braham is energetic, Phillips respectable, Thorne nightly feeling more at home in the comic part, Miss Paton naïve yet arch withal---and the music, so superb in itself, is rendered every justice to, for nothing can go beyond the harmony of Braham and Miss Paton together, or the brilliancy of their voices apart; and in addition to general patronage, the attendance of the Burghersh's, Sir George Warrender, Sir A. Barnard, and other musical cognoscenti, is a convincing proof of our remark, and must convey to Mr. Arnold the most satisfactory assurance of the estimation he is held in for the production of this piece; the same to Mr. Hawes, for his zeal in obtaining and arranging the music.

The information we gave a fortnight back, of Mr. Kean's conduct to Mr. Elliston, has passed through the ordeal of the press within these few days, as news, and perhaps when we now say that Miss Stephens has done the same, it will be generally noticed next month. The first of these people is paying the penalty of his general conduct, by exhibiting his mountebankeries through the provinces, to, what are professionally called, empty houses; and we think, as the old adage goes, that "an empty house is better than a bad tenant." He is about to start for America, that dernier resort of English vagabonds; and if they will stand him, after his former farewell of them, why they will stand any thing. That the latter person should have adopted a legal proceeding for the recovery of wages, amounting, through an avaricious and circumstantial demand, to six times her VALUE, does surprise us, from all we had ever heard of this enchanting singer: and these two instances are perhaps the best that could be adduced, and the luckiest events that could happen for managers, to convince them of the absurdity of giving their players what the one can never attract, and the other cannot pay, though to every feeling and thinking mind, it must convey a sentiment of complete disgust at the cupidity and universal humbug of these gifted puppets. Miss Foote, because Ninny writes word in the *Post that she has gained 1,000*l.* at Liverpool, has offered to return for 20*l.* per week, for the ensuing season, to Covent Garden Theatre, whereas, until her late public exposure, she had about 10*l.* or 12*l.* Mr. Kemble has most peremptorily and praiseworthily declined her OFFER. We thought Drury Lane would soon be doing something; and we find, with singular satisfaction, that the long man at the Lyceum, called Tayleure, is at length engaged by Elliston, which has rendered the necessity of his treaty with Liston questionable; and this arrangement being concluded, Drury will open, on dit, on the 24th of next month.---N. B. Elliston's inside as per last.

* We are really surprised that so respectable a paper as the Morning Post should insert the long paragraph which appeared in that journal of Friday, in Miss Foote's behalf, and put Liverpool Paper, Aug. 23, at the bottom of it, when no such paragraph has appeared in any "Liverpool paper," and it is known so well by whom the said paragraph was written in London!!!

Minor Theatres.---The success experienced at Astley's Amphitheatre has been equal to any former season; and the late spectacle of Sights in England, backed by the Battle of Waterloo, is eminently calculated even to increase it.

We have seen the Monkey at the Surrey Theatre, christened Monsieur Gouffe, and were surprised to see the house so full, and of such fashionable people:---Monsieur did go off with very considerable effect. We have not been able to visit the Coburg, but mean to look in the next week, to witness the Burning of the Mint, which has proved to that Theatre, we hear, so very productive.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

Bow-street.—Monday morning, 19 individuals, charged with a misdemeanour, the nature of which decency forbids us to mention, were examined. They were apprehended on Sunday night, at about ten o'clock, at the Barley Mow public-house, near Exeter 'Change, by two of the Bow street patrol, who had received information of their practices. The neighbourhood of Bow-street was thronged with persons during the examination, the particulars of which are of course totally unfit for publication. The result was, that seven of them, whose names are Thomas Grange, the landlord of the Barley Mow, Robert Watson Armstrong, William M'Donald, John Lewis, Alexander Curts, John Brady, and William Powell, were ordered to find bail, which, not being able to do, they were locked up. It was intended to remove the prisoners in the new caravan, and as this became known the crowd increased round the office till it swelled apparently to thousands. At half past two o'clock, it had become so great that further delay was thought unadvisable, and as the caravan was not come, two hackney-coaches were drawn up to the door, and the prisoners immediately placed in them, amidst the hootings and loud execrations of the assembled multitude. It was with great difficulty that they were got without personal injury, down the steps of the office into the vehicles. When there, every species of obstruction was offered to their further progress. The horses were forcibly held back for a considerable time, and the doors of one coach were several times forced open, and nothing but the exertions of a strong body of officers preserved the wretched offenders from an immediate punishment. The coach drove to Clerkenwell prison.

Wednesday, Mr. Waldo, a gentleman holding an official situation at Somerset-house, was brought up on a warrant charged by Anne Martine, a pretty looking servant girl, with assaulting her, by violently twisting her neck, and afterwards kicking her down stairs.

Anne Martin, it appeared, is servant at a lodging-house in Mornington-place, Hampstead-road, kept by a Mrs. Billings, and that the defendant is and has been for a long time a lodger there. It was part of Anne's duty to wait upon Mr. Waldo, and the other day she happened to hand him a fork which was not quite so clean as it should have been; whereupon Mr. Waldo flew into a great passion, and seizing poor Anne by the head and shoulders, he gave her neck a violent twist, and then thrust her to the door and kicked her down stairs. She happened to have a stiff neck at the time, and the pain was of course the greater on that account, and she had suffered very considerably ever since the twisting took place.

Mr. Waldo being called upon for his defence, said, "I have nothing to urge but the extreme provocation I received—provocation such as no reasonable man could sustain.

Mr. Minshull.—What provocation could she give you?

Mr. Waldo.—O, Sir, the most tiresome annoyances imaginable have I received from her. There are a thousand little things, you know, connected with one's comforts, trivial in themselves, but of serious consequence in the aggregate, as they destroy a man's patience. There are saucepans, pots, and kettles perhaps out of order, or not clean—knives and forks neither well rubbed nor well sharpened—one's tablecloth carelessly slopped—and, in short, I do'nt say what—but I know it is too much to be borne by a reasonable man.

Mr. Minshull.—But what have you to say to assaulting her in the manner she has described?

Mr. Waldo.—Why, Sir, I asked her for a fork, and she gave me one that was dirty, and when I told her of it she laughed. Now, Sir, was that to be borne, I will ask you? I am not a god nor an angel, and I could not bear it, and so I put her out of the room.

The complainant denied that she laughed.

Mr. Minshull. Really, Sir, I think that provocation very insufficient to warrant such an assault. You seem to have treated her quite cruelly.

Mr. Waldo—Cruelly! O dear no, not at all; I will just give you an idea—and so saying, the defendant advanced towards the complainant with arms extended, but the girl shrunk instinctively from a second experiment upon the strength of her neck, and moved from him as fast as she could, he following, amid great laughter from all present, until Mr. Minshull called out to him not to repeat the operation.

Mr. Minshull told Mr. Waldo he must abstain in future from taking the law into his own hands. He must learn to command his temper.

Mr. Waldo—I do command my temper as long as I can, but I have more to bear than a reasonable man can sustain. I bottle these things up till they burst, and then you know, off they go, with a loud explosion, of course.

Mr. Minshull.—I must call upon you for bail, but I think you had much better compromise the matter with the girl.

Mr. Waldo—Not I, indeed.

Mr. Minshull—Then go to a jury.

Mr. Waldo—So I will.

Mr. Minshull—You must really learn to command your temper.

Mr. Waldo—No I won't. Who can command his temper under such circumstances, I should like to know?

Mr. Minshull—Don't talk nonsense, Sir. You must give more than the ordinary bail, as you won't be taught right from wrong. I require you to give sureties, yourself in 40*l.* and two others in 20*l.* each.

Mr. Waldo said he would soon do that. He gave bail, and was discharged.

Reporting.—The following circumstance occurred at the above Office on Thursday morning.

Some business of minor importance was going on, when Sir Richard Birnie, suddenly turning to the spot where the gentlemen who attend to report the proceedings for the public press, stand, exclaimed, "He bore no talking there." He then quitted his seat, and advancing hastily towards these gentlemen, addressed himself to one who was sitting down, and who was silent, in the following manner:—

"Who are you, Sir?"

The Reporter, rising—"Who am I?"

Sir R. Birnie, raising his voice, "Yes, Sir, who are you?"

A. My name, Sir, is——

Sir R. Birnie, not waiting to hear the answer—"Quit the office, Sir."

"I, Sir, I was not talking."

Sir R. Birnie (waiving his hand in the direction of the door)—"Quit the office, Sir."

The mandate was immediately obeyed.

Sir R. Birnie (addressing himself to another Reporter)—"Who are you?"

The Reporter stated the Paper for which he attended.

The same order as in the preceding case was then given, and in the same manner repeated several times before either of the parties could gain the door of the Office.

Marlborough-street.—Monday, J. C. Muirhead, Esq. was brought before Sir George Farrant and Mr. Conant, Magistrates, under a serious charge, which decency forbids us to name. After much investigation, the charge was sufficiently proved to the satisfaction of the presiding Magistrates, and the prisoner was fully committed. The offence being bailable, the prisoner was required to find bail in two sureties to the amount of 500*l.* each, and himself in 1000*l.* and there being two similar offences charged upon him at the same time, the amount of bail demanded was so high as 4000*l.* The prisoner stated himself to be in his 72d year, hoped that the Magistrates would show some indulgence, and send him to a prison where he might at least have tolerable accommodation. The Magistrates said that every possible indulgence should be shown him.

A medical man attended as his friend, and attributed his conduct to a kind of fatuity, often attendant upon old age. The prisoner was then committed.

Wednesday being the day named for the further examination of J. C. Muirhead, Esq. in custody upon a charge of a very revolting nature, long before the hour appointed (one o'clock) the office was crowded to excess, chiefly by persons attracted by curiosity to see a person who was stated to have so scandalously degraded the station which rank, fortune, and education, had assigned to him in society. There were none of Mr. Muirhead's private friends who attended on the first day present on this occasion; and Mr. Smith no longer appeared as his solicitor, but was succeeded by Mr. Harmer, as being, no doubt, better acquainted with criminal law.

A few minutes after one o'clock, four Magistrates, Sir G. Farrant, Mr. Dyer, Mr. Roe, and Mr. Conant, having taken their seats upon the bench, the prisoner was brought into the public office, and placed at the bar where every other description of offenders are made to take their station. He seemed to have suffered something in point of health since his former examination, but was to all appearance perfectly at ease, and indifferent about the proceedings.

John Charnton, a young man about 18 years of age, being sworn, stated, that about nine months ago, the prisoner came into the shop of Mr. Beatle, oil and colourman, No. 18, Little Newport-street, where witness is apprentice, and purchased some trifling article, for which he paid, and quitted the shop without having said any thing of a particular nature to the witness. He, however, came to the shop several times after, on many of which occasions he introduced very indecent topics of conversation, and used to the witness the most disgusting and (to use the witness's phrase) blackguard language.—[Here the witness repeated, at the desire of the Magistrate, the language alluded to, which is by much too gross for us more particularly to advert to.] He also proposed to the witness, after having asked him whether his master ever gave him leave to go out, to meet him, and go with him to an oyster-shop, at the corner of Mr. Hamby's livery-stables, and said that if he (witness) would consent to certain proposals (the witness here stated those proposals, which we cannot do,) he, the prisoner, would give him a new coat and a 10*l.* note. To get rid of the importunities of the prisoner, witness consented to send to him and let him know what day he could get out; but he never did so, nor had he any idea of performing such a promise. Indeed, after the prisoner was gone, he mentioned to his master the prisoner's proposal; and Mr. Beatle desired him on no account to meet him, or suffer him to enter the shop, and the prisoner did not come afterwards, and he saw nothing more of him.

Mr. Harmer here interfered, and said, that really it was too much to make a disgusting conversation of this kind, if it even did take place, evidence against Mr. Muirhead, and asked the witness if the prisoner had ever attempted to lay hands on him, or take any personal liberties with him.

Witness replied, that he never had; for he would not have permitted him to do so.

The prisoner here exclaimed—"So help me God, I never did. This is a conspiracy against me; and undue means have been used to bring forward this witness."

Mr. Harmer requested Mr. Muirhead to be silent; but he requested in vain; for the prisoner went on talking and laughing, as if in derision of the charge and evidence against him, until Mr. Harmer at last said—"Mr. Muirhead, if you are determined not to be silent, I cannot make you; but unless you are, my attendance must be useless and unnecessary."

Mr. Harmer now submitted, that the evidence of the last witness went for nothing, for he had proved nothing that was cognizable by the magistrates.

Mr. Conant said, that he certainly did understand that this witness could have given very different evidence, and gone much further than he had done; and it seemed to him (Mr. Conant) that some tampering had been used.

Mr. Harmer said, that his client was also of opinion that tampering had been used to bring him forward.

Mr. Conant now observed, that he understood there was a gentleman present who had some other evidence to give respecting the prisoner.

Here Mr. Fores, who keeps a print and caricature shop at the corner of Sackville-street, in Piccadilly, came forward, and said that he had something to state.

Mr. Fores was then sworn, and said, that he has known the prisoner a long time as a most detestable character; he has often observed through his window, at which there is generally collected a crowd of persons, the prisoner made his way gradually through them, until he got close to some youth. (Mr. Fores here described the most scandalous practices on the part of the prisoner.) He (witness) having seen repeated instances of this kind of conduct in the prisoner, thought it his duty to consult two magistrates, to know if he could not have him apprehended for it; but they gave it as their opinion, that Mr. Fores' evidence would not go far enough. Witness has often endeavoured to make the prisoner aware that he knew what he was at, and, if possible, to shame him away from the place, by holding up to his face a print of the Bishop of Clogher; but instead of going away in consequence, he stood and looked at it with the utmost unconcern.

"And is this you Mr. Fores," said the prisoner, "who comes forward against me—a man whom I have patronized, and done material services to?"

"Done me a service," said Mr. Fores; "I would not accept a service at the hand of such a wretch. I believe you once laid out 4*s.* or 5*s.* in prints at my shop, if you call that a service; but you know I know you well, and have seen your practices at my window, with boys, often; and you know that it is as long as 16 years ago—you were the talk of the town. I remember my opposite neighbour, Mr. Lincoln, the hatter, calling out to me one morning, as I stood at my shop door, 'There is that rascal Muirhead gone up the street with a country-looking young boy, that he has just got hold of, along with him:' and I ran as fast as I could after you, but you disappeared."

Mr. Harmer asked when this took place.—Mr. Fores said, two years ago.

Mr. Harmer submitted that it was really too bad to hunt a man down in this way, by detailing circumstances and stories of a man's conduct at such a distance of time.

Mr. Conant said, that although he did not propose to make this evidence against the prisoner, yet he did not think it unfit to have it stated, because until he had heard what Mr. Fores had to say, how could he judge if it were evidence or not? If he (Mr. Conant) were disposed to make all the facts and circumstances stated to him evidence against Mr. Muirhead, he could tell Mr. Harmer that he could trace these practices of the prisoner not to two, but to 20 years back.

"I can speak to 16 years back myself," said Mr. Fores.

Mr. Harmer.—Hold your tongue, Sir.

Mr. Fores.—You provoke one to speak, Sir; it excites a man's indignation to hear any thing said in favour of such a wretch.

Mr. Harmer now said, that he had a proposal, or rather a request to make on the part of his client to the Magistrates, which was that the amount of bail required on the former day should be reduced, as being quite exorbitant and excessive, and far above any bail ever before required for a similar charge. He was also instructed to say that it was entirely out of proportion to the income of Mr. Muirhead.

Prisoner.—It is, Sir, quite out of proportion. I can prove by my rent roll, which I now hold in my hand, that my income, since the failure of my collieries on my estate, does not exceed 2,000*l.* per annum, and on that there are several incumbrances. Besides, it is not likely I should run away. My estate is an entailed one; and if I were to disappear, the next heir would take it, and cut me out altogether.

Mr. Conant said, that he should wish to have some more satisfactory evidence of the prisoner's property than his own bare statement.

Mr. Harmer said, that all Mr. Muirhead wanted was, to reduce the amount of bail to his securities, which at present stood at 2,000*l.* and let his own recognizances remain as it did, or increase it, if the Magistrates thought fit.

After some conversation amongst the Magistrates, Mr. Conant said his present impression was that the bail was not excessive; but he would take a short time to consider, and Mr. Muirhead should have an answer.

Mr. Muirhead said, he felt very much obliged to Mr. Conant, and took that opportunity of thanking him for his kindness, in having better accommodation provided for him in the prison.

Mr. Conant.—You owe me no obligation, Sir; and I can assure you, I feel no disposition to do you any particular act of kindness; but it having been represented to me that you were in a bad state of health, and that the place in which you were confined was damp, I directed that you should be moved to another.

"For which I thank you," said the prisoner. "I am in a very bad state of health: I am labouring under rheumatism and agne, and am in my 72d year."

The prisoner was then removed from the bar: previous to which, however, he said, that since he had been in custody on these unfounded charges, he has had several letters from most respectable persons, ready to come forward to rescue his character: one signed "Humanitas," the contents of which would do honour to human nature, and the writer of which desired an answer to be sent to him at the office of The Morning Post.

After the prisoner was removed from the office, an elderly respectable-looking man, who had been listening attentively to the whole proceeding, came forward, and stated to the Magistrates, that he had lived as steward with Mr. Muirhead about 40 years ago, but he was obliged to quit his service very soon, from practices he observed in Mr. Muirhead at that time, of such a nature, that no man of character could live in his service.

"Forty years ago!" said Mr. Conant, "Why, then, when I said twenty years, I was considerably under the mark."

"Indeed you were, Sir," said the steward.

Mr. Roe asked the steward what he considered Mr. Muirhead's property to be.

He replied, that when he lived with him, (40 years ago) his rental was above 2,000*l.* a-year; and since then several coal-mines have been discovered on the estate. The property is entirely situated near Glasgow, in Scotland, and he never knew of his having any other estate. He may, however, have since made purchases, and he believed he had; for he was a close man, and never spent half of his income.

The prisoner has not as yet given any notice of bail.

VARIETIES.

LORD BYRON'S MONUMENT.

An elegant Grecian tablet of white marble was placed last week in the chancel of Hucknall church. We subjoin a copy of the inscription. The words are in Roman capitals, and divided into lines, as under:

IN THE VAULT BENEATH,
WHERE MANY OF HIS ANCESTORS AND HIS MOTHER ARE BURIED, LIE THE REMAINS OF
GEORGE GORDON NOEL BYRON,
LORD BYRON, OF NOCHDALE,
IN THE COUNTY OF LANCASTER;
THE AUTHOR OF "CHILDE HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE."
HE WAS BORN IN LONDON, ON THE 22D OF JANUARY, 1788.
HE DIED AT MISSOLONGHI, IN WESTERN GREECE, ON THE 19TH OF APRIL, 1824,
ENGAGED IN THE GLORIOUS ATTEMPT TO RESTORE THAT COUNTRY TO HER ANCIENT FREEDOM AND RENOWN.

HIS SISTER, THE HONOURABLE
AUGUSTA MARIA LEIGH,
PLACED THIS TABLET TO HIS MEMORY.

LINEN-DRAPERS' ASSISTANTS.

Tuesday evening a meeting of the Linen-drapers' Assistants was held at the Crown and Anchor, in the Strand, for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of adopting a resolution which had been agreed to by the employers, at a meeting which took place on Friday last at the London Coffee House.

Mr. Biss, one of the body of assistants, having been called to the chair, stated shortly the object for which they were assembled, and after pointing out the hardships and privations to which assistants had been hitherto subjected in consequence of the length of time they were kept to business, recommended strongly the adoption of the resolution previously agreed to by their employers. The purport of the resolution was, that in the months of November, December, January, and February, business was to cease at the hour of seven in the evening; in September, October, March, and April, at eight, and during the other four months, May, June, July, and August, at nine, it being understood that, throughout the year, shops were to continue open an hour later on Saturdays.

After a desultory conversation, in which many of the individuals present expressed a grateful sense of the kindness and liberality of their employers, who had thus consented to abridge the hours of labour, the resolution was agreed to with only two or three dissentient voices.

It was then agreed that a registry office should be established, where the names of assistants might be enrolled, and to which employers might have recourse when they stood in need of them.

The next proposition was, that the assistants should form themselves into a society, and establish a fund. The principal objects to which it is to be applied are, first to assist, at the rate of one guinea per week, such members as may be out of employment, or rendered incompetent from age or infirmity; and secondly, to form a collection of books. Every person admitted a member before the 1st of September next, to pay 10*s.* It was further agreed, that every member who should be found to continue at business after the hours stated in the resolution, was to be fined 5*s.* for the first time, 10*s.* for the second, and if detected a third time, to be expelled, and not to be admitted again unless proposed by two members. Any member discharged by his employer for refusing to work after hours, to be allowed one guinea a week until such time as he could procure another situation.

Thanks having been voted to the master linen-drapers, haberdashers, silk-mercers, &c. &c. assembled on Friday last at the London Coffee-house, and also to the chairman, the meeting broke up at half-past ten.

EXECUTION.

(From the Bury Gazette.)

The execution of John Mann for highway-robbery, was appointed to take place on Wednesday, at twelve o'clock, at Bury. About two o'clock on the morning of that day, the following order was delivered to the gaoler, by a messenger who had left London on the preceding afternoon:

Whitehall, 15th August, 1825.

Sir—I am to acquaint you that the accompanying respite has been granted to John Mann, only with a view to give time for Mr. Secretary Peel's consideration of his case, and that the prisoner must not be led to expect a further suspension of the law.

I am, Sir, your most obedient humble servant,
To the Keeper of the Gaol, Bury St. Edmund's. H. HOBHOUSE.

This respite, it appears, was granted in consequence of a petition having been transmitted from Hadleigh to the Home Secretary, after the announcement of the unsuccessful issue of the application to the Lord Chief Justice by the Rev. J. G. Smith.

In conformity with the little hope held out by the above letter, Mr. Orridge, the gaoler, anxiously impressed upon the prisoner's mind that there was scarcely a possibility of Mr. Peel advising His Majesty to grant a pardon, when made acquainted with the merits of the case. The unfortunate man's hopes were, in consequence, by no means sanguine, and his attention to his religious duties continued as strict as before. On the morning of Friday, however, he watched anxiously from the window of his cell to discover if the coffin, according to custom, was that morning carried into the chapel. He saw that it was, and the faint ember of hope died within him.

TO PARENTS AND GUARDIANS.—Wanted, a stout active LAD, not under 16 years of age, of good address, as an APPRENTICE to a CARVER and GILDER, of many years' establishment; he will be required to go for and take home work: a small premium expected.—For particulars enquire at the Office of this Paper, 343, Catherine-street, Strand.

SULPHATE OF QUININE.—Just Imported, a Fresh Supply of this invaluable Medicine, manufactured by one of the first Chemists in Paris The above Parcel is well worth the attention of Druggists and the Medical Profession in general, as the Importer is but seldom enabled to offer so fine an article on the advantageous terms he can at present.—Apply to J. C. Hose, successor to the late Mr. Kinnard, Druggist, 59 High Holborn.

BURGESS' ESSENCE OF ANCHOVIES, Warehouse, 107, STRAND, Corner of Savoy Steps, London.—JOHN BURGESS and SON, being apprised of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the Original, to observe the Name and Address correspond with the above;—the general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection, J. B. and Son submit the following caution:—Some are in appearance at first sight "Burgess' Essence of Anchovies;"—others "Burgis's," and many more without address.—JOHN BURGESS and SON having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the labels previous to purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.—Burgess' New Sauce for general purposes, having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient sauce—will keep good in all climates.—Warehouse, No. 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy Steps.—The Original Fish Sauce Warehouse.

EMMETT'S QUEEN'S GOLD and SILVER-EYED NEEDLES.—T. GAME.—The Lovers of Game are respectfully invited to try GILBERT'S UNION SAUCE, which he has, after considerable expence, brought to that high state of perfection as must ensure the patronage of the Public, as it imparts such a rich and delicious flavour to every description of Game. GILBERT'S SUPERIOR ESSENCE OF ANCHOVY still continues to merit the attention of the admirers of Fish —Fish Sauce and Italian Warehouse, 451, Strand.

THE BRITISH SPECIFIC, for re-producing and promoting the GROWTH of HAIR.—The principle of its operation is to cool and contract the pores which are opened by a redundancy of heat, occasioning a relaxation of the roots, and render them incapable of retaining the hair; to counteract which nothing is better calculated than the British Specific, as, from its invigorating and oleaginous properties, it almost immediately arrests the falling off, and affords such effectual nourishment to the roots, that persons giving it a fair trial may assure themselves of its speedily restoring it, even where it has become completely bald, however long it may have been so, and, if grey, gradually to restore it to its natural colour. The superiority of this preparation (the invention of a medical man) derives additional recommendation from its being, unlike other compositions for the hair, so extremely clean and agreeable that its application is a real pleasure, and is only requisite to be generally known, to receive the preference of every article in use for similar purposes. To be had only of D. Peden, 15, Burlington Arcade, Piccadilly, in bottles 6s each. or cases of four bottles for 1*l.* forwarded to order, on receiving the amount, post-paid.

No Fees to Coachmen and Guards.

In case of any incivility being experienced by the Passengers travelling by the Company's Coaches, from Servants of the Company, it is particularly requested that prompt notification will be given to the Secretary, as it is the anxious desire of the Company to render all the convenience to the Public in their power: they will therefore feel obliged by any communication or suggestion, which, on any occasion, may be considered deserving of report.
 A GUARD is appointed to each of the Company's Coaches. One regular pace is observed, and no frivolous stoppages allowed on the road; whereby the Company's Coaches are enabled to keep the present fast rate of travelling, without the necessity of any galloping whatever.
By Order of the Directors,
Axe Inn, Aldermanbury. C. BURTON, Secretary.

AMPLE COMMAND OF MONEY.

WHILE one hears this exclamation on every side, Thousands feel the pressure of want, and treat the cry with derision and contempt; perhaps this plentiful command may exist among a few leading capitalists, and city-men may boast of their facilities in creating artificial riches, but they cannot prove that there is a real and general plenty, and the truth of this becomes manifest by the difficulty every person experiences in borrowing money when he applies for it; unless he possesses some government, mercantile, or landed security, of twice the amount in value of the sum required. The advertiser therefore professes to procure loans upon every description of property, and upon terms fairly apportioned to the security offered, and he may be communicated with personally (from 11 to 6), or by letter, post-paid, to Mr. E. H. G. at letter A. No. 8, Carlton Chambers, Regent-street, Pall-mall, St. James's, near Waterloo-place. Applications for sums under 200*l.* cannot be noticed.
N. B. Ladies or Gentlemen possessing large and small sums of Money will find this an eligible opportunity of investing the same; the most profound secrecy may be relied upon.

SODA WATER.—WM. CLARK, No. 21, MAIDEN-LANE, Covent Garden, Soda Water Manufacturer to the Royal Family, most respectfully informs the Nobility, Gentry, and the public in general, that he manufactures the above article of a very superior quality: it is warranted to be free from all metallic impregnations in consequence of its being prepared in glass machinery.—N. B. Superior Jamaica Ginger Beer, and Fine Sparkling Lemonade, (in glass bottles.) They are warranted to keep good to twelve months.

A REAL BLESSING TO MOTHERS.—There is not, perhaps, in the whole Materia Medica any one remedy which so effectually relieves the pain of a suffering patient as the AMERICAN SOOTHING SYRUP. Who can watch the writhing tortures into which a lovely infant is often convulsed during the period of dentition, without feeling sympathy for its sufferings? and who would hesitate to procure a remedy, when a remedy can be found, which is obvious by the effectual relief afforded in so many distressing cases which are daily coming to the notice of Mrs. JOHNSON? Therefore, mothers ought never to be without the American Soothing Syrup in the Nursery; for if a child awakes in the night with pain, by only rubbing the gums with a few drops of the Syrup, it will immediately open the pores, heal the gums, and thereby prevent fevers and convulsions; for should it come in competition with any other disorder, it often destroys the mother's brightest hopes.—To be had wholesail and retail, of Johnson and Co. 28, York-place, City-road; and by their appointment, of all principal Medicine Venders in town and country, at 2*s.* 9*d.* per bottle.—None are genuine, unless signed on the stamp with Mrs. Johnson's own hand-writing, as there are several spurious sorts.

ALL BAD WRITING IMPROVED, at the Royal Systematic and Short-Hand Academy, 104, High Holborn. Whatever may be the age of the Pupil, or his defects; whether the stiffness, formality, and tedious execution, often arising from bad habits in schools, or an effeminate, scrawling, illegible style—in either case, Mr. Lewis will engage positively to remove all defects in a few short and easy Lessons, and enable the Pupil to write a quick and beautiful hand, fit for the Tradesman or the Gentleman.—Short Hand taught in Six Lessons.

SUPERIOR FOOD FOR CHILDREN, INVALIDS, and others.—By the King's Royal Letters Patent.—Of all new introductions in Domestic Economy, none have ever met with more universal approbation than ROBINSON'S PATENT BARLEY AND PATENT GROATS; they completely supersede the use of the common Pearl Barley or Embden Grotts, for a Superior Beverage is produced in Ten Minutes, and at One Half the Expense. These Nutritious Preparations have been submitted to the Medical Profession throughout the United Kingdom, and have met with the most decided approval and recommendation; in fact, many Physicians of the greatest celebrity have declared, that the Patent Preparations of Barley and Groats excel all other articles in use, as a Food for Children, &c. The Patent Barley makes superior Barley Water in Ten Minutes, and is infinitely better than the common Barley for thickening Veal, Mutton, and other Broths: it is also in the highest repute for making a most delicious Pudding or Custard. The Patent Groats produce in Ten Minutes an excellent, smooth, and delicate Gruel, which, owing to the Patent mode of preparation, will never turn sour on the stomach.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

CHESTER.

Peter Morgan was put to the bar, charged with the wilful murder of Sampson Phillips, at Macclesfield, on the 5th of April, by stabbing him with a red-hot poker.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL (Mr. Hill) told the Jury, that the prisoner was indicted along with a person of the name of Francis Johnstone, who had absconded, for the murder of a man called Sampson Phillips. He was bound, however, to tell them, that though the prisoner was indicted for murder, the offence which he had committed amounted in point of law not to murder, but only to manslaughter. They would, however, see from the facts which he should detail to them, that it was manslaughter committed under very aggravated circumstances. The Learned Gentleman here stated the details of the case, as he afterwards proved them in evidence by the following witnesses:—

Joseph Gregory.—I keep the Union public-house, at the Dams, Macclesfield. On the night of Tuesday, the 5th of April, I was disturbed by a great noise made by two men fighting. I was not quite undressed at the time, so I came down stairs, and went out of my back door into the crowd. The names of the two men fighting were Madden and Christopher. They were both strangers to me. Shortly afterwards Sampson Phillips and the prisoner came out of their respective houses. I saw them fighting, as well as the other two men. I saw a man of the name of Francis Johnstone in the crowd. I then left the crowd, and went to my own brewhouse corner. Phillips and the prisoner were still fighting when I left them. By my brewhouse corner there is an entry, which leads to the house where the prisoner and Johnstone lodged. Johnstone ran past me, and entered into his own back door. I followed him, in consequence of the haste with which he ran. The door of the house was fast, and he called out repeatedly for the people in the house to open it. He said, "If they did not open it, he would break it down" He got into the house. I saw him come out of it with a poker in his hand, which was red hot. He took it with him amongst the crowd to the place where the prisoner and Phillips were fighting. I followed him to the outside of the crowd, but I did not go into it. I did not see to whom Johnstone gave the poker. Very soon after Johnstone got into the crowd, I heard a man make a moan.

Cross-examined.—There was great confusion and scuffling at that time and place. I did not see Johnstone part with the poker at all. The moan was made almost directly after Johnstone entered the crowd. I charged Johnstone as being the man who had so ill-treated Phillips. I made the charge against him that night, and he absconded the next morning. I knew Johnstone well. He is very like the prisoner in size, gesture, complexion, height, lustiness, and voice. He is not like him in feature. There were about 50 persons present at this row. It was quite moonlight.

John Martin.—I know the prisoner at the bar by his whiskers. I lived at the time of this disturbance within 100 yards from his lodgings, but I did not know him before that time. I did not see the prisoner fighting with anybody. I did not see Johnstone do anything. I saw two Irishmen fighting; George Madden was the name of one of them; the name of the other I did not know. I knew the deceased Sampson Phillips. I do not know what he was doing, as I did not see him till he was down on the ground. I did not pick him up. I laid hold of the poker. I believe the prisoner was the man from whom I took it. He was stooping at the time, and it appeared to me that he had it in the body of the deceased. The poker was hot at the time. I burnt my hands by laying hold of it. I did not wrest the poker from the prisoner. It was so hot that I was obliged to let go my hold of it. I have no doubt that the prisoner was the man from whom I took the poker. My reason for thinking so is, that that man had red sandy whiskers, and the prisoner has red sandy whiskers too. Nobody but me laid hold of the man with the poker.

Cross-examined.—I took no notice of the man's features. I only noticed his whiskers. The mischief was done to the deceased before I saw him. The prisoner was prizing with the poker in the body of the deceased when I went up. There was considerable confusion whilst this was doing. The next time I saw the prisoner, was at Mr. Clulow's office, when he was under charge, within a few days afterwards.

By the COURT.—There has been no alteration in the prisoner's whiskers since that disturbance.

George Wheeler.—I saw two men fighting on the night of the 5th of April. Madden was one of the fighters: the other was a stranger. I saw Sampson Philips on that night, by the house where he got his wound. I saw prisoner before that time. He came up to me whilst the men were fighting, and I said to him, "Let the men have fair-play, whether they be Irish or English." He seemed to be in a rage, and he gave me a challenge. Whilst Morgan and I were speaking, Sampson Phillips came up, and said something to Morgan. At the same time Francis Johnstone stepped up, and flew at Phillips. I believe Johnstone struck Phillips, but I lost sight of Phillips and Johnstone. Morgan, the prisoner, stopped with me for about two or three minutes, and then went away suddenly, as I thought, among the crowd Phillips and Johnstone had gone towards the same place, or somewhere thereabouts. I lost sight then of all three for some little time. The next I saw was Francis Johnstone, standing on my left hand. I then went a bit among the crowd, and I saw the deceased lying on his back. I saw the prisoner making two or three attempts to stab Sampson Phillips, but I can't say what with. I looked like a stick or a poker. I saw John Martin, the last witness, attempt to get the weapon away from the prisoner, but he left loose suddenly, saying, "it was so hot." John Martin challenged the prisoner with having a hot poker, but I do not recollect the exact words he used. The prisoner denied having any weapon at all, and then ran away. Johnstone was standing by me at the time whilst the prisoner was stabbing the deceased.

Cross-examined.—What are you? A man. (A laugh.) What else? A weaver in a small ware way at Macclesfield. This riot lasted an hour or more. I was neither joining in it nor preventing it. I did not say that the prisoner used a poker before the coroner. I said that I did not know what the weapon was. I felt an unpleasant smell when the prisoner struck the deceased with that weapon; it was like the smell of burnt flesh. I have no ill-will towards the Irish. I wish England and Ireland both well. I have never said that I bore ill-will to the Irish. I feel equal philanthropy towards the natives of both countries.

Mr. John Fleet.—I am a surgeon at Macclesfield. On the evening of the 6th of April last, I was called in to see the deceased. I found him sitting by the fire-side very ill. I desired him to undress himself. He did so. I found the scrotum swelled, and an oblique wound passing through the left side of it backwards into the perinæum. It was upwards of an inch in depth and in circumference; but it was surrounded by a whitish appearance originating from the instrument with which it was inflicted. From what I saw, the wound in my judgment must have been inflicted by a heated instrument. A red-hot poker would have inflicted such a wound I attended the deceased from the evening of the 6th of April till the 22nd of May, when he died. I attended him twice a day. The wound I have described was the cause of his death undoubtedly.

Cross-examined.—The wound affected his constitution. The topical wound produced an affection of the constitution, which caused his death. The deceased died of exhaustion, produced by the wound. There was the mark of but one injury in the person of the deceased. I consider a wound in the perinæum a dangerous, but I will not say a mortal wound. It would not necessarily produce death: but if is probable that it would. If there had been three or four stabs made at the deceased's person with a heated poker, I must have seen them; but I did not see any such thing.

By the COURT. From the appearance of the wound, there must have been some force employed in the infliction of it. I think the wound must have been inflicted by a thrust. There was a mark of another thrust on the trowsers of the deceased.

John Upton, called by the prosecution, but examined only by the prisoner's counsel, Mr. D. F. JONES.—I am the constable who seized the prisoner. I seized him on the Tuesday. I took the prisoner to the bedside of the deceased on the 15th of April by order of the magistrates. I asked the sick man in the presence of the prisoner, whether it was the prisoner who wounded him? He said that he thought it was not, because he was the man with whom he (the deceased) had fought. The deceased said that he did not know that he was stabbed at the time. He conceived that somebody had grasped him. The prisoner said to the deceased that he was innocent. I have been a constable two years. I did not purposely give the prisoner an opportunity of escaping. I did not know where he was, whilst he was at Bollington, but he came to me. He behaved as properly as a man could do whilst he was in my custody.

This was the case for the prosecution.

The prisoner, when called upon for his defence, solemnly protested his innocence.

Joseph Walton.—I live at Macclesfield. I saw this disturbance from my own door. I saw a poker in the hands of Johnstone. I heard him say "Clear the way" He then ran into the crowd. I saw him give a run with it at the deceased. He appeared to me to be stabbing at him. I heard a cry out immediately. I saw the poker run into the deceased. At that time the prisoner was on the ground at a distance of two or three yards from the deceased. The prisoner did not touch the poker. Johnstone was dressed in a light fustian jacket, but the prisoner was stripped. I know nothing of the prisoner at all.

Cross-examined.—There was a great crowd of about 100 persons about the fighters. When Johnstone came with the poker, he cleared the people away from the fighters, so that I could see them. Though I saw Johnstone stabbing at the man, I never called out to him not to murder the man. I have been before in a court of justice. I was at Knutsford because 4*l.* was missing out of the shop in which I worked, and a person was ill-natured enough to say that I had taken it. My master's name was Wordsworth. I should not like to swear that I never confessed to my master that I had taken it.

Re-examined.—I was tried at Knutsford on this charge, and was acquitted of it.

Alfred Lubbock.—I live at the Dams. I am not a Catholic, nor a Methodist, nor a Presbyterian. The disturbance took place at my door. I saw Johnstone come past me with a red-hot poker. I did not hear him say any thing. I saw him go into the crowd, and afterwards heard a shriek. I did not see what Johnstone did with the poker. The prisoner was down on the ground when Johnstone went into the crowd. I know nothing of the prisoner, He is a stranger to me.

Cross-examined.—I never got into the ring where the parties were fighting. I stood at my own door. I did not see Sampson Phillips at all in the crowd.

Re-examined.—The people moved quickly out of the way when they saw the red-hot poker.

The CHIEF JUSTICE summed up the evidence, and left it to the jury to decide whether the wound of which the deceased had died had been inflicted by Johnstone or the prisoner. If they were of opinion that it was inflicted by Johnstone, they would acquit the prisoner; but if they thought that it was inflicted by the prisoner, then they must find the prisoner guilty of manslaughter, since the offence, as proved by the evidence, did not amount to murder, but only to manslaughter.

The Jury returned a verdict of Not Guilty.

MONDAY, AUGUST 29.

MANSLAUGHTER.

William Johnson was indicted for the manslaughter of Nathan Johnson.

It appeared that a quarrel had taken place between the parties at Diceley on the 8th of June. In the midst of it the prisoner was down, and pulled the deceased upon him, and by a violent exertion he threw him over his head; he got up, and complained of being very seriously injured. After this he got up again and challenged the deceased to fight, who declined, saying he was very ill. He a second time challenged him further on in the evening; and at last a battle ensued, in which the deceased was thrown against a hedge bank, and, before he was firm upon his legs again, the prisoner kicked him violently in the stomach and the lower part of the belly.

James Allen was called, and proved the several facts of the case.

Other witnesses were examined.

James Yates was called for the defence.—He said he witnessed the quarrel from the beginning. He stated that the mother of the deceased called out to the prisoner, and said, "If thou bites him, I'll kill thee." She encouraged him to fight, and insisted on his stripping off his shirt, observing, that her son could beat the prisoner in two minutes. They both met together with a kick. It was mutual kicking.

The Surgeon was re-called and examined by the Court—Is not a rupture sometimes occasioned by excessive exertion?—No, my Lord. What! have you not seen numerous cases of poor people in the Hospitals with ruptures, occasioned by straining? I never saw such cases, my Lord, in the same way as the prisoner's. I have come here 50 miles, and I wish to know who is to pay me? CHIEF JUSTICE—You'll be paid by the public. How much? CHIEF JUSTICE—You'll be paid what is proper, what you deserve. Judge WILSON—You'll be paid according to the judgment you display in ruptures! ATTORNEY-GENERAL—I can assure you, my Lord, we have had great trouble in getting the Surgeon here at all.

The Jury found the prisoner Guilty.

In passing sentence, Judge JERVIS observed that it had been proved he had received a challenge, and that the mother of the deceased excited him to fight. His conduct however had been very cruel and culpable; and the Court were determined, if possible, to put an end to that brutal mode of fighting; but in consequence of the length of time he had already been imprisoned, the sentence would not be so severe as it otherwise would have been. He was then sentenced to be imprisoned to hard labour in the House of Correction for three calendar months.

Prisoner—Thank you, my Lord.

CUTTING AND MAIMING.

William Brooks, aged 33, was indicted for having, on the night of the 2d of April, wilfully and maliciously stabbed and cut Margaret, the wife of John Rhodes, with intent to do her some grievous bodily harm.

Although the interest of this case was of a very trifling nature, the facts were, nevertheless, of a very aggravated description. It appeared there had been a quarrel among the parties, in the course of which the prisoner, who stated he had been struck by the prosecutrix with the edge of a patten (which, by the bye, was not proved in evidence), became very much enraged, and in the midst of the tumult, Margaret Rhodes was cut by the prisoner on the spine, shoulder, neck, and other parts, with a sharp instrument, which, the prisoner wished to make appear, was a spur he then had accidentally in his hand.

The Surgeon proved the nature of the wounds; and the prisoner produced testimony of rather an equivocal description in his defence.

The CHIEF JUSTICE, in summing up the evidence, said that the Jury would consider whether the prisoner contemplated, at the time he struck her, doing her some grievous bodily harm. He was of opinion there was a strong case against him. It was not necessary that the wound should be of such a description that death might ensue in order to make out the charge, and he thought there could be little doubt but that the object of the prisoner was to do her some bodily injury. It was proved that the wounds were of such a nature that she could not attend on the Magistrates to undergo an examination.

The Jury immediately returned a verdict of Guilty.

The CHIEF JUSTICE—Let him be put down for the present. I shall not now pass sentence. I can hold out but little hope for him.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

MANSION-HOUSE.—ROBBERY AT THE AUCTION MART.—On Saturday, J. Palin, a man of venerable appearance, who has been privately examined before the Lord Mayor several times, upon a charge of having stolen a Bank of England note for 1,000*l.*, from the person of a gentleman of large fortune, in the Auction Mart, was publicly examined in the Justice Room. Mr. Hobler, jun., appeared as Solicitor for the prosecution; Mr. Adolphus and Mr. Harmer attended as Counsel and Solicitor for the prisoner.

Mr. Robertson (the prosecutor) an elderly gentleman, deposed as follows:—I went to the Auction Mart on the 8th of November, intending to bid for an estate of considerable magnitude, and I took with me a sum of money, understanding that a deposit of 20 per cent. on the purchase money would be required. I had about me 9,600*l.* in bank notes, which I had received for a cheque of Marsden and Co., on Sir Peter Poole and Co.; I did not look at the numbers of the notes, but at the amount. I had the notes of Mr. Marsden, jun., who went to get me the money, which he brought to me in nine 1,000*l.* notes. When I received the bank notes I folded them up in a piece of paper, and put them in my left-hand trowser's pocket. Before the sale commenced, the auctioneer stated that the deposit required was not so much as had been given to understand it was. The estate was knocked down to me, and I had to pay no more than 5,618*l.* as a deposit, which I paid in five 1,000*l.*, a 500*l.*, and a 100*l.* note, and my cheque for 18*l.* 15s., making up together the amount of the deposit and of the auction duty. I put those notes into the hands of Mr. Robins' clerk, and they were the same that I had received from Mr. Marsden, jun. There remained in my possession four 1,000*l.* notes, and those I put up, I think, in the same paper in which I had folded the whole before I entered the Auction Mart, and returned them to the same pocket.

The LORD MAYOR—"Was this done in the open Mart, so that you could be seen?"

Mr. Robertson—It was at the table in the open room; I was perfectly open to observation. After the business was settled, I prepared to depart; the room was crowded, and I had my great coat on my arm, not being able to get it on at the top of the room; on proceeding to the door, I felt considerable obstruction, and I exclaimed, I think, "Why do you obstruct me?" I did not know exactly how, but I found that I was greatly pressed by the people. When, however, I got to the end of the room, and felt for my notes, I found they were gone. It immediately occurred to me that my pocket had been picked while I was endeavouring to get through the crowd, but I still thought the notes had worked out as I struggled through the crowd, and I retraced my steps, looking on the ground as I went along, but I saw nothing. Upon returning I found no obstruction whatever; so that I considered it quite clear that my pocket had been picked. I then went, accompanied by a gentleman, to the Bank, and did all that was necessary towards stopping the payment of the notes.

Mr. ADOLPHUS—Look at the gentleman at the bar, and tell me whether you have any idea that you saw him at the Auction Mart on that day?

Mr. Robertson—"Certainly not. I have not the slightest idea that I saw him. I never saw him to my knowledge before I saw him here."

Mr. Robert Clarke Marsden deposed, that the cheque alluded to by Mr. Robertson had been paid by the firm to that gentleman on the 11th of November. Witness went to the banking-house of Sir Peter Pole and Co. for Mr. Robertson, and received for him the amount, which he delivered to him.

Mr. Thomas Clifton, clerk to Sir Peter Poole, proved the payment of the cheque in bank notes, which he enumerated. Amongst them was No. 302, for 1,000*l.* It was proved by other evidence, that the note No. 302 was one of those which Mr. Robertson was robbed of at the Auction Mart.

Mr. Cope, the Marshal, deposed, that a warrant against Mr. Palin having been issued, he went to that person's house, at No. 62, Holborn-bridge, and in a bureau in the parlour found the bank note 302. No other note was there. John Forrester, the officer, took it out of a book in his presence.

Mr. Robertson—"That is one of the notes that ought to have been in my possession, after I paid the deposit."

Mr. ADOLPHUS—"Mr. Cope, did you not go afterwards to the prisoner, by the direction of his sister, to a place where he was sitting, amongst his friends?" Mr. Cope—"I did."

Mr. ADOLPHUS—"And did he not request to be allowed to sit another hour with his friends, after which he accompanied you?" Mr. Cope—"Certainly he did."

John Forrester deposed, that he found the bank-note cut up in two parts, and placed in different pieces of paper.

The LORD MAYOR—"Mr. Palin, you have heard the circumstances which have been stated against you: perhaps, you can satisfactorily account for the possession of this note?" Mr. Palin—"My Lord, I feel so embarrassed, under the disgraceful charge made against me, that I feel myself under the necessity of submitting the whole of the case to my Counsel."

Mr. ADOLPHUS—My Lord, I submit that there is nothing against my client in the evidence brought before you. In order to make this case within the rules of evidence, it is necessary to prove that Mr. Palin had the property in his possession soon after the loss of it; but here nothing like recent possession has been proved."

The LORD MAYOR—"According to that argument, a person who steals a bank-note has only to lock it up for a few months to be exonerated from all suspicion of the theft."

Mr. ADOLPHUS—"There are no suspicious circumstances attending the discovery of the note in Mr. Palin's possession. He is a man in an extensive line of business. If he kept a small chandler's shop, and there appeared to be a wish of concealment, or an inclination to keep out of the way, it would have been a different thing."

The LORD MAYOR—"He is asked whether he can explain satisfactorily for the possession of this note, and he immediately refers me to his Counsel or his Solicitor. Am I to consider that as a test of his innocence?"

Mr. A.—"He says he is embarrassed."

The LORD MAYOR—"When an innocent man is charged with having stolen a 1,000*l.* note, it is natural to expect that he will be as anxious as possible to give all the information in his power on the subject, to acquit himself."

Mr. ADOLPHUS—"Suppose he had won it at play, he might not wish to expose that fact. Suppose a friend, who was bankrupt, had given it to him to keep, he might not wish to state that fact."

The LORD MAYOR—"It is natural to suppose that he would mention either of these facts rather than lie under the imputation of being a thief."

Mr. ADOLPHUS—"Well, I am not obliged to account for the manner in which I got the watch now in my pocket. The other party must prove that I stole it, if I am charged with having got it dishonestly."

The Lord Mayor—"It is rather odd, you must admit, that a person directly charged with a robbery of so serious a nature should call upon his legal advisers to account for the possession."

Mr. HARMER—"We say we have received it from Paris, and the prosecutor has no right to make the inquiry."

Mr. HOBLER, jun.—"The prisoner has already answered the question in private. His statement, which is entirely contradictory, is taken down, and the Lord Mayor can have it if he pleases, upon the oath of the Chief Clerk.

The LORD MAYOR desired that the Chief Clerk should be sworn.

The Chief Clerk then read the statement made by Palin privately. It mentioned, without saying a word about the person by whom it had been originally handed to Palin, that he (Palin) had brought it over here from Paris; and it contradicted that assertion, by stating that a female at Paris had transmitted it to him, and that he had given 25,000 francs for it, although he was told it was a stolen note by the person from whom he had purchased it.

The LORD MAYOR said he should commit the prisoner for the robbery.

Mr. ADOLPHUS requested that the prisoner might be allowed to remain at the Compter until the result of an application to the Chief Justice to admit him to bail should be known.

The LORD MAYOR consented, and the prisoner was fully committed for trial.

BOW-STREET.—Monday, a man named Mitchell, a groom, in the service of a Gentleman of the name of Powell, residing in Nightingale-lane, Clapham, appeared according to an undertaking, which, it was alleged, he had entered into, to answer the complaint of William Thomas, one of the horse-patrol, who made the following statement:—On Saturday night last he (the patrol) was on duty on the Dulwich-road, when he saw the defendant riding a very valuable horse, which was wanting a shoe, and which seemed to have been over-ridden: he stopped him, and asked who and what he was, and to whom the horse belonged; and he replied in a short and rather surly tone, that his horse was his master's, and that he was going to take it home to his gating this report, I trust your sense of justice will prompt you to grant the like facility to its contradiction, by your obedient servant, 4, Red Lion-passage, Fleet-street, Aug. 27. A. J. VALPY.

together with a long letter from the solicitors to the concern, upon which the sagacious "leading Journal" writes an article, beginning thus: "We insert two letters on the subject of the 'British and Foreign Paper Company,' from parties who have each acquired at our hands a right to that species of attention: one is from Mr. A. J. VALPY, of Red Lion-passage, Fleet-street; the real Mr. VALPY, who disclaims all concern with the joint Stock project, to which a name precisely like his own has been affixed. It gratifies us to have any means of pointing out the difference between A GENUINE AND A spurious ARTICLE, whether it be a piece of news, a pound of sugar, or a Joint Stock director." The termination of this paragraph, no doubt, convulsed all Blackfriars and Cheapside, and the "wit of the Times" was echoed from Printing-house Yard to the Royal Exchange, and God knows its wit is something astonishing; but our readers may perhaps differ with us, when we inform them that the "real Mr. Valpy" the Cockney flounders about, is no Mr. Valpy at all; and that "gratified" as this paper is, "to point out the difference between a genuine and a spurious article," it had not that gratification on the present occasion, for the letter above quoted, turned out to be a forgery, as the following, in their next day's publication, fully proves:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir—You can readily imagine my surprise on my arrival in town this morning, on seeing a letter signed with my name in your paper of this day, which is the most outrageous as well as INSIDIOUS forgery that can well be penned. I am, however, somewhat satisfied, from my knowledge of the parties connected with your paper, that you will feel equally interested with myself in detecting the author of such a fraud. I have never had reason to withdraw my name from the projected Company; nor shall I as long as I feel that the fairest chance is held out of paying the shareholders a considerable interest for their advances. I have no wish, on the present occasion, to answer any observation of your own on the prospects of the Company, because, as a Director, I should of course be only considered as an interested advocate; but you may be assured that I would not lend my name to any Company whose pretensions I had reason even to suspect. I do not wish to answer your correspondents who consider the Company's proceedings a job, unless they will sign their names, in which case the public who have desired or written for shares, would best judge whether they would place most confidence in them or the Directors attached to the Company. The party or parties who are accessory to the EXTRAORDINARY forgery of my name, have given the best proof that they have a well-founded fear of the success of the Company. I have no idea that the "Paper Company" will ruin any existing stationer, but I do hope (and I feel it, as a great consumer of paper) that such an association may be the means of checking the known practice of using plaster of Paris, &c. in such quantities as to render the paper perishable in a very few years. If I can effect this in any degree, I shall be glad, but I have no wish to enter more on this subject.

Trusting, Sir, that you will assist me in detecting the forgery practised on you to day, believe me that I shall, if successful, consign the perpetrator to that just infamy which he deserves.

I am, your's truly, A. J. VALPY.
Red Lion-court, Fleet-street, August 29.

The reason probably why the Cockney scribe could not, in this instance, "point out the difference between a genuine and a SPURIOUS article," is, because it was not a pound of sugar—as it happened to refer both to "a piece of news, and a joint stock director:"—it really makes one sneeze at such stultified presumption.

In addition to this extraordinary instance, we find in the same day's paper these two letters:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir—Your Statement respecting the Lower Rhine Steam Company, in which my name is held forth to the public in a very questionable shape, is, in the most important particulars, wholly false. Whoever may be your correspondent, I trust his word is not more credible than mine. It is stated, that we edified the public by informing them that receipts would be issued on pink, instead of yellow paper. No such notice was issued either by us or with our knowledge. It is to be hoped, then, in future, you will be careful how you mix up the names of people of respectability with the transactions of swindlers on the Stock Exchange. Your's respectfully, Borough Bank, Aug. 27. H. WESTON.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir—I have just seen an anonymous paragraph in your paper of the 18th instant, insinuating that I have compromised some of the rights belonging to my situation at Westminster Abbey, in order to secure a stipulated salary; and I take the earliest opportunity of requesting you to inform the public that the insinuation is a falsehood.

I am your humble servant,
THOMAS GREATOREX.
Newton, near Burton-upon-Trent, Staffordshire, Aug. 26.

Upon a review of such unprecedented and apparently wilful misrepresentations, we are induced to hope the parties so grossly maligned will investigate the matter much more closely than by the mere insertion of a letter; for although we profess to be no friends of any temporary speculations, and are not prepared to say how far the ones in question may be respectable or not, we nevertheless think that the persons representing them are not to be arraigned by an ignorant journalist, who, from accident or circumstance, has the power of influencing the minds of many; whereas, when his real talents become displayed, he should be at once divested of this power, and laughed at for such an idle and audacious manner of filling his columns.

LINES

Sent by LORD ARTHUR HILL to MRS. COUTTS with the present of an ALBUM.

Fair lady! at thy beauty's shine
I lay this gift with bended knee,
In hopes, that some empassioned line
Its leaves may fold, will speak of me.
And, knowing Cupid's many a whim,
Oh, when thou woo'st that roving elf,
Cherish the memory of him
Who sends this semblance OF HIMSELF!!!

ALARMING INTELLIGENCE.

INCLEDON has avowed his intention of quitting Brighton FOR EVER, in consequence of some neglect that he has met with!—Morning Chronicle, Wednesday.

What will become of Brighton after this, we do not pretend even to surmise. HIS MAJESTY'S withdrawing from that place is at once accounted for.

GRANGE, the fellow who keeps the Barley-Mow public house, was admitted to bail on Tuesday—one of his securities is a man by the name of GRIFFIN, a miserable barber on Snow Hill, and the other, a person of respectability, at Bethnal Green. We shall not enter into any examination at present of the one or the other, but shall recommend our "unwashed artificers" to be particularly careful at what shop they get shaved at for the future. A wretch by the name of SIMPSON has been this week fully committed for trial, for the COMMISSION of this ENORMITY, and JOHN GROSSET MUIRHEAD, who, in addition to his other distinctions and titles, is A MEMBER OF THE SOCIETY for the suppression of VICE, and a Director of the Auxiliary BIBLE Society, of St. George's in the Fields, remains, thank God, yet IN CUSTODY.

THEATRICALS.

The successful career of Tarrare terminated on Wednesday, owing to the secession of BRAHAM and MISS PATON, who are gone to the HEREFORD MUSIC MEETING, and the engagement of MATTHEWS. The annual departure of BRAHAM, bringing us nearer to the period when he must make his final departure, causes us a variety of feelings it is not an easy matter to get rid of, because as the most enchanting vocalist England ever possessed, we have to encounter the fear of what we shall lose, besides the regrets for all we have lost; for whether as respects the compass or the management of voice, the taste of execution, the articulation of delivery, or the science of performance, he throws every other predecessor or cotemporary into the deepest shade. Mr. BRAHAM'S singing is the very soul, the very genius of acting; and although as a performer of words and actions he is among the worst, yet as a performer acting in his SINGING, he is equal to any actor that ever lived—the execution of his bravuras is on a par in effect with the greatest effort of the greatest tragedian, and his pathetic ballads breathe a sensibility that no actor we can remember ever could impart; he is a consummate artist, and years must pass on, seasons will roll away, ere you can hope to "look upon his like again." As the thing is now over, we may venture to say that the only eye-sore of this fine Opera was the ballet, for in the same proportion that the Lyceum could surpass every theatre in its SINGERS, every theatre could surpass the Lyceum in its dancers. Mr. COOPER has appeared at this theatre in the Knight of Snowdown, a piece which admits of all that rank in which a pretty good voice, no very great understanding ("as we guess") and a pair of straight legs so often induce this gentleman to indulge. We heard BALL HUGHES say his RODERICK Dhu, was "a regular do," but we do not agree with HUGHES; Cooper is too respectable to fail in any thing. Mr. COOKE, of whose singing with BRAHAM in Tarrare, such a flourish appeared in Wednesday's Post, plays the Fitzjames; and if Mr. COOKE, who is no doubt alarmed at this additional accomplishment, will pardon us for saying, we do not think he has much "music in his soul," we will answer for it that, in point of melodramic action, and stage disposition, he has no rival living. It doth appear unto us, that Mr. PARKINS has a notion he is an actor, which is exemplified in the forced emphasis he attaches to the most trifling passage; we have a notion he is not, preferring much his musical attainments. "MISS KELLY'S pupils" do not improve upon acquaintance, which is a further verification of our former remarks. The preparation of this Drama is in the same excellent style which characterizes every thing coming under Mr. ARNOLD'S own surveillance; who, as we have previously said, is the most competent man at present in the controul of a London Theatre. Mr. MATTHEWS'S return will be commented upon next week.

At the HAYMARKET we have had a little more of Manager MORRIS'S buffoonery, in the production of Inkle and Yarico. MADAME VESTRIS in Wolski reminded us of nothing but HOOK'S joke in Sayings and Doings—"that she shone in all the brilliancy of DAY and MARTIN'S"—to blacken a fair lady in any character, is an ungracious office—and one who can look so beautiful as VESTRIS, we never wish to see look black on us again.—With the remembrance of the inimitable MISS KELLY, in Yarico, to allude to MISS P. GLOVER would be to mention the most perfect and imperfect personation of this interesting character—we really cannot imagine what that blockhead DAW means, by putting this poor little child in characters she cannot comprehend—her talented mother, who knows so much better, ought to set DAVID to rights. FARREN'S "Curry" was not palatable: and, with the exception of HARLEY, in Trudge, who was a lively contrast to the insipidity of the rest, we must have shared the fate of our next box neighbour, Mr. ROGERS, who, waking from a rosy slumber, enquired what the piece was? and on being told Inkle and Yarico, exclaimed, "The Sleeping Draught, you mean." Of Mr. POOLE'S comedy, now in rehearsal, report speaks very highly—he is one of the first of living dramatists; and his genius may perhaps keep this unhappy little theatre, and its wretched conductor in some order.

We have read, with a degree of disgust and laughter, the addresses copied from the Liverpool and Manchester papers, said to have been spoken in the theatres of those towns, by KEAN. We give them, as an imperishable record of this sad mountebank:

"This tribute of your approbation, Ladies and Gentlemen, is too strong and too gratifying to my feelings, to allow me to pass it over in silence, especially at the moment when I am about to quit my country [No, no! Kean, you shall not leave us.] Yes, my countrymen, I leave England. It is now to no purpose to recur to past events; they cannot be justified, nor do I attempt to do so; but I have been most cruelly persecuted. I am driven from my country, and—I speak it to the breasts of Englishmen—from my domestic peace, and 'tis the press that has done it [tremendous uproar, and cries of Curse the Courier]. All that power, influence, and money [No, no! from several voices] could do, was arrayed against me, to blast my reputation for ever. [Bravo, Kean, they have failed in their attempts.] Throughout the Kingdom, my reception has been most gratifying to my feelings, for it is the characteristic of the British public to shield a persecuted individual from oppression [great applause.] At the moment when the conspiracy against me was at the height, and when every nerve was strained to excite a prejudice against me, a Manchester audience received me into their bosom; and to them is due a large portion of the debt of gratitude which I owe to the British public in general, for the degree of professional reputation which I enjoy, and the independence which their generous patronage has conferred upon me [immense cheering] If the private characters of professors, my countrymen, be taken as the measure of the estimation in which they are to be held by the public, your Arts must be neglected [bravo, true, true!]. In every class of society, we find that all are not perfect. We know that some Bishops are not free from reproach [applause and disapprobation]. Statesmen are not all immaculate; and if we may presume to approach the foot of the throne itself, we should perhaps discover some blemishes [applause and disapprobation]. I take my leave of you, at least for some years. I am, indeed, your froward child; but I trust that, having expiated my offence, I may claim forgiveness at the hands of my kind friends and benefactors [bravo!]; and if I should ever return, I trust it will be with renewed health and strength, to enable me again to bask in the sunshine of your approbation"—Manchester Mercury.

THEATRE-ROYAL.—We noticed in our last that Mr. Kean appeared here on Monday in the character of Richard the Third. He has since played Othello, Sir Giles Overreach, Macbeth, and for his benefit on Friday last, King Richard the Second, with the youthful Baron Willinghurst, in Of Age To-Morrow. At the end of the farce there was a call for Mr. Kean, and, after some little time had elapsed, he made his appearance, and was received with the most enthusiastic applause. He then addressed the audience nearly as follows:

"I should be lost to every feeling of sensibility if I did not most respectfully thank you for this expression of kindness. At this moment, when I am about to leave my country, perhaps for ever (loud cries of no, no!) such an exhibition of your feelings is of particular value to me. Driven as I am from England by the machinations of scoundrels, by a combination of ruffians, who seem determined to destroy me, I receive, on the eve of my departure, the highest gratification from what I now see. No absence, no contumely, no sorrow—none of the numerous indignities to which professional men, in all countries, are obliged to submit—will ever efface from my mind the gratitude I feel to my countrymen."—Liverpool Courier.

If gratitude to the PRESS, which alone made him even a respectable actor, had not prompted him to withhold this tirade, policy ought to have done it; for exclusive of losing that aid for ever, he of course calls down its present vengeance on his wretched folly. As far as a joke goes, there cannot be a better than KEAN'S telling the Manchester people, that he is "driven from his country and his domestic peace," because no one ever heard of Mrs. Cox being domestic before; but this is even increased, in another point of view, by a man lately convicted, in a public court, of adultery, talking of being "driven from domestic peace"—this is nonsense in all its altitudes! KEAN'S domestic peace! but there is more "goodly stuff toward," when he says, that "throughout the kingdom his reception has been most gratifying"—as of course it must be this "gratifying reception" which has "driven him from his domestic peace." He further on says: "if the private characters of professors, my countrymen! ! ! (why CICERO was a fool to this man) be taken as the measure of the estimation in which they are to be held by the public, your arts must be neglected." KEAN appears to think that there is an intimate connexion between blackguardism and good acting, since he fancies the arts, or in other words acting, must decline, if actors come to behave tolerably: but the idea of such a worthless mummer as this fellow, such a sheer buffoon, styling himself professor, really sickens one beyond bearing. In the progress of the harangue, KEAN so far lost sight of all decency to the world, of all self-respect, as to compare himself to one of the worst characters that ever lived. "Your Bishops," said this man, "are not free from reproach;"—a nasty, fallen, most degraded being! And in conclusion, we will only observe, that by way of palliating his own faults, he had the audacity to say, that "if we approach the foot of the throne, we shall find errors." An itinerant player, an outcast from all moral society, a mere tumbler arrayed in fine rags and tinsel, having the presumption to arraign the character of his SOVEREIGN, before his people, under whose especial patronage and royal pleasure, he "lives and moves and has his being;" it is as well "he is driven from his domestic peace," or the VAGRANT ACT would have been put in force. We have only to add that KEAN, after spouting some nonsense about basking in the sunshine of Manchester cotton-spinners! retired, very consistently, amidst BRAVOES!!

On dit that Covent Garden has re-engaged MRS. CHATTERLEY for three years, and discarded, as we said before, MISS FOOTE, as the notoriety of the former has increased, and that of the latter diminished.—But these managers should pause, ere they commit so unparalleled an outage on public good nature. Sympathy and pity might be shown (however justly or unjustly matters not) for the one,—but for the other, what palliation can the avowed Mistress of a man about to be tried for breach of trust and embezzlement find, who has been supported on the strength of this ill-gotten wealth?—"A MILLWOOD, yea a MILLWOOD come to judgment." But enough of this disgusting subject, which we shall only renew should the effrontery of the lady compel us to do so. We are happy to find our excellent friend ELLISTON is gradually recovering, and hope that Drury Lane will shine again under his SUN. Of this part of the community we have nothing further to add, than the following.

On MR. BRADSHAWE'S Marriage with MISS M. TREE, a Papist.

No wonder that BRADSHAWE's to Papists inclin'd,
Their religion and customs are quite to his mind;
And though a good Christian, yet all must agree,
He's surely addicted to idol-a-tree.

ROBBERY AT THE AUCTION MART.

The following circumstances, which comprehend what occurred before the Prefect of Police at Paris, on the subject of the robbery of Mr. Robertson, at the Auction Mart, will fully explain the nature of the transaction which took place after the four £1,000 notes disappeared.

Mr. Robertson, some time after the robbery, learned that one of his notes was stopped at the Bank, where it had been presented by a respectable Irish gentleman, who, without hesitation, stated that he had received it of Monsieur Chamrica, at the Palais Royale, a money-changer. This note was numbered 303. Mr. Robertson immediately set off for Paris, and employed an interpreter to attend him to the Prefect of Police. He had taken with him several letters from Lord Grenville, and other men of rank, to some of the members of the French government, requesting their interference to facilitate the detection of the robbery. The interpreter, who was not acquainted with the name of the party to whom the note had been traced, upon making inquiry about the Palais Royale, learned that a money-changer, named Emericque, had a note for 1000*l.* which had been stolen in London. It afterwards proved, very much to Mr. Robertson's surprise, that two of his notes, Nos. 302 and 303, were thus likely to be obtained, and the Prefect of the Police immediately undertook to investigate the case.

Emericque, money-changer, No. 20, Palais Royale, made a declaration, of which the following is the substance:—

That about the middle of May last, two Englishmen, accompanied by a young man (also English) who acted as interpreter, came to his shop, and offered a thousand-pound Bank-note for sale; that after haggling some time about the price, they went away, saying they might return in a few days; that a few days afterwards they did return, during the absence of Emericque, and offered the note to his wife, who, after some demur, purchased it for 25,000 francs. On Emericque's return home, his wife mentioned what she had done, and he, on looking at the number of the note, discovered it to be one of those mentioned in the printed bills. Emericque was much embarrassed by this circumstance, and immediately applied to Mr. Rothschild for his advice. (Mr. Rothschild appears to have declined all interference in the business, intimating that he had been requested to circulate the notices of the robbery, but thought that he was not bound to take any steps in pursuing the thieves.) A day or two after this, Emericque's wife observed one of the men who sold the notes, passing the shop. Emercique immediately ran out, and asked him if he had not sold him a note for £1,000, saying at the same time, that the note was stolen, and the money must therefore be returned. The man at first denied all knowledge of the affair, but on Emircique's insisting, said, "Do you take me for a robber?" and insisted that the note was a good one, and that he had received it from his banker in England, adding, at the same time, that he was willing to back the note, and return Emercique the money. Emericque was not able to produce the note immediately, having deposited it with his bankers, and it being too late to procure it from them that day. In order, however, not to lose sight of the Englishman, he accompanied him to his hotel, (l'Hôtel de Valois, rue de Richelieu): on arriving at the hotel, the Englishman without any preface placed 25,000 francs in the hands of the mistress of the hotel, desiring her to pay them over to Emericque on his delivering to her a Bank note for 1,000*l.* The Englishman left Paris that night. The following day the money was paid over to Emericque, on his giving up the note.

The declaration of Monsieur Emericque then contains the names of the Englishmen concerned in this transaction, which are the same as those mentioned in the following memorandum given by the Commissaire de Police to Mr. Robertson.

Memorandum given to Mr. Robertson—

The person who gave the note to M. Emericque, the money-changer, towards the middle of last May, is Mr. Vyse, calling himself the brother-in-law of Mr. John Palin, both established in London, and keeping there a straw-hat shop. The person who returned to M. Emericque, through the hands of the mistress of l'Hôtel de Valois, the value of the note, is Mr. John Palin. Mr. John Palin set out the same day from this hotel for England. Vyse, jun., who was boarding at the end of the Fauhourg St. Martin, was with him.

Emericque told the Commissaire de Police, though it is not stated in the declaration, that the number of the note received by him was 302.

Monsieur Chauvica's dealing was, as far as we could learn, with a person not known to him, who applied to him as a money-changer, and received the value of the note No. 303. It is certain, however, that he had previously received notice from Mr. Rothschild that it was a stolen note. Mr. Robertson, upon indemnifying the Bank, will receive the amount. The Irish gentleman who received it from Chauvica has an undeniable claim upon the money-changer, who must look after the person whom he accommodated with change for the stolen note.

There was a reference made by Mr. Harmer on Saturday to the evidence of Emericque and his wife, and Madame Marcel. He wished to know why those persons were not produced; to which Mr. Hobler, the solicitor for the prosecution, replied, that he was of opinion, and he was borne out in that opinion by able professional men, that the presence of the French witnesses was not necessary at the Mansion-house, although it probably would be before the grand jury.

Application was made to the Secretary of State, to request the French authorities to interfere, in order to ensure the appearance of Monsieur and Madame Emericque, and Madame Marcel, to give evidence at the Old Bailey. The Secretary has, we understand, written to the French Government upon the subject, and expects an answer daily.

VARIETIES.

Curious Lunatic.—An inquisition was last week held at the White Hart Inn, Salisbury, to inquire whether a gentleman of property named Sackville Burroughs, Esq., was or was not a lunatic. Mr. Sackville Burroughs (the lunatic) stated, that the people in the house had been using coercive measures with him; that they wished to take away his property; that he had a large sum of money, from 200,000*l.* to 300,000*l.* in Paris, sent there by Mr. Coutts, in case he should be arrested while on the Continent; that he had been in Parliament for Preston in Lancashire, and had been voted a Peer of the realm. Dr. Finch, in describing the incoherent notions, Mr. Burrough said, among other things, "When he first came to me, the Duke of Wellington was an object of his revenge. He said he had been persecuted by him on account of his having greater influence in the country than the Duke, and on account of his promotion. He then changed the object from the Duke to Lord Liverpool, and said, if he had an opportunity he would kick them, and shoot them, and be revenged of them. About a fortnight ago, Lord Radnor and Lord Folkstone were objects of his revenge. He believes in supernatural agency, and fancies that the secrets of the Cabinet are conveyed to him thereby. He says, that the Ministers have given 5,000*l.* each to Lord Folkstone and others to vote. He told me he had been examining Dr. Rees's Cyclopædia, and found that nine things in ten were wrong. He said Dr. Rees called a ship a machine; but he called it a piece of a machine, made up of sympathy. He asked him how an inanimate thing could be capable of sympathy? He answered, in the same manner as the wool of a coat sympathised with the sheep from which it was taken. He fancies himself a peer of the realm, and has with his peerage from 100 to 300,000*l.*—Dr. Grove examined: I had some conversation with him about the Cabinet Ministers. He said Lord Liverpool and Lord Grey, under the sanction of the King, had murdered Mr. Perceval. I asked him how he knew? He said he had secret intelligence that a man at Mr. Warburton's had provided the pistol. He said all his mind was dragged—it had a great effect upon his constitution, and made him as rampant as a bull. He said he had a large sum of money left him by the will of Mr. Coutts; that he was in the possession of Fonthill, which he intended to sell. He talked of starting a stage-coach from Fonthill to London, and said he knew he should lose 2,000*l.* a-year by it, but still he would start it. He also said he was a peer of the realm, and sat in the House of Commons; that he had a privilege of sitting in either house. He abused Rees's Cyclopædia, and said he could write a better in a few weeks. He also abused Lord Pembroke. He told me he was not mad, but was confined by Government on account of opposition to the ministers. He also told me many other things, but he spoke so incoherently I could not follow him." The medical men were decidedly of opinion that Mr. Burroughs was insane: but the last accounts do not give the verdict of the jury.

MARSH AND CO'S BANKRUPTCY.

A further dividend of 3*s.* 4*d.* in the pound was declared on Tuesday, at the rooms of the Commissioners, in Basinghall-street.

Considerable apprehension had prevailed that the declaration of this dividend would be postponed to an indefinite period, at the instance of the Bank of England. Contrary to expectation, however, Mr. Freshfield, jun. attended on behalf of the firm of Kaye and Freshfield, and stated that they were willing to relinquish the attempt they had made to delay this payment. The Bank do not by this abandon the prosecution of their claim upon the bankrupts' estate, which is still pending in the Court of Chancery.

The statement of assets upon which the present dividend has been declared, and upon which the Bank of England rely, in not pressing to have all further proceedings under the Commission stayed until the decision upon their claim is known, is as follows:—

Assets which the Assignees expect to realise beyond the dividend already paid.....	£269,475
Deduct dividend of 3*s.* 4*d.* now declared.....	92,486
	£176,989

Should the Bank of England establish their claim of 250,000*l.* upon the estate, they rely upon this sum of 176,989*l.* to pay them a dividend of 6*s.* 8*d.*, the amount shared by the other creditors. As the total of such a dividend would be only 83,000*l.* there would still remain 93,000*l.* for distribution.

Debts to a considerable amount were proved at this meeting.

Court Martial.—The proceedings of the Court Martial, held on board his Majesty's yacht, the Royal Sovereign, at Debtford, on Thomas Goble, are terminated. The Defence having closed on Friday, the Court met on Saturday, to deliberate on their verdict, and after six hours' deliberation, they found Mr. Goble guilty of the first, second, third, and fourth charges, and in part guilty of the fifth; and they sentenced him to be dismissed his Majesty's service. The prisoner was then discharged from the custody of the Provost-Marshal, and the Court was dissolved.

Captured Ships of War.—The following is a curious statement of the number of ships and vessels of war belonging to the various Belligerent Powers, which were captured or destroyed by the British fleet, in eleven years, between the 10th of March, 1803 (the commencement of the late hostilities), and the 1st January, 1814, carefully abstracted from the London Gazettes:—

The Committee of the Stock Exchange have expelled one of the members, Mr. Edward Josephs, for improper conduct in some transactions connected with "the Lower Rhine Steam Navigation Company." It will be recollected that some of the bears who had sold more shares of the Lower Rhine Company than they were able to deliver, concerted a new scheme with a similar name, and attempted to dispose of the shares as being those of the original undertaking. Mr. Josephs having been concerned in offering these shares, which appear to have been brought forward in the first instance by a Mr. Back, has drawn upon himself the indignation of the Stock Exchange, and his expulsion has been publicly declared by that Body. It is said that one of the Gentlemen who had large dealings in "the Lower Rhine Shares," and who has been a considerable loser in consequence of the resolution to which the Committee were obliged to come, directing all bargains in the Company to be paid at no more than fifteen premium, intends to indict all the parties for a conspiracy.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

"Cadiz, Aug. 9.—The letters which we received to-day from Seville, dated the 7th instant, bring the following details:

"A great fermentation prevails in all the towns of Upper Andalusia, but particularly at Cordova, Carmona, Ecija, and Seville. In the first of these cities numerous arrests took place on the night of the 5th, all of persons distinguished by their rank or their riches. It would seem, however, that these arrests are founded on motives of great importance, for on the 5th they began at Seville, and have been continued every night. Among the persons arrested, who already amounted to 189, are the Marchioness de Tabares and her whole family, the Prior of the Consulate of Commerce Andueza, the rich merchants Bayo and Gongora.

"But what is remarkable is, that the arrests extend to persons of all opinions, such as Liberals, Carlists, and Royalists, and of all classes, as monks, canons, merchants, shopkeepers, tailors, shoemakers, apothecaries, and butchers. These arrests are, it seems, to be continued; for the prisons and the former house of the Inquisition being full, the Intendant of Police has written letters to the priors of all the convents to clear and place at his disposal as many cells as possible. Seals have been affixed on the houses of several of the persons arrested.

"The expedition for the Havannah sailed yesterday, to take on board the troops which are to embark at Ferrol. The escort consists of the Spanish frigate she Pearl, and the Jason brig.

"The transports, eight in number, besides the troops, are to take to the Havannah a great quantity of merchandise.

"The Portuguese merchantman Notre Dame de la Luz has just arrived here, in 119 days, from Manilla, with a cargo valued at about 500,000 piasters, and the American ship The Chance, from St. Blaise, with another very rich cargo, including 1,150 bags of indigo. Thus our mercantile marine, which was already reduced almost to nothing, since the emancipation of America, will be destroyed by the Colombian privateers, which compel our merchants to have recourse to neutral vessels."

Calais, Aug. 28.—Her Royal Highness the Duchess de Berri arrived here yesterday, having for several days past been most anxiously expected. The most expensive and extensive preparations had been previously made for her Royal Highness's reception by the civil and military authorities of this place; amongst the former is our venerable Mayor, who had previously intimated that it was expected the respectable inhabitants should make the usual demonstrations of loyalty, by decorating the exterior of their houses, exhibiting branches of laurel, and the ordinary number of white flags. Amongst the most attractive spots, and where the greatest attention in this respect appears to have been paid, were the Grande Place, Rue Royale, and Rue de Havre, which were decorated with drapery, &c. at no inconsiderable trouble and expense. The Hotel de Ville, of course, cut the most conspicuous figure in point of costly expenditure. A garde d'honneur, composed of 15 young citizens, sons of the most reputable and wealthy inhabitants of Calais, were in attendance to escort her Royal Highness from Marquoise; they were dressed in most splendid new uniforms for the occasion. Upon the arrival of her Royal Highness, about five o'clock, the Pompiers, or volunteers of the place, were drawn out under arms; the Mayor, Governor, Civil and Military Authorities, to the number of nearly one hundred, were shortly afterwards introduced, and at 7 o'clock, her Royal Highness proceeded to the Hotel de Ville, where a sumptuous dinner was provided. His Britannic Majesty's Consul, Mr. Marshall, was, at the particular request of her Royal Highness, present on the occasion. A military band was in attendance, and delighted the numerous spectators by the execution of a succession of the most favourite national melodies. Her Royal Highness subsequently attended the theatre, which had been most tastefully fitted up for a public ball, where between three and four hundred persons were present.

Amongst the most interesting features in the several testimonials of respect paid to Her Royal Highness, I had nearly forgotten to mention one more particularly deserving of notice—it was a selection of Ladies of Honour, composed of six of the most respectable married ladies, and the like number of maiden ladies, who were in constant attendance. Her Royal Highness previously to sitting down to dinner, appeared frequently at the balcony of the Hotel de Ville, and was received by the assembled multitude amidst the loudest demonstrations of respect. In the evening the whole town was illuminated, and the spire of the above-mentioned building, being decorated with 364 lamps, had a truly splendid effect.

This morning her Royal Highness, after having attended Mass, visited the harbour, and embarked on board the Duc de Bourdeaux, French Government steam-packet, and proceeded to sea for about an hour, accompanied by the Henri Quatre steam-packet, in which were stationed the fine band of the Pompiers. Upon her Royal Highness's leaving the harbour, and on her return, a Royal salute was fired from the guns of Fort Rouge.—Her Royal Highness subsequently expressed a wish to visit the Superb, London, and Calais steam-packet, Captain Black, R. N. which was instantly complied with. Her Royal Highness and suite were received on board, and every particular relating to that superior vessel explained by Mr. Saunders, Agent to the General Steam Navigation Company—the whole party expressing the greatest admiration of the accommodation of the Superb, properly so called. Her Royal Highness, after visiting the light-house, took her departure for St. Omer, being escorted by the same guard of honour as far as La Recousse, midway of Calais and St. Omer.

The Plague.—Marseilles, Aug. 24.—No new case of plague has manifested itself on board the brigs La Cinq Sœurs and L'Heureuse Sabine, or in the lazaretto, thanks to the extraordinary precautions that have been taken. The pestilential boil which exhibited itself on a sailor belonging to L'Heureuse Sabine, has been cauterized, and cicatrization has taken place. The second patient landed from the same vessel is getting better of the pestilential fever with which he was attacked. This fever, indeed, was not accompanied by any swelling, but all the symptoms sufficiently indicated the nature of the disease. The landing of the cargoes of these two vessels, after having been thoroughly fumigated, has not produced any bad consequences. When they shall all have been conveyed to the lazaretto, the quarantine of the men will commence, and the vessels will undergo fresh purifications, and all the precautions usually adopted in such cases. The French brigs L'Esperance and L'Eugene, from Alexandria, where each had a man attacked by the plague, are arrived at this port. No extension of the disease has taken place. Their cargoes consist of cotton.

Republic of Hayti.—Port au Prince (Interior) July, 1825.—On the 3d inst. three French vessels of war, carrying the national flags—one schooner, one brig, and one ship, wearing the white flag at the peak, and Haytian colours at the fore top, moored in the Great Wadshead, without gun-shot of our forts, at one o'clock p.m. Immediately after morning, the frigate sent her launch on shore, as a flag of truce, to transmit to our Government the despatches of the French nation.

Colonel Boisblunc, chief of port regulations, repaired on board the French frigate, having on the road fallen in with the flag of truce, and receiving from it the despatches, the flag was remanded on board till further orders. The next day, the 4th current, Colonel St. Victor Poel, chief of the military police, attached to the Prime Staff of the place, Grand Envoy of the Republic of Hayti, Aid-de-camp of his Excellency the President of the Republic, Commander-in-Chief of the squadron de viesama; Doton Inginac, Aide-de-camp to General B. Inginac, received orders to repair on the beach, and meet the French Minister, Monsieur le Baron Mackau, commander of a line-of-battle ship of His Most Christian Majesty the King of France. As soon as the public were informed that so distinguished an officer, of such high fame in the glorious career of arms, had made his entrée in this Republic, with a treaty from his Sovereign of the recognition of our independence full and entire—news highly acceptable—astonished many citizens, whilst others expected it, from the justice and liberality that has distinguished the reign of the august Monarch Charles X. of France, since his possession of this crown.

From the 4th to the 6th instant in the morning, nothing transpired relative to the treaty of our recognition; meauwhile, we could perceive a certain je ne sais quoi on the countenance of every one, presaging something great and honourable; but on the 7th the good news was known publicly to all classes. On the 8th instant, early in the morning, one of the French vessels of war, the brig, made all sail from this harbour, carrying the orders and joyful account to the heights of St. Marcs, where we distinctly heard the rejoicings of the people; fete succeeded fete, and they applauded the Prince who proclaimed them free and independent.

Amsterdam, Aug. 26.—According to accounts from the Helder, the Bellona frigate and Triton corvette are fitting out at that port for immediate service, being intended to reinforce our squadron in the East Indies. The first of these vessels will take on board the Compte de Chissignies, Commissioner-General in India, and some other officers.

Vienna, Aug. 20.—Their Majesties the Emperor and Empress will arrive on Monday at the palace of Luxemburg, on their return from Italy. His Highness Prince Metternich arrived last night from Ichel.

The negociations with Constantinople are at present very active: matters of importance are under discussion, which are, however, covered with an impenetrable veil. As the roads are now in very good condition, the couriers generally travel from Vienna to Constantinople in twelve or thirteen days. An extraordinary courier has arrived from Constantinople with dispatches from the Austrian Internuncio, Baron Ottenfels; but the Austrian Chancery has not thought fit to make known the intelligence received. We expect his Imperial Highness the Archduke Palatine, who will pass some time here previous to the opening of the Diet at Presburg. Several regiments are gone to that city, to do duty there during the sitting of the Diet.

Ghent, Aug. 28.—According to the Courrier de la Meuse, not only the Archbishop of Malines and the Bishop of Namur, but the heads of the Dioceses of Belgium and the Archpriests of Holland, have addressed respectful representations to the King relative to the establishment of the Philosophical College. This unanimity of sentiments is calculated to give his Majesty some information relative to the consequences of a measure to which his faithful Catholic subjects cannot be indifferent. On the 24th of this month the keels of two large steam-packets were laid down at Amsterdam; they are entered to run between London, Amsterdam, and Hamburgh. They have received the names of William I. and the Exchange of Amsterdam.

Petersburgh, Aug. 6.—The Government still continues to withhold from the public all information respecting the negociations of M. Minziacky at Constantinople. The silence respecting the result of the various notes which, it is well known, the Russian Charge d'Affaires has presented to the Reis Effendi, and the prolongation of the camp of our troops on the Pruth, sufficiently prove that the differences between Russia and the Porte are far from being amicably settled. Accordingly the departure of the Marquis de Ribeaupierre for Constantinople is indefinitely deferred. The bad faith of the Ottoman Government, it is now said, is too well known for the Christian Powers to expect any result from all the negociations which have been set on foot with that barbarous Government, and yet our fellow Christians, the unhappy Greeks, have been sacrificed to it.

Frankfort, Aug. 25.—We expect here her Majesty the Queen Dowager of Wurtemburg, who is coming to pay a visit to her Royal Highness the Landgravine of Hesse Homburg, her sister, and to the Duke of Cambridge, her brother. We also expect his Imperial Highness the Grand Duke Constantine.

After several meetings the Diet has adjourned till December. Baron de Munch, the President, is gone to Vienna; during his absence his place will be supplied by M. de Pfeffel, the Minister of Bavaria. Baron Naylor, the Prussian Minister, will not go to Berlin till after the Princess Royal of Prussia has passed through here on her return from Ems.

The trial of M. de Manger, late Director of the Police at Cassel, will, it is said, be terminated in the month of September.

AMSTERDAM, AUGUST 20.---Exchange on London, 39. 7.---Two months, 39. 4.

PHILADELPHIA, AUG. 8.---We observe by the New Orleans papers, that intelligence has been recently received in that city, confirming the statement we some time ago published respecting the treaty between Spain and France, by which Cuba and Porto Rico were to be occupied by the latter. It would seem, according to some accounts, that this business is to be managed in such a way as not to give umbrage to Great Britain, the United States, or the South American Republics; for although Governor Vives is to be superseded, and a successor appointed entirely under French influence, the Spanish flag is still to wave on the Castle, and the business of the Custom-house to be conducted as if no alteration had taken place. It is supposed that the concentration of the large French fleet, which was lately off St. Domingo, has some reference to this arrangement.

The Government of Cuba appears to have taken alarm at the statements which have appeared respecting the unsettled state of the island. A letter received at Washington, dated Havannah, July 19th, says, that, in consequence of information received that morning from Philadelphia the Captain-General had called a junta of general officers; and that all the troops had been ordered to prepare to march into the interior, to be ready to act at any point. They were to take up their line of march the following morning. These movements had caused great alarm among the inhabitants.

BUENOS AYRES.—There have been arrivals recently at Norfolk and Boston from Rio Janeiro, bringing accounts to the 11th of June. We have already published intelligence from that quarter of the 12th June, in which it was stated that part of the Brazilian fleet, which had sailed with the troops for Monte Video, had put into St. Catherine's and Santos in distress. It would seem that Don Pedro was fitting out a second fleet with stores and munitions of war, for the same destination —from which, and other circumstances, it was believed to be no longer doubtful, that war with the Emperor and the republic of Buenos Ayres, had been determined on. In some accounts the patriots are said to be secretly supplied with arms and money by the citizens of Buenos Ayres; and in others it is asserted that General Ribeira had made proposals to General Le Cour to give up Monte Video, threatening, in case of his non-compliance, that he would invade the territories of Rio Grande, and manumit all the slaves, on condition that they would join his forces. On all hands it appears that the Orientalists were enthusiastic for the liberty of their country, and that the patriot troops were extremely careful not to commit any violence which might injure their cause.

ACCIDENTS, OFFENCES, &c.

A calamity, which has thrown a most respectable family into the greatest distress, occurred on Saturday evening, at Boyles Point, six miles from Egham. Two youths, Henry, 17, and John, 16 years of age, sons of Mr. Welcup, of Southam, who were on a visit at Mr. Melcombe's, on the spot where the accidents happened, went out to bathe in a punt, with three others, under their own management. It appears that they all got into the water, and returned again to the boat, when the elder Welcup, who was esteemed an expert swimmer, took a dive from the boat. His struggle in the water excited alarm, and his brother and a youth of the name of Paisley jumped overboard after Henry, who sank to rise no more; and but for a man of the name of Johnson, who was passing by at the time, the other two youths would have been drowned. The deceased was going to Eton school at the next vacation, and was a youth of very promising talent.

On Thursday, the 11th ult. as Lord Lyncdoch was crossing a wooden bridge over the Water of Lee, in Glenesk, the structure of which, like most others in that quarter, was in a frail state, gave way, and his Lordship was precipitated from a considerable height into the stream. He sustained considerable injury, but is recovering.—Glasgow Chron.

Another fatal combat took place on Tuesday morning at day-break, at Duckfield, near Bushey, between Davenport, a vender of earthenware, and M'Dermot, a labourer, in consequence of a public-house dispute on politics on Monday night. The combatants fought awkwardly more than two hours, and at length M'Dermot received a chance right-handed blow upon the temple, and he died in the ring.

A fire, destructive in its consequences, broke out on Monday night, at the cotton mills of Fraser, Wigton, and Co. at Mere, on the banks of the Paddington Canal, which destroyed every vestige of the machinery, but the dwelling-house contiguous was saved by a parting wall. It was occasioned by the carelessness of one of the trimmers setting fire to some yarn.

Yesterday, in Wilkes-street, Spitalfields, as one of the loaded drays belonging to Messrs. Truman, Hanbury, and Co. was coming from the brewery, it drove against a poor woman who was sitting at an oyster-stall by the pavement side, who, endeavouring to evade the danger, fell under the wheel, which passed over her head, and killed her on the spot. The poor creature had a young child in her arms, which escaped. The sufferer's head was crushed to pieces. She was removed into a house near to which the accident happened.

On Friday, Harriette Ann Donaldson, a child between three and four years of age, who had been standing on a chair, and leaning out of the second-pair front room window, No. 36, Edward-street, Portman-square, fell with great violence on the pavement below. Her head was dreadfully fractured, and she was otherwise much injured. She was picked up by a person passing by, and carried into the house. The mother was sitting at another window in the same room, attending to an infant in arms. The unfortunate child was immediately carried to a surgeon on the spot, who advised its being taken to Middlesex Hospital, which was promptly done, where, after lingering for a few hours, it died, the injuries it had received baffling all human efforts for its recovery.

An exaggerated statement having appeared in some papers, relative to the dreadful accident which befell Mr. Francis Willes, of Gloucester-place, Portman-square, we consider it our duty to give a more correct account. He had just mounted an unmanageable horse, which set off with such impetuosity, that at length it fell with him, in which fall Mr. Francis Willes sustained very considerable injury, having severely fractured his elbow; his head and ancle also, but not so severely. He was immediately conducted by his groom and others to Mr Barker, surgeon, Upper Berkeley-street, whose instantaneous aid, and the skilful co-operation of Mr. Brodie, who was sent for, and arrived in a few minutes after the accident, have, under Providence, hitherto preserved his life, and he is going on favourably.

An unfortunate event occurred a few days ago in Paris, in the family of Mademoiselle Noblet, the first dancer of the Academie Royale de Musique. The servant at nine o'clock in the morning was spreading breakfast upon the table, when the mother called one of her daughters, who ran to the window to reply, and fell from the third floor to the ground. M. Noblet, who was below, raised his eyes upon hearing the voice of his wife, and saw his child falling. He and those near him ran to the spot, but it was too late. Mdlle. Lennore Noblet, the wife of an upholsterer at Paris, is the victim of this accident. She was the mother of three children, and was an excellent and amiable character. Her features were not altered, nor were any bones broken, but it seems death was occasioned by the bursting of a blood-vessel.

FIRE.—About one o'clock on Friday morning the shop of Mr. Spencer, oilman, Cromer-street, near the Foundling Hospital, was discovered to be on fire. The alarm spread instantly through the street; and by the alacrity of the neighbours the fire was got under before it communicated to any other part of the house, or before the arrival of any of the fire-engines; although a great part of the goods in the shop was destroyed or damaged. We regret to state that a young man named Edgeley had his hands and face severely scorched, in his praiseworthy exertions to quench the fire. The house and property were insured in the Britannia Assurance Office.

On Thursday evening, between six and seven o'clock, WEBSTER, the gaoler of Mary-le-bonne Police-office, was attacked and nearly murdered, in Tottenham Court-road. He had deposited several prisoners in Clerkenwell prison, and was returning towards the office, and, when at the end of Tottenham-street, a tall powerful looking man came up to him, and saying, "Is your name WEBSTER, don' you belong to the Police-office?" WEBSTER answered in the affirmative. The stranger then looked round, and coming close up to the officer, said, "I have followed you some time, knowing you to be the same." WEBSTER, rather surprised, looked in the man's face, and recognised him to be a desperate smuggler named Adkin, whom he had four years since apprehended on the coast for smuggling, and an attack upon some of the revenue officers, for which the fellow was sentenced to imprisonment. The moment he found himself recognized, the ruffian said, "I will now be revenged, you d—d informing rascal," and, seizing Webster by the throat, dashed him to the earth. Webster, as soon as he could get upon his feet, grasped the fellow's collar, calling out to several persons who had assembled, to assist him in the King's name; but the ruffian swore in the most horrible manner, that he would kill the first that dared to interfere, and again dashed the unfortunate Webster to the earth, and beat him in a dreadful manner, leaving him on the ground almost lifeless. Although above one hundred persons were assembled, not one interfered in any way, nor attempted to secure the miscreant. Webster was removed into a shop by two gentlemen who came up, and his wounds being dressed, he recovered his senses, and attended at Mary-la-bonne office before Mr. Griffith, who has directed a most active pursuit.

CORONER'S INQUEST.

Thursday evening, at five o'clock, an Inquisition was taken at the London Hospital, before J. W. UNWIN, Esq. on view of the body of Mrs. Ann Hanse, the wife of a tradesman residing in Spitalfields, who met with her death by the running over of one of Messrs. Truman, Hanbury, and Co's drays. After the Jury had viewed the body, the following evidence was laid before them:—

Mr. Samuel Clarke, of Wilks-street, Spitalfields, stated that on Wednesday, between the hours of twelve and one o'clock, as he was approaching towards Brick-lane along Quaker-street, he perceived three drays, heavily laden with casks, driving towards Messrs. Truman, Hanbury, and Co.'s Brewery. He saw the deceased standing near the corner of the street; two of the drays passed without inflicting any injury; but the wheel of the third coming in contact with the stall, knocked it down. The deceased, who was on the pathway, stretched forward, as he supposed with the intention of supporting it, but having overreached herself, lost her balance, and fell under the wheel, which passed over her head. Deceased was at once conveyed to the Hospital.

CORONER.—Where was the driver at the time of the accident? He was sitting on the fore part of the dray.

CORONER.—How far distant was the stall from the outer flag stone? It was fully a yard.

CORONER.—Did the driver stop when the accident occurred? No, he drove on, but at a slow pace.—This witness concluded his testimony, by saying that the deceased had a child in her arms at the time of the accident, which fortunately escaped unhurt.

Mrs. E. Potter, of Queen-street, Spitalfields, stated that on Wednesday, about twelve o'clock, she observed three drays passing along Quaker-street. Just as she approached the deceased, the wheel of the third passed over her; the deceased had a child in her arms, which providently escaped. She considered the occurrence as purely accidental, particularly as she saw the driver at the horses' heads, and perceived him using every exertion to stop their course. The transaction was so momentary, that it was impossible to prevent its occurrence.

Juror—Where was the driver of the dray at the time? Was he on the dray? Ceatainly not; he was at the horses' heads.

It was here remarked that there was a great discrepancy between the evidence of this witness and the former, Mr. Clarke having stated that the driver was on the dray, and Mrs. Potter asserting that he was in a different position.

The witnesses were here confronted, but each was equally positive as to the truth of their respective statements.

Juryman to the witness Clarke—How far were you from the drays at the time of the accident? I was quite close to them.

Juror—Then I suppose if the driver was on the dray you could have perceived him distinctly? I certainly could, as I was near enough to have caught the child from its mother's arms when she was falling.

The witness Potter added to her direct testimony that in her opinion there was no blame to be attached to the driver.

The evidence here closed, but the Jury still viewing the testimony as of a conflicting nature, and not satisfactorily reconcilable, hesitated for a time. The Coroner perceiving their doubts, after recapitulating the evidence, observed that even admitting the driver was on the dray, it appeared that the stall only, in the first instance, was knocked down, a thing that is not to be wondered at in the present season of the year, when venders such as the deceased are so numerous, and who expose their standings in an inconvenient situation; that the deceased was indirectly the cause of her own death by stretching out and endeavouring to save her little property. He concluded by observing that though the statements were in some instances conflicting, yet in the main points they were corroborative of each other, and the death in his opinion was purely accidental; under every view of the case he thought that the deodand should be nominal.

The Jury agreed in opinion with the Coroner, and returned a verdict of "Accidental Death," with a deodand of 5s. against the dray and horses.

A gentleman belonging to Messrs. Truman and Co.'s was present, and liberally offered, on the part of the Company, to bury the deceased at their own expense.

MISCELLANEOUS INTELLIGENCE.

John Palin, who stands charged with having stolen the bank notes from Mr. Robertson, at the Auction Mart, was on Monday brought before the Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench, upon a writ of certiorari, and admitted to bail to appear at the next Old Bailey Sessions. In the affidavit, on which the writ was founded, he declares his total innocence. His bail was himself in 2,000*l.* and four sureties in 500*l.* each.

Among the wonders of the present day is an extraordinary lady, who has chosen to walk from Scotland to London, barefoot. She is very lady-like in her manners and dress, and is endowed with all the comforts of life, as to fortune at least. When she arrives at an inn, she changes her walking-dress for fashionable silks and satins.

It is a fact not generally known, that Lord Cochrane, whilst he was on the northern coast of Brazil, during part of last year and the beginning of the present, invested nearly all the wages and prize-money he received in the Brazilian service in cotton, which was consigned to an agent in Liverpool. We have not learnt whether his Lordship's agent disposed of the cotton during the reign of the high prices, or whether he still holds the article.

The tide-waiter at Fareham Quay effected a most valuable seizure on the night of Monday last. A large sloop, laden with timber, entered the harbour on the morning of that day, and was examined by some Custom-house officers, to whom they stated that the timber was consigned to the dock-yard; circumstances having induced the tide-waiter to examine her, it was discovered that she had on board 255 kegs of foreign spirits under the cargo, and 200 more had been sent on shore, with which the smugglers escaped.

A discovery has lately been made of an immense cavern, situated in the Secondary Limestone, near Matlock, Derbyshire, described by geologists as the grandest continuation of caverns hitherto explored. The access to and through it is perfectly easy, and after traversing various windings (fine cave scenery,) you arrive at a beautiful archway, from which a passage is made through to day-light, where the subterraneous visitors arrive at an elevated terrace nearly on the summit of the mountain in which the cavern is situated, commanding the finest views of the neighbouring romantic scenery. It has been named the Devonshire Cavern.

There are 89 horses named for the Great St. Leger stakes at Doncaster, which are to be run for on Tuesday, the 20th of this month.

The Princess Charlotte, of 140 guns, one of the largest and finest first-rates ever built in England, will be launched from Portsmouth in the course of the present month.

 Please to observe the name of SLATER.

HIS GRACIOUS MAJESTY OF GREAT BRITAIN, and most of the Nobility and Gentry, use now PRINCE'S celebrated RUSSIA OIL. It ought really to be generally known, that physicians have of late experienced that those who wear false hair are subject to complaints in the head, as the false hair, through the warmth, will shrink, become tight, makes a dent round the head, and prevents free circulation of the blood in the head, causes head-ache, giddiness, slight apoplexy, and other complaints; but it is proved through the aromatic Oils Prince's Russia Oil is prepared with, makes it healthy, and by often rubbing the head all over with it, when the false hair is taken off, is wholesome, refreshing, and cooling, and will prevent the above complaints; even eminent medical men have recommended it to the King. The Duchess of Rutland has declared in a letter to Mr. Prince, from experience, has found his Russia Oil the best article for preserving the hair. Colonel Grant has often declared to the proprietor, that from experience he has found the Russia Oil the best article for the hair.—Also a Gentleman, turned of sixty, has a good head of hair and whiskers, and not a single hair grey, and has declared it is through the Russia Oil, for he has used it constantly for the last twelve years; and when in the country and out of Russia Oil, and not having used it for a fortnight, his hair began to get harsh and inclined to turn grey, but by using it again, it became immediately soft and dark; it is really a wonder, for whoever sees him are quite surprised at his having such a fine head of hair and whiskers, without any grey at his age. The Gentleman has given the proprietor leave to mention his name and residence to respectable persons, to convince them the above is a fact. There are hundreds of Ladies and Gentlemen who have used constantly Prince's Russia Oil, have also declared that it is the best article for the hair. In short, Prince's celebrated Russia Oil, through the aromatic oils it is now prepared with, is acknowledged the wholesomest and best article for dressing, preserving, and promoting the hair of Ladies, Gentlemen, and Children, and if used constantly not a hair will fall off or turn grey, and is such a nourisher to the hair, that if it has begun to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour, which hundreds of Ladies have experienced. It is the pleasantest for Ladies to dress their own or false hair, will make it look elegant, and will curl beautifully any way; clears the scurf, and keeps the head and hair clean, and by using it regularly for a few months will restore the hair on the bald part, if the least signs of roots are remaining, which thousands of Gentlemen have experienced when used regularly. It is an old saying—'Tell the truth, and fear nobody.' If persons are bald, and the roots are entirely gone, it is against nature that any article can restore it, and if persons pretend to restore hair when the roots are gone, by any article, it is a falsity. Persons who have begun to get bald, ought to be particular to use the Russia Oil daily, or at the least every other day, as there must be a complaint in the scalp, which may go further, and carry off the hair entirely, if neglected, which has often been the case.

Ask for Prince's Russia Oil—the Ounce Bottle 5s.; a large bottle containing Five Ounces, 1*l.* which is a saving. Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. PRINCE, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders. Be particular, and observe his address, "A Prince, No. 9, Poland-Street, Oxford Street, London," on the cover of each bottle; without, it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose.—Purchasers ought to be particular, as counterfeits are in circulation; and some villains, to deceive the public, put the original proprietor's name on their counterfeits. Good allowance for exportation. Merchants and Captains ought to be particular, as impostors are going about to counting-houses with counterfeit Russia Oil, saying it is the genuine.

THE ARABIAN VEGETABLE PILLS, free from Mercury or Antimony, are unrivalled in their beneficial effects in Nervous, Bilious, and Liver Complaints, Indigestion, and its numerous train of maladies, and are peculiarly mild and pleasant as an aperient. The superior efficacies of these Pills has increased the demand for them so much, that an additional number of Venders has been appointed in London for the accommodation of the Public; and they may now be obtained in Boxes at 1*s.* 1½*d.* and 2*s.* 9*d.* each, of J. V. Simpson (Proprietor,) 28, Henrietta street, Covent-garden; Messrs. Stradling, Royal Exchange; Anderson, 156, Bishopgate Without; Sequeira, 132, Whitechapel High-street; E. and F. Odling, 159, High-street, and 171, Union-street, Southwark; Ward, 324, and Hose, 309, Holborn; Prout, 226, and Burfield, 189, Strand; Stanley, 13, Tavistock-row, Covent-garden; Payne, 5, St. Martin's court; Simpson, 21, Piccadilly; Hawkins, 11, Old Bond-street; Grignon, 174, Regent-street, opposite New Burlington-street; Colley, 5, Holles-street, Cavendish-square; Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; White, No. 1, and Yarde, 28, Lamb's Conduit-street; and of all Medicine Venders throughout the kingdom. Mr. Renard, No. 19, Rue Vivienne, is appointed vender of these Pills in Paris.

A CHALLENGE FOR 1000 GUINEAS.

H. MOSS, PRIZE HAIR CUTTER, PERRUQUIER, and PERFUMER, No. 181, FLEET-STREET, (Two Doors from Fetter-lane, claims the honour of announcing that by the urgent request of many distinguished friends, who so highly patronised him while conducting Mr. Money's business, he has opened an Establishment, and respectfully solicits the attention of the connoisseurs in the scientific Art of Hair-cutting. By many years application to this particular department of his profession in London and Paris, he is enabled to introduce a new and peculiar system, never contemplated by the vulgar empirics who presume to call themselves Hair cutters, but who in fact only destroy the head of hair. Moss's style rigidly adhering to fashion, always adapts itself to each particular countenance (the grand desideratum,) and his intercourse with the Courts of Europe furnishes him with a never failing variety. Moss begs to state that his personal attention, and that of his Chief Artist (late with Money), are devoted to Hair-cutting, as he never trusts so important an operation to inexperienced apprentice boys.

The beautiful system of fabricating perukes, scalps, and heads of hair, (Secundum Naturam) has claimed Moss's particular attention, and he submits to the Beau Monde an exquisite specimen of talent in his new system of Wig making, every hair is singly inserted, the superfices of the skin and complexional colours of the head are astonishingly imitated—the whole forming a combined, the most brilliant and natural, calculated to embellish the charms of youth or cover the deficiencies of age.

Moss has prepared a superlative choice of Ladies' Fronts, on a new system, that always retain their curl. Platts and Curls, in all the variegated Tints and shades of nature, which, with an assortment of French Perfumery, he invites his best friends—the public—to examine. Patent Hair Brushes on Moss's new plan, are ready for the taste of the curious; and for One Thousand Guineas he challenges competition with all Europe in every branch of his Profession.—Vivat Rex et industria omnia vincit.

To prevent baldness and all Complaints incident to the want of the nutriment Nature has provided, there is nothing equal to the GENUINE MACASSAR OIL, imported by PRICE and GOSNELL, Perfumers to his Majesty, No. 12, Three King Court, Lombard Street; who have sold it, pure and unadulterated, for the last thirty years, and who, in fact, first introduced it to the notice of a British Public. Price and Gosnell's Macassar Oil possesses a richness superior to any other Oil, and will retain the moisture much longer, leaving the hair soft and silky, and increasing its thickness and growth. They therefore respectfully beg to caution the Public at large against the pretensions of base impostors, falsely stymieth themselves importers, who imitate every popular article produced; and as some persons have been imposed upon by these miscreants, Price and Gosnell, the sole Proprietors and only importers, which has been proved by the Import List already published, and sworn before the Lord Mayor, of the Genuine Macassar Oil, would, to protect the Nobility and Gentry from imposition, have, at a very great expense, adhered a label with an engraving from a design by Sir Wm. Congreve, of very difficulty of execution, on the outside of each bottle, with their names and address in full thereon, which purchasers are particularly requested to observe; and as a further security, every genuine bottle is signed in red ink in their own handwriting, to counterfeit which is Felony.—Price 3*s.* 6*d.* 10*s.* 6*d.* and 21*s.* each bottle.

Caution to Families.—As many venders sell the "spurious Macassar Oil," the profit on which is much greater than on the Genuine, and as the resemblance of the label, at first sight, may deceive the unguarded; in order to prevent such fraud and consequently the destruction (by the use of the deleterious composition) of the greatest ornament Nature has bestowed upon the human race—the hair. Purchasers are requested to ask for "Price and Gosnell's Macassar Oil."

A short supply, and a dull trade at Thursday's prices. The salesmen anxious to sell out before the proclamation of St. Bartholomew's Fair, which took place at noon.

Sanfoin nor Lucern Hay (the latter not much grown near London) is seldom to be had in either of the above Haymarkets unless previously bespoken; in which instance it is generally sold at the prices of Upland Meadow Hay. Barley Straw, the farmers, for the most part, use ou their farms as a winter fodder.

DREADFUL EXPLOSION IN WHITECHAPEL.

Yesterday morning, about half-past eight o'clock, Whitechapel-road, and the numerous streets that abound there, were thrown into the greatest state of agitation, by the inhabitants experiencing a most tremendous shock, as if caused by a volcano or an earthquake. The houses for a considerable distance were deserted by their inhabitants, and men, women, and children, were seen running about in all directions, under an impression the this world was at an end. It was soon ascertained that their alarm was produced by the explosion of the factory of Mr. Brock, the artist in fire-works, at No. 11, Baker's-row, Whitechapel-road, nearly opposite the London Hospital.

The following particulars, relative to this direful disaster, have just reached us:—Mr. Brock has resided for the last five years in Baker's row, and at the back of his dwelliog-house is his repository for fireworks, where they are manufactured. This building is about 55 feet by 20, and contains three magazines, which are lined with lead, and would be perfectly secure from fire, should it occur, on any of the adjoining premises. In these receptacles were deposited all the powder, composition, and, in fact, all the combustible matter, and Mr. B. was remarkable for the method he had taken to prevent any accident occurring on his premises. A few weeks since he had taken two boys out of the poor-house to instruct in the art of fire-work making, and he kept them chiefly employed in filling and ramming the cases of the sky-rockets, serpents, squibs, &c. &c. The latter part of this stage of the work is done by a funnel, or piece of tin made in the shape of an extinguisher, and a small piece of iron wire, about a foot long, which is used as a ram-rod. The small end, or nipple, as it is called, of the extinguisher, is introduced into one end of the rocket or squib, and the boys ram the powder and wadding down with the ramrod. This morning, at the time above stated, Mr. Brock and his men left the factory to go to breakfast, leaving the two boys engaged at the work-board, ramming the sky-rockets. They had scarcely sat down to their meal when they, as well as the inhabitants around them for some distance, heard a sort of rumbling noise as if of some distant thunder, and the next moment a tremendous explosion followed, and the air was illumined with lights of various descriptions, and accompanied by continued reports. The concussion was so great that the inmates in the different houses were shaken from their seats, many of whom were sitting at their breakfast, and the tables and tea-things were upset and broken to pieces. The window frames were all forced out, and the brick-bats and materials were flying about in every direction. The roofs of Mr. Brock's manufactory, and the factory of Mr. M'Devitt adjoining, were blown a considerable height and the falling materials did considerable mischief. After the agitation was somewhat subsided, an inquiry into the cause of the accident took place, when it appeared from the statement of the two boys (who were blown a considerable height and much injured) that they were at work, ramming the rockets, when the ramrod struck against the funnel, and the friction caused a spark, which flew into the bowl of gunpowder that stood near them; this soon exploded, and ran like a train to all the other fire-works in the factory, and at length communicated to the magagines which caused the disaster. Mr. Brock, however, declares it could not have arisen in that way, as the nipple of the funnel was copper, therefore a frictiou would not cause a spark. One poor woman, sister to the beadle, who lives next door to Mr. Brock, was so dreadfully injured by the broken glass, that she lies in the London Hospital without hopes of recovery. The following houses have been injured by the explosion:—In Baker's-row, Mr. Anderton, butcher; Plunkett, beadle of Whitechapel; Prendergast, coal-dealer; Livesay, baker. In Princess-street, Mr. Davies, coal-dealer; Kenning, tallow-chandler; Boswell, ironmonger; Constantine, tailor; Philemon, clothes-dealer; the King's Head public-house at the corner, and about sixty other houses, most of which have their windows demolished from top to bottom. We are sorry to state that Mr. Brock, who is considered a most ingenious artist, is by this accident reduced to ruin, as he was uninsured not being able to pay the premium required by the Insurance Offices, his business being treble hazardous. His loss is estimated at 3600*l.* and he has a wife and six small children. He states that he had only 28 pounds weight of powder by him at the time, but the mischief was done by the quantity of fire-works that were on the premises in an unfinished state, and the powder and composition being thus confined, was the cause of so much mischief being done.

YORK HOUSE.

We are very much surprised at the progress, which, in a very short time has been made in this work. Our attention was early attracted by the particular mode of constructing the foundations; which, from the great bulk and weight of the materials employed, we had expected considerably to retard the progress of the building. The excavation of solid ground, for the basement-story of this edifice, we understand, has been to the extent of above 6,000 cart-loads. The foundations, we observe, consists of a great depth of brick-work, amply spread on both sides, to form a broad basis, or footing, for the superstructure. Underneath these footings of brick-work are placed, apparently throughout the building, immense slabs of Yorkshire stone, and upon those slabs, in the middle of the brick-work, a continued cord or bond of oak timber, at least eight or nine inches square, to equalize the pressure upon the surface of the ground, and thereby to guard against the various degrees of solidity and insolidity in the soil itself, and prevent any partial or irregular settlement of the walls. In parts also, we observe, where the ground consists of a loose sand, a further precaution has been taken in excavating to the depth of two or three feet underneath the slabs of Yorkshire stone, in order to create an artificial rock by a mixture of round gravel and quick stone-lime, cemented together with water; and in one part even, we perceive, that piles of not less than three or four and twenty feet long have been driven. Adverting to the heavy and laborious nature of such works as these, we certainly do feel surprised when, at the same time, we see three fourths of the walls, internal and external, of this great building (faced on the outside with stone) raised to a height of above eighteen feet, within the short period of six weeks from the time of laying the first stone.

We greatly admire energy and spirited activity wherever we observe it rightly directed; and we do think those qualities have manifested themselves in a very conspicuous manner in this undertaking; which, although intended as the residence of an individual, is, if the station of that individual, and the local position, as well as magnitude of the building, be considered, a work of more than ordinary importance, and one in which the public at large may be regarded as having an interest. It is with this latter feeling that our attention has been drawn to the mode of conducting this work; and that we shall continue to notice its future progress. We are decidedly adverse, on all occasions, whether public or private, to a lavish and unfruitful expenditure of money; but, at the same time, we detest that kind of parsimony which is often mistaken for economy; and, upon this principle, we applaud the Architects, who, in the free exercise of their judgment, on this occasion have incurred an extra expense in the construction of the foundations of this edifice, rather than trust to any less certain means of guarding against the natural varieties and insolidity of the ground which they have had to deal with.

We are happy to see that the Wyatts (Benjamin and Philip we mean, who are sons of His Majesty's late Surveyor-General, and are the architects to this building) appear to have the same feeling, which we have long entertained, as to the material, which is the most eligible for the exterior of such works; namely, solid stone, instead of that perishable, spurious imitation of stone, which has of late years been employed to a lamentable extent; and owing to the adoption of which, a large proportion of this great metropolis will, in the course of the next thirty years, be, as it were, in rags.

We have not yet been able to obtain a sight of the plan of York House; but it is evident from those parts, which are already built, that it is upon a magnificent scale. The center compartment, we conclude, from its present appearance, is intended to contain the principal staircase; and if so, we anticipate that it will be a splendid feature of the interior; as we judge from some of the surrounding objects, which afford a scale for the eye, that its dimensions will be something like 80 feet by 50 feet; which, ascending (as it must do, on account of light) to the top of the building, affords a most spacious area for such a purpose. The space between this center compartment, and the line marked out by the north external wall, appears, according to a similar assumed scale, not to be less than 55 or 60 feet; and as it is evident that the approach to the center (which we suppose to contain the stair-case) will be through this north compartment of the building, we are led to anticipate that the hall of entrance will also be of great magnitude; and if so, the combined effect of the hall and stair-case is likely to be very imposing.

We are sorry that the restraint upon the admission of visitors, in this, as in most similar cases, prevents our entering into a more detailed explanation, or being more positive as to the correctness of our ideas, with regard to the plan and arrangements of this edifice.

EXHIBITION OF MODELS, SOHO SQUARE.

We are indebted to M. Troye, the proprietor of this exhibition for models of the most interesting points in Switzerland, upon a larger scale than that on which any have hitherto been constructed. The one of Mont Blanc with the vale of Chamouni is remarkably well executed, with regard both to accuracy and to effect. The proportion between the horizontal and vertical scales has been well judged, and is admirably calculated to convey to the spectator just impressions of the magnificence of Swiss scenery. To have constructed a model of the whole of Switzerland upon such a scale would have required by far too large a space for an exhibition, and M. Troye has preferred confining it to the most interesting objects. The greater part of the other models in this exhibition are also upon a large scale, and are equally beautiful: the most striking are the road over the Simplon, the Mont Righi, with the fall of the Rossberg, and the town of Geneva. In short, the extreme accuracy observed with regard to the forms of the objects, the striking imitation of nature, and the powerful effect of the ensemble, procure for this collection of models a decided superiority over every other exhibition of the kind.

There are 103 canals in Great Britain; the total extent of them 2,682¾ miles, about the length from the east to the west of the whole continent of Europe; thirty millions sterling is the valuation of the cost. In the various canals there are 48 subterraneous passages, 40 which have an extent of 32 miles. None of these works, important as they are, were projected prior to 1755.—Register of Arts and Sciences.

Lord Lynedoch has returned, for the first time, from the field "without showing game." While his lordship was lately proceeding in an open carriage to Inchgrundle, one of Mr. Maule's choice pieces of ground for grouse shooting, in clambering up the "dark hill side," the carriage was drenched with rain; and, contrary to the advice of his friend, (General Mackenzie), Lord L. slept all the following night in a tent, pitched on the heath a la militaire, with "his martial cloak around him." In the evening he felt himself quite unfit for action, and was obliged to return without a shot. An idle rumour has gone abroad, that his lordship met with an accident on a temporary bridge; this was not the case.—Montrose Review.

Mr. Marshall's new Perestriphic Panorama, Spring Gardens, continues to be as attractive as ever.

ness the falsehood of this assertion; and declared that Mr. Vidall's profits were so great that he could afford to keep her sister, whom he had seduced, in the first style of elegance and fashion; and that not long ago he had even offered to allow her 12s. a-week, if she would keep away and not interrupt himself or his mistress.

Mr. Vidall acknowledged that he did offer her 12s. a week once, but then his affairs were in a very different state at that time: he could assure the magistrate that he was now almost in an insolvent state, and could with difficulty keep himself out of prison; besides, he has a daughter to support.

Yes, said Mrs. Vidall, and your kept mistress to buy fine dresses for.

The magistrate said, he would strongly recommend Mr. Vidall to allow his wife something reasonable; 4s. a week was too little: he had better allow her 10s. a week, and have done with the business.

Mr. Vidall declared that he neither could nor would allow any such sum.

The magistrate said, that he must then hold him to bail for the assault, and Mrs. Vidall must go to the parish for support; and they would of course see that they were not burdened while her husband could support her.

Mr. Vidall now advanced a step, and said he would allow 7s.

Come, said the Magistrate, as you advance, Mrs. Vidall shall come down a little; make it 8s. Mr. Vidall consented; but not so Mrs. Vidall, for she set up an exclamation of horror and astonishment at such an arrangement, that showed she was by no means satisfied.

The Magistrate told her that she must go once more to her parish friends, the officers, and the warrant should stand over, that Mr. Vidall should not again molest her, but no bail should be required of him.

Mr. Vidall said, he never wanted to molest her; he only turned her out of his house when she came there, as she did each time, drunk.

The Magistrate said, that he must in justice say, that when Mrs. Vidall came for the warrant, immediately after being at his house, she appeared to be perfectly sober.

The parish officers soon after were in attendance, Mrs. Vidall having gone for them instanter; and after another lengthened discussion, Mrs. Vidall very reluctantly agreed to accept of the 8s. per week, and leave her husband unmolested in future.

HATTON GARDEN, WEDNESDAY.—Catherine Edmeads was brought up on a charge of brutally ill-treating Maria Brickhill, an infant only three years old.

The father is a labourer, and the mother sells vegetables in the streets. On Monday evening they were obliged to go out, and left their child in the care of the prisoner. When the mother went away, the child cried, and attempted to follow her down the court, when the prisoner pursued the infant, caught it up, dragged it into the house, and then dashed it against the floor; after which, she beat it on the face, neck, and arms. Several persons then interfered. On examining the poor infant, it was found that the hip joint was dislocated, and the leg was broken below the knee. It was then removed to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, where it now remains under surgical treatment.

The prisoner said that the child had been very noisy and ungovernable, and that her passion had certainly got the better of her judgment when she did so, but she protested that she had no ill-will to the parents, and certainly no intention of doing injury to the infant.

Thisselton stated that he had gone to the Hospital, in order to ascertain the precise nature of the injury—the leg was badly broken, and the hip joint was quite thrown out. The limb was enclosed in splints, and it was treated with every attention.

M. LAING said, that under the circumstances, he should certainly expect the prisoner to give twenty-four hours' notice of bail, or be committed to prison to answer for the assault at the Sessions.

She was then removed to the lock-up room, but bail was ultimately put in for her appearance.

TATTERSALL'S, SEPT. 8.

The attendance of the Subscribers was not so numerous as on Monday, nor was the betting so brisk; but it was important in the alteration it occasioned in the odds. Memnon continues at 5 to 2, no one venturing to bet 3 to 1. Alderman has resumed his place as second favourite, having risen from 9 to 1 to 6 to 1, while the most uncertain and paradoxical of horses, Cleveland, is again receding. The odds against him at opening were 9 to 1, and 9½ to 1 went begging; 10 to 1 was then laid, and 10½ to 1, in one instance, was betted. The odds are as follows:—

ST. LEGER.

5 to 2 agst Memnon	25 to 1 agst Trinculo
6 to 1 agst Alderman	30 to 1 agst Pastime
6½ to 1 agst Redgauntlet	30 to 1 agst Whisker
9½ to 1 agst Cleveland	40 to 1 agst Brownlock
12 to 1 agst Hamer	1000 to 10 agst Cowcatcher
18 to 1 agst Addy	5000 to 35 agst Bob Logic
20 to 1 agst Dauntless

5 to 4 Alderman agst Cleveland (taken)
6 to 4 Redgauntlet agst ditto (taken)
500 even Alderman agst Redgauntlet (taken.)

Lord Sligo's b. g. Bequest, 4 yrs. 7st. 10lb.	2	2

The day's sport was good; and the result of the race for the three-year olds produced a great change in the betting for the St. Leger (on the outsiders,) as soon as it was known. The expeditious travellers had the advantage, but it was upon that race only; the result of the others was unknown. The winner being in several other stakes, the watchfulness of the men of the Turf will be called into action during these Races, to square their books for the great St. Leger.

SECOND DAY.

The Gold Cup, value 100 guineas, was won by Canteen; Actæon came in second. Four started.

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

OUTRAGES IN IRELAND.—On the day after the fair of Rathkeale, a barbarous murder was ascertained to have been committed on a young man of the name of Charles Robertson, steward and gardener to Sir Aubrey Hunt, Bart. of Curragh, who was found lying dead in a field at Cappah, not far from the scene of Major Goring's murder. He was at the fair the day previous, and, on his return home in the evening, was way-laid and killed by some sanguinary wretches, who are not yet discovered. His skull was beat in above the left ear, as if from the blow of a stone, and the fatal wound is believed to have originated in malice.

On Sunday night last, a strong party of insurgents, all armed, attacked six farmers' houses on the lands of Mr. Rose, near Effin, in this county (Limerick.) They beat most severely, with heavy spade handles and short clubs, two of the farmers, Robert Tucker and James Casey, besides a man named Clohessy, who was in the house of the former. They forced an entrance by breaking the windows and doors. Major Maxwell, as a Magistrate, proceeded next morning to inquire into the circumstances, and learned that the party took some of the inmates outside, and showed them a well dressed man on horseback, with a white sash and white band round his hat, saying, "Captain Rock is still alive." They demanded fire-arms at two of those houses, and ordered them, under pain of destruction to themselves and families, not to charge their workmen more than five guineas an acre for the first crop of potatoes, and 3*l*. for the second crop. On retiring they took off the farmers' horses, which were found next morning on the road to Doneraile, near Ballyhoura mountain, from which circumstance it is conjectured they came from the county of Cork. In their return they met a steward of Mr. Hill, of Doneraile, who was distraining for rent, and deprived him of his gun, which they carried away.

On Monday night, the 22d instant, a man named Benjamin Reardon, of Roughal, in the county of Kerry, near Newmarket, returning from the fair of Dromagh, in the county of Cork, was so severely beaten in his endeavours to protect a female from outrage, that he only survived four days. An inquest was held on the body by William Allen and James Crounin, Esqrs., Magistrates of Kerry, in the absence of the Coroner, and a verdict of Wilful Murder returned against a man whose name for the present must remain concealed.

A DESPERATE LOVER.—On Wednesday last, early in the morning, an Inquest was held at Carton, on the body of Patrick Doyle, one of the under gamekeepers of his Grace the Duke of Leinster, who was found lying dead in the dairy-yard, his fowling-piece and a poker by his side, with the latter of which he had effected the fatal discharge which caused his death. The Coroner, Mr. Harrison, (being then engaged holding an inquest at Rathmore) repaired, on hearing the melancholy intelligence, the following morning early, to Carton, and, having sworn a Jury, proceeded to hear the evidence, after a previous view of the body, which was an awful spectacle, the entire of the right breast being dreadfully lacerated, and the shirt and clothing in front burned by the wadding.

Patrick Quinn examined.—Swore that being employed at Carton, he was going to his work at half-past five o'clock; that on passing through the dairy-yard he saw Patrick Doyle, whom he knew, lying on his back; a gun, which appeared to have been just discharged, was lying with a poker by his side; his clothes were burning from the wadding; the poker must have been used by the deceased to press upon the trigger, and the deceased thus effected his fatal purpose; witness gave the alarm; Matthew Cooney was with him; a love affair, witness believes, was the cause of the deceased committing this rash act.

James Kearney examined.—Is his Grace's sportsman; the deceased was his under game-keeper; saw him last alive on Tuesday evening; heard of his death on the morning following, between five and six o'clock; came immediately to where he was lying; observed a gun shot wound under his right breast; it must have been effected with shot; deceased had no bullets; witness is positive deceased's mind was disturbed, but not from his situation, as he was very comfortable; he was paying his addresses to one of the maids at Carton, a girl of about 16 or 17 years old; deceased was 60 years of age; he had told witness that he had asked the girl to marry him, and that she held out promises that she would, but that the match was broke off by her, which preyed upon his spirits; witness found a letter on Doyle's table addressed to him (witness;) it was as follows, and which is in deceased's hand-writing:—

"Dear Kearney—My last words to you are this, see me buried in some church-yard, and God bless you and your children, and my death I leave on T———ys and B. her daughter. If I can, I will be revenged of her, she brought me to this. Dear Kearney no more,

"PAT. DOYLE."

Examination continued—Never heard that the person named in the letter, or her family, ever gave any encouragement to Doyle; the gun found beside Doyle was one appropriated for his use.

Charles Clarke examined—Knew the deceased; witness is a harness-maker in the service of his Grace; is of opinion the deceased was not right in his mind; he always was talking of B. T. and saying she promised to marry him, but afterwards refused; witness heard deceased got no encouragement, either from the young girl or her family.

The Coroner charged the Jury, who found that the deceased not being of sound mind, &c. &c. lunatic and distracted, did discharge a gun, loaded with leaden balls, against his breast, thereby giving himself a mortal wound, of which he at the time and place aforesaid, instantly died.—Dublin Freeman's Journal.

Another of those fatal accidents arising from incautiously leaving guns loaded, occurred at Matlock's Farm, near Colchester, on Tuesday. The son of Mr. Houldsworth, who manages the farm, incautiously left his gun loaded in the kitchen, after returning from shooting; and his young brother, a boy eight years of age, took it up and pointing it to the maid servant, said he would shoot her. The gun went off upon the half-cock, and lodged the contents in the side of a youth of the name of Wilkinson, a husbandman, who was sitting at dinner. It did not kill him on the spot, but not the slightest hopes are entertained of his recovery.

On Thursday afternoon, a son of a farmer of the name of Kirwan, who lives near Clara, while handing a gun, let off the contents, and shot his brother and first cousin dead, and wounded his sister. They were all children. The unhappy boy who caused the catastrophe is only eleven years of age.—Leinster Journal.

BURGLARIES IN NORFOLK.—Six men, namely, Robert, John, and William Howell, brothers, and William Marshall, William Massingham, and William Scottow, have been committed for trial, charged with committing some of the most daring burglaries upon record. They are charged with breaking and entering various houses, from which they stole watches, plate, money, wearing apparel, and any portable article which they could conveniently carry away.—From the evidence taken before the Magistrates, it appears, that these men set out upon their maraunding expedition with the design of plundering the habitations of persons engaged in the harvest, and who had thus left their houses empty and unprotected. They were observed by a woman to enter more than one house at Weitwell, near Reepham, and they had amassed a pretty considerable booty. They took from one cottage twenty guineas and a silver watch, and in others had a more limited success. At length a miller, who was desired to leave some meal in an outhouse, should nobody be at home in one of the dwellings, found the doors open and the furniture displaced. He immediately acquainted the owners, and a pursuit commenced. The thieves having dropped the property above-mentioned on the road, concealed themselves in a wood, which was so well watched, that when they at length quitted their hiding-place, they were again tracked at their very heels. Thus pressed, they took to the fields, but soon were surrounded by harvestmen at work, and seeing their capture inevitable, they determined upon resistance. The first man who came up was knocked down, and a skirmish ensued, but they were soon overpowered, taken, and conveyed to the castle.

DREADFUL ACCIDENT.—On Monday, Major RIDGE, who was at his brother's seat, at Vining, near Rogate, Petersfield, on a shooting excursion, went out with his servant to enjoy the sports of the field. After going over a hedge, his servant handed him his gun through the hedge with the muzzle towards him, when it accidentally went off, and the contents passed through the Major's body. When the account left he was alive, but there was but little hope of his recovery. The family were in the greatest distress, and the whole parish lamented the accident, as he was universally respected.

EAST RETFORD, SEPT. 7.—The weather since the 24th ult., has been most propitious to the hop plantations in this neighbourhood, of which the present appearances are an evident testimony. In the greater part of the plantations, where any hops were hardly expected, the growers are anticipating at least two or three hundred weight per acre; which, however, will only be about the eighth part of a good crop. In the best plantations the improvements are equally apparent; the hop continues to increase in strength and magnitude, whilst some have already assumed the tint of maturity. Mr. Robert Hudson, of this place, has got his forward bines plucked and bagged; and if we may judge of the quality of the hops of this year's growth from his sample, we shall be led to conclude that, although in quantity generally we have scarcely a quarter of a crop, in quality they have seldom or never been exceeded.

BRADFORD CLOTHIERS AND WEAVERS.—The Bradford masters, some of whom have blamed us for censuring their resolution to stop the mills, last week bore the best testimony possible to the justice of our opinion. At a meeting at the Sun Inn, they determined to set the mills running again, and they are accordingly now at work. They also resolved to address a circular to the masters in the neighbouring towns, explanatory of their own views, and requesting the co-operation of those whom they addressed. The object of the circular was to impress upon the worsted-spinners and manufacturers in Baildon, Bingley, Cleckheaton, Darlington, Halifax, Keighley, Lancaster, Leeds, Morton, Rochdale, Steeton, Sutton, and Wilsden, the necessity of uniting with those of Bradford in stopping their works altogether, and thus effect the suppression of the Workmen's Union. If the other masters should not concur in this plan, the Bradford manufacturers will then, it is said, give the advanced prices required, and let things in consequence regulate themselves afterwards. The following letter we received late last night from our correspondent in that town:—

"Bradford, Sept. 7, 1825.

"Nothing of moment has yet been done by the masters, as I suppose the circulars addressed by their solicitor, Mr. Moulden, to the masters in the neighbouring towns and villages, desiring a definite answer to the proposition of the Bradford masters, to make common cause with them against the Union of the wool-combers and weavers, had not been answered on Monday last, (when they had a meeting,) either by sufficient numbers, or in such a manner as to induce them to come to a determination, either to continue the contest, or to give the wages required. Their determination will very probably be made at their next meeting, and it is strongly anticipated that it will be to give the advance. In that case, Keighley or Halifax, or both, with the neighbouring villages, will be the scene of the next strike, unless the wages demanded be immediately given."—Leeds Intelligencer.

DOVER, SEPT. 5.—The Terrific Flight, as it was announced, of Mr. Courtney, the American phenomenon, from the Heights at Dover to the Rope-walk in the Bay, took place this evening about five o'clock. In consequence of hand-bills being distributed for some time previous, an intense interest pervaded the inhabitants and visitors, who assembled in immense numbers. A rope of two and a half inches in circumference, and 230 fathoms, or 460 yards in length, was made fast to an anchor on the Heights, and stretched to a capstern of the Rope-walk, not so tight but that a segment was formed by a prop being placed near the end. Every necessary preparation being made, he was suspended under the rope by stays or braces at the shoulders, waist, and one foot, at each of which parts a sheaved block traversed on the rope. Having both hands at liberty, he waved a small red flag in each, which, being contrasted with his white dress, had an imposing effect. He was started off the precipice head foremost, amidst the shouts of thousands, and the velocity with which he descended is almost incredible: the friction of the blocks on the rope caused them to smoke considerably, and in just nineteen seconds from the time of his departure he reached nearly to the opposite side of the Pent, when an accumulation of mud on the rope, and the segment thereof, caused him to stop rather abruptly, and he was taken into a boat apparently somewhat exhausted, and brought to shore.—Kentish Gazette.

CAMBRIDGE, FRIDAY.—The following Gentlemen of this University were ordained at Bristol, on the 28th ult. by the Lord Bishop of that diocese:—

THE AGE.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 11.

It is with feelings of the most sincere satisfaction we announce to our readers the total defeat of the Turks before Missolonghi, in one of the most signal engagements which ever occurred in that mighty land, which is the scene of this desperate conflict; the nature of which appears to us calculated not alone to redeem the character of the Greeks in the opinions of those who hitherto vacillated, but to convey an assurance that the crisis of their fate is now for ever past. Without being visited with the spirit of augury, which at one time predominated in this devoted country, we may be permitted to look upon the period when we record this action, as a prognostication of the freedom of those who fought in it—the month of August, which will record to after ages the battle of Missolonghi, stands imperishably registered in the annals of Greece, as that month in which was fought the memorable battle of Thermopylæ, the honour of all who survived it, and the everlasting monument of those who perished in it: and, although we would not be thought to detract from its splendour, we are free to think that the present conflict is quite as likely to establish the late drooping situation of Greece, as the former was to render its glory eternal. We subjoin the authorities which have reached this country, as confirmatory of this gratifying intelligence, which consist of a letter from Corfu, under date the 11th, and another from Trieste, of the 19th, ultimo:

"CORFU, AUGUST 11.

"I cannot fail to communicate to you the following satisfactory news from Greece. Know then that after Missolunghi had been blockaded 105 days, by ROMELI VALESSI, and strictly besieged for some days by land and sea, by all the Turkish forces, they endeavoured, through the means of the Commanders of the European vessels at that station, to persuade the besieged to capitulate, promising to leave the inhabitants, not only their arms, but also all their effects. The mediators did not fail to intimidate the inhabitants, by saying, that if they did not give up the place the enemy would take it by assault, and give quarter to none; and they even represented the Greek fleet as unable to come to their assistance, since the mariners were occupied in transporting their families to places of security in other countries. They said also, that the whole of the Peloponnesus was on the point of falling into the power of IBRAHIM PACHA. On hearing this, some timid Chiefs began to hesitate, and a council o war was held. The first who answered the proposition was the brave NOTO BOZZARIE, who spoke to this effect, 'I and my 500 will sacrifice ourselves, and the enemy shall, at least, not gain Missolunghi, without having planted his flag among our bones.' In the same manner the famous NICETAS replied also, and after him all the others, who at first had been inclined to capitulate. The CAPTAIN PACHA having heard this, informed ROMELI VALESSI, that the time was precious, since he expected the Greek flotilla every moment in those waters, and that then he would not be able to remain there any longer, and that, therefore, the order for the assault should be immediately given. That he, in the mean-time, would second the assault with his boats. ROMELI VALESSI immediately ordered all his troops, who were in great numbers, some say 32,000, to arms; and on the 2d of August, two hours before sun rise, the Turks assaulted the place on all sides by land, and 4,000 men in their boats assisted their operations by sea. The firing lasted four hours, and all the surrounding places were shaken by it.

"The commanders of the European vessels stood on the look-out, on the masts of their ships, with telescopes in their hands, but the denseness of the smoke impeded their seeing. When the carnage was somewhat subsided, they saw, with surprise, the banner of the cross still waving on the walls of the fortress; for they had not doubted in the least of its being obliged to surrender to the assault of so formidable a force. The Greeks fought with indescribable ardour and intrepidity, and filled the trenches with the enemy's corpses. Several thousands found a grave beneath the walls of Missolonghi, and the rest fled, pursued by the Greeks, to Kerascovo. A great quantity of ammunition, baggage, colours, &c. fell into the power of the Greeks. Nicetas performed prodigies of valour at Vassiladi against the enemy, who attacked that place by sea, all of whom fell victims, as the Turkish fleet fled before they could regain their vessels. An Austrian schooner of war brought this intelligence to Zante. An English frigate arrived here, has brought many letters and couriers, which come express from all sides, and confirm this important victory. Our Lord High Commissioner shed tears of joy, and conceded the merited tribute of praise to Grecian valour, and particularly to that of Noto Bozzaris. The same frigate, coming in haste with the news, passed the Turkish fleet, which was in action with the Greek squadron. A merchant vessel from Ithaca, confirms the above, and adds, that on Monday and Tuesday the Captain heard a heavy cannonading, and saw the summits of the mountains covered with people with telescopes in their hands. We expect to hear almost immediately the result of the naval engagement. We hope that the Peloponnesus will soon convince Ibrahim Pacha of the valour of its inhabitants. He has already lost many of his followers in different engagements. He is surrounded by 20,000 Greeks at Tripotama, who will not permit him to escape."

"Trieste, August 19.

"We have the pleasure of communicating to you that this moment the English packet arrived here in thirteen days from Corfu, and brought intelligence that an English ship of war arrived there (at Corfu) in four days from Missolunghi, the Captain of which positively states that, from the 13th to the 16th July, the Turks had three times assaulted Missolunghi by sea as well as by land, and that each time were repulsed with great slaughter. Meantime twenty-four Greek vessels arrived off Missolunghi, and obliged the Turkish fleet to take refuge under the fortress of Patrass Ibrahim Pacha having proceeded a second time towards Napoli di Romania, was again repulsed from there, and retreated to a place called Tripotama, where he shut himself up, being blockaded by the son of Colocotroni. In his retreat he suffered considerable losses. Providence appears to be with us again, and we give you joy for all this happy news, which is beyond doubt."

In addition to which we subjoin an extract of another letter from Corfu, dated the 14th ultimo, fully establishing the truth of the preceding ones.

"CORFU, AUG. 14.—No doubt now remains of the entire defeat of the besiegers of Missolonghi. Redschid Pacha, having attempted three different times between the 13th and 16th of July, to take that place by assault, and having been driven back each time with considerable loss, assembled fresh troops in order to try the success of a fourth attempt. He, however, remained irresolute till the arrival of the Turkish fleet under the Capitan Pacha, which also blocked Missolonghi closely by sea. The Capitan Pacha having landed a great quantity of artillery and several Europeans, sent to the Commanders of the European vessels on that station, to request of them to persuade the inhabitants of Missolonghi to capitulate, on their being permitted to retire with their arms and all their possessions. These good mediators, from pure philanthrophy, endeavoured to induce the inhabitants and Chiefs to accept the generous proposition of the Pacha, by representing to them the danger they would be exposed to if they did not, and telling them that Ibrahim Pacha was in the heart of the Morea, that our mariners disagreed, that the Spezziotes were transporting their families to America, and that the Hydroites were preparing to do the same; and they said many other things suggested to them, by their desire to save so many persons from the unsparing anger of the great Aga; but all their rhetoric had no effect on Bozzaris. Many Chiefs hesitated, and seemed inclined to surrender, thinking they might confide in what was told them, and trust to the counsel of so many brave men. But the hero Bozzaris told them, that he and his five hundred men would remain and become victims of their devotion to their country. He therefore sent away the mediators with words dictated by the bitterness of his soul, and they returned to the Pacha with his answer, begging him to pay no attention to the words of men driven to despair, but to treat them with his accustomed philanthrophy, on his becoming master of the place. In concert with Redschid Pacha, he began then to prepare for the assault, which took place in the morning of the 2d of August. The Captain Pacha sent 100 small armed vessels, with 5600 men, who began the attack by sea, whilst Redschid Pacha, with 30,000, as it is generally said, seconded him by land. The engagement was obstinate: the sky was hidden by the smoke, and the earth trembled from the shock of the cannon. The battle lasted six hours, during which time the European commanders could see nothing on account of the smoke. At last the cannonading ceased, and two hours after, when the smoke had a little subsided, they then saw the standard of the Cross still remaining on the fortress of Missolunghi. Then the Commanders approached in their boats, and saw how terrible the defeat of the barbarians had been. The trenches were filled, and the sea covered with dead bodies. They say there were fifteen thousand killed and wounded. In the meantime arrived Miaulis and the Captain Pacha was obliged to flee to Castra, on which the Greeks burned one frigate, one corvette, one schooner, and took all of the 100 small vessels which had been engaged in this affair. Thus ended this famous expedition against Missolunghi. The land forces fled, pursued by our troops. On the 4th of August the Captain Pacha appeared in the waters of Zante, and Mianlis was in chase of him. This news was brought us by eye-witnesses of the combat, among whom were the Austrian commander, Bouratovitch, and the captain of an English frigate arrived at Corfu. The bells of Zante rang from the morning to the evening. The people seized on several merchants, who were known to be in the service of the Captain Pacha and Ibrahim Pacha, and would have been put to death, had not the local government prevented it. The Austrian vessels in the port were ordered to retire, lest the enraged multitude might do them some injury. Thus have all the hopes of the enemy, and of those Europeans who aided them, been frustrated."

In the same proportion that there is no country to which our thoughts can be so much directed, on a principle of admiration and worldly gratitude, as Greece; so is there none in whose emanation from the thraldom she has so long existed under, we can half as much rejoice. There is not a feeling of intellectual attainment---of classical association---of art and arms, in all their pride and pomp---that does not turn, by universal consent, to these realms. Greece, fallen as she has been, is the common parent of all that's grand---all that's free---all that's perfect in mind, and unmanacled in body; and the remembrance of all her pristine majesty, and how much other ages are indebted to it, is quite enough to operate, with a power of electricity, on those who now contemplate the struggle her fallen sons are making to revive the spirit of their country's character, and hand down to yet surviving worlds a memory not altogether unworthy of that ancestry they now represent. It will be remarked that the overthrow of the Turks at Missolonghi was followed up by an engagement between the two fleets, and although the result is not yet known, we feel quite assured of its nature---and here we may be again permitted to indulge in a classical retrospect; for, oddly enough, the famous battle of Thermopylæ, in which the pride of the Persian army, under XERXES, was annihilated by a handful of Greeks, was followed just two months after, by the naval engagement between the same Power, under the same Chief, and a few Greeks, in the gulf of Salamis. It is quite impossible to contemplate this occurrence, and very extraordinary coincidence, without feelings of the fullest exultation. We seem inspired into a belief that the same spirit which warmed the heroes, who blazon in the annals of these great achievements, comes breathing through the veins of their degraded and oppressed offspring, as if a consciousness of early eminence, and present loss of it, had burst forth in one uncontrolable energy, and emulated them to this vast renown. There is no impulse of which the heart is susceptible to which they are not entitled: they have every prayer we can breathe---every blessing we can bestow on them---the religion, under the banner of which they fight, will guard them in all its perils, and we feel, we hope, we devoutly pray, it will not be long ere their valour, their devotedness, and their patriotism will succeed in extirpating from the hallowed shores of their forefathers their present ruthless invaders---those bands of infidelity, whose existence is a blot upon earth---those hordes of murderers whose barbarities have depopulated this ill-fated land, and whose crimes have called down the vengeance of their offended MAKER upon their savage souls. It would seem that the very precepts instilled by the late LORD BYRON into the bosoms of the Greeks, has not been without its effects---his presence was a powerful incentive to their declining hope; and in his immortal writings he left them the richest legacy such a country could hope to be bequeathed. They appear to have been sensible of all he did, and all he wrote for them; and in illustration of his great memory, and the respect which they have paid to it, by obeying in this their late glorious fight, the injunctions he laid on them, we cannot do better than transcribe the following splendid and appropriate passage from one of His LORDSHIP's most splendid works:

"Clime of the unforgotten brave!
Whose land, from plain to mountain cave,
Was Freedom's home, or glory's grave;
Shrine of the mighty! can it be
That this is all remains of thee?
Approach, then, craven crouching slave—
Say is not this Thermopylæ?
The waters blue that round you lave
Oh servile offspring of the free—

Pronounce what sea, what shore is this?
The gulf, the rock of Salamis!
These scenes, their story not unknown,
Arise and make again your own;
Snatch from the ashes of your sires
The embers of their former fires,
And he, who in the strife expires,
Will add to theirs a name of fear
That Tyranny shall quake to hear,
And leave his sons a hope, a fame,
They too will rather die than shame;
For Freedom's battle once begun,
Bequeathed by bleeding sire to son,
Though baffled OFT is ever WON."

EPIGRAMMATIC DIALOGUE

Between LORD GLENGALL and his "CARA."

He. I for your beauty, dearest * * * *, am dying,
And at your feet I lie!
She. I see you're lying!

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "AGE."

Dear MR. AGE,

WE take in your funny paper down in these parts, and are so pleased with the general view you give us of every thing—"man and horse," as we say here, that I take the freedom of sending you my opinion on a subject which is very much the talk in London, and, therefore, equally as much in vogue here abouts---I mean Mr. MARTIN'S Act, and his late numerous attempts to put it into force; and as the best possible way of convincing you of its usefulness and necessity, I shall ask leave to show you how differently we treat the dumb creatures down here to what the Londoners do, and all in fear of MR. MARTIN'S Act. We live in a beautiful part of the country, within a tolerable reasonable distance of several fine race-courses, surrounded by a sporting land, and on a famous posting road, and you must therefore agree at once that no place can give better evidence, in every respect, of the treatment of animals; and from my own eye-sight I can assure you of the truth of all I set down here: and afore the people in these parts, even if MR. MARTIN'S Act was not in their eye, would suffer such treatment to their horses as they do in your great city, they would either shoot 'em, or not keep 'em at all. We have a capital conveyance that comes through here from London, called the Flying Van, which is not suffered to be loaded more than fourteen feet in height from the wheels, and is drawn by four horses, and a man sleeps behind to guard the goods; and the proprietors have agreed among themselves that they will discharge any driver who goes more than twelve miles an hour, or ten if very hilly; and I am very sorry to tell you, sir, that this excellent conveyance has not succeeded, owing, as I hear, to some distemper that has killed many of the animals, and the concern is greatly in debt: and I have heard the folks say, that in consequence, instead of A VAN, it ought to be called a rear, being so in debt; but I don't know what they mean. For posting, MR. AGE, I shall make bold enough to match our part of the country with any, both for the safety and quiet rate of travelling; for not a very long while ago, I and Mrs. S., and another, took a post-chay to Oxford races; we are only seventeen miles off, which distance we comfortably did in an hour and a-half, as we were determined not to press our cattle, having to come back: so according we drove to the course, staid there about three hours, during which our most human post-boy watered his horses, and gave them some corn we brought along with us; and then we went home again in about the same time, as comfortable as possible, without the least fatigue; but Mrs. S. was sorry to hear that the near mare died that night from catching a slight cold while standing eating on the race course. At the races too, Mr. AGE, it was beautiful to see the animals running---not the least use of whip required, as the spur did every thing, and a free bleeding o' the side does all the good in the world: they run, on an average, about three miles in five minutes, which is about thirty-six miles an hour; whereas, before Mr. MARTIN'S act, the racer, christened Eclipse, used to go a mile a minute, which is at the rate of sixty miles an hour, which is all the difference, and proves the great advantage of the worthy man's act of parliament. As respects hunting, no place can be more appropriate; its a fine hilly country, and though it blows the horses going up'em, yet running down again fetches their breath wonderful. We have many steeple chases too, which I am told are so called in respect of the many a steep hill about here; but they say at Oxford its in compliment to the many churches in that city: the hedges here abouts being up of stone walls, only break the horses' knees, while in many countries the brambles, bushes, and trees tear their flesh most cruel. We have not had more than fifteen animals fall dead the last season, and not many more dogs, which is another sign of Mr. MARTIN'S good act; for before they'd sometimes gone sixty miles a day, and for several seasons past we have not had a run of much more than forty; so you see what good comes about of all this. It is really shocking to hear of the many cases this worthy Member brings up at Bow-street, and other streets, for no punishment can be too much for your Hackney-Coachmen; they know well enough their horses won't go faster than a certain pace, and therefore it is no use beating 'em; but it isn't so hereabouts, for the more you beat them, the faster they get on, which shows the difference between town and country cattle. As my object, besides showing the public good done by Mr. MARTIN is to say a word in favour of our neighbouring post-masters, I hope, Mr. AGE, you will use your influence to get as much custom on this road as possible, the posting is only fifteen-pence a mile in many parts, which is managed by not giving the animals as much to eat as before, it being thought a good pace on a full stomach produces suffocation now and then; besides this, they have all come to an understanding not to exceed thirteen miles in an hour, and hope you would not pay the lads to go much faster, as it might distress some of the horses occasionally. Before I send this off, I wish to tell you a circumstance which in case it gets into your London newspapers wrongly told, might create an idea of cruelty down here, but its no such thing; there was a miller close by us loading his mare as usual, last Wednesday as ever was, with flour, and the mare's back broke; but it was no fault of his, for he had only put ten sacks on her back, and the servant who went with her got a top of the sacks, and then she fell, and the servant, poor fellow, only went to deliver the sacks, and take care of the mare.

Hoping you will insert this, I am, dear Mr. Age,
Your constant reader,
MR. SMITH.

Burford, Sep. 8, 1825.

Post Mark. Would you be good enough to suggest to Mr. M. the good he would do by teaching Coachmen and Post Boys to be a little more genteel, as well as less cruel; for the fellow who drove us to Oxford, when we got home, came up to me and said: "Now, MASTER SMITH, down with the dust;" and, as I did not know at first that he was asking for his money, I, of course, said: "I wish I could 'down' with it, for it has nearly choaked us for the last ten miles."

MR. S.

ELECTIONEERING.

AIR—Down, Derry down.

As the time for Elections now draws near at hand,
And each Member's counting his chance for a stand;
We would to the minds of some voters recall,
A few who will stand—not the least chance at all.
Down, Derry down.

The Middlesex voters declare, every one,
They 've found out the diff'rence 'twixt father and son;
And though the late SAM was perhaps a WIT bred,
They swear there is none in the present SAM'S head.
Down, Derry down.

At Reading, where FISH-sauce has got such renown,
They're resolved to send Fish up much better to town;
In order their present supplier may see
They're not to be palmed on by men such as he.
Down, Derry down.

They've got "an idea" at Chester, for once,
That LORD VISCOUNT BELGRAVE'S a bit of a dunce;
And as one from their town lately beat him, they've swore
If he sets up for Chester, they'll beat him once more.
Down, Derry down.

MASTER HUME will find out that the Aberdeen men
His famed COMBINATION BILL properly "ken;"
For each who was christened a HUMER before,
Has combined to appear in such humour no more.
Down, Derry down.

The people of Coventry feel the disgrace
Of dubbing their members heir-looms of their place,
And wisely, at last, scruple not to express,
They will have less of MOORE, and no more of EL-LICE.
Down, Derry down.

At Taunton they all are so sick of their lot,
That their cry is, "No bearing—the member we've got"—
And besides, as to PEACE they are all so inclined,
Its no wouder that Warre's not at all to their mind.
Down, Derry down.

LORD SEFTON has shown his constituents too plain,
So MUCH of his BACK, and so little of brain,
That the people of Droitwich have taken a whim,
And have settled on "turning their back upon him."
Down, Derry down.

At Gloucester they 've sworn the first moment they can,
They 'll not have a goose, in the guise of a man;
And at Arundel, too, they no longer will choose
A man who, without any guise, is a goose.
Down, Derry down.

If GLENGALL, whose tongue sticks at nothing, should mean
Tipperary to stick to, and dare there be seen,
As they had to take CAHER once before, it is plain,
They ought to "take care" how they take him again.
Down, Derry down.

At Rutland they 're all grown so moral, they 've swore
They 'll not have a Member who married ————;
And the reason just now why so modest they 've grown,
Is—that one of the name is the first upon town.
Down, Derry down.

MICHAEL ANGELO always has entered the House
With a mouthful, and yet sat as still as a mouse;
But at Durham they 've found that whene'er in his seat,
Though he 'd nothing to say, he 'd a MOUTHFUL to eat.
Down, Derry down.

As for LORD ARTHUR HILL, and LORD NUGENT, and some,
Whose brains, if they have any, lie in their b——,
In Downshire and Aylesbury all have arrang'd,
That the rumps they have got for some heads shall be chang'd.
Down, Derry down.

We 've mention'd a few, as their merits arise,
For wisdom, truth, modesty, virtue, and size;
But who, though to the Poll all their int'rest they bring,
Need 'nt trouble their pole about any such thing,
Down, Derry down.

We subjoin the extract of a letter, published in yesterday's papers, announcing the total subjugation of the Burmese empire by the British troops, with the capture of its monarch and the capital of Ummerapoora; on which it is only necessary to remark, that a mere reference to dates will convince the most casual reader that no credit is to be attached to the account, from the total impossibility of any announcement being made in the time specified, when viewed in a relative situation, with the already ascertained movements of our army.

Extract of a Letter dated Singapore, April 9.

"Having an opportunity for Europe by a French brig bound to Bordeaux, I cannot let it escape without communicating to you the important news which has just reached us, being no less than a report of the complete subjugation of the Birman Empire by the British forces, and the capture of its golden-footed monarch and his capital, Ummerapoora. The report is brought by the British ship Caroline, Captain Johnson, in 17 days from Bangkok, the capital and chief sea-port of the kingdom of Siam, in dispatches from the Siamese Government to the Resident of this settlement; which he was particularly anxious to forward to Bengal immediately on receipt, but at present there is no opportunity. I have had all the particulars which were known there from Captain Johnson's own mouth, whose veracity is undoubted. He states the report to have reached Bangkok only the day before he sailed, viz. on the 20th or 21st of March, and the Portuguese Consul, who resides there, and is much in the confidence of the people connected with the Court, assured him that it might be relied on as a fact. The British army, or the advanced guard of it, were said to be only 3 days' journey, or not above 100 miles, distant from Bangkok at the time this ship left, and news was arriving from it almost every other day. There was some story about a massacre having taken place in one of the most considerable of the Birman towns, which had submitted to our arms. It is said that the Commander of the forces having received the submission of the inhabitants and the Government authorities, appointed such of them as were deemed trustworthy to certain offices in the state, and left what was deemed a sufficient detachment in the place for keeping all quiet. However, the main body of the army, it is said, were scarcely out of sight on its advance, ere the treacherous Birmans rose upon the soldiers, and, it is said, put them all hors de combat. The news of this catastrophe reaching the Commander, he returned instantly with the main body, and put every soul of that town's people to the sword; which signal vengeance infused such a panic into the rest of the nation, that wherever he proceeded after that, he met with nothing but submission; and at the time the report came away, the whole empire was stated to have submitted to our authority, and to be in the occupation of our troops. If the report be true, the official accounts of it must have reached Calcutta ere this, and we may now daily be looking for it from thence."

THEATRICALS.

COWPER tells us, that "none but an author knows an author's cares," and this remark may with equal truth be applied to the troubles and annoyances of an editor; and probably not the most trivial of them is, the necessity of attending first representations, and the unpleasantry of having to report accordingly!---but before we proceed to the task that has been this week set us, we have to notice the return of MR. MATHEWS, and to express our unfeigned gratification at his delightful performance of Jonathan. MATHEWS is certainly the most accomplished comedian living; his portraitures are those of life, divested of all grimace, and despising any aim at buffoonery for the purpose of extracting applause: his delineations are easily judged, and soon detected, for they occur to your observation every day, "at every turn," and the identity becomes at once apparent. Having premised thus much, proceed we to speak of the productions in the theatre which is MATHEWS's present scene of popularity, and which has been particularly fertile the last week in its novelties; and truly sorry are we to say that the said novelties do not appear unto us at all calculated to exalt the reputation of the Lyceum, its authors, or its performers; for the Shepherd Boy, though highly successful, does not afford MISS KELLY, its admirable representative, so many opportunities as the Peasant Boy, and numerous other similar parts, and consequently, in its production, becomes an unnecessary expense; while the Stout Gentleman may rank among the worst of all attempts, and is, therefore, a still greater onus on the concern. The former of these dramas is from the clever pen of ARNOLD, the manager, and MISS KELLY'S representation of the Shepherd Boy may be classed amongst her happiest efforts; and that, with the excellent performance of KEELEY as Ambroise, is all that occurred to us particularly worthy of record. The latter is from the pen of the punning PEAKE; and while we really must say that a much worse thing has seldom passed before our eyes, we are disposed to look upon it as the momentary effort of a lazy genius, and forgive MASTER DICCON, on the one score that he can pique himself on having written so many excellent ones. By way of a little joke, we hope the people will flock to see the Shepherd Boy, but nothing can secure the attendance to the Stout Gentleman of any persons, but the assistant shopkeepers, who, let loose from their counters so much earlier than heretofore, keep up such a monstrous clatter about it, that on the evening in question, we heard barely half of its monstrous absurdities.

The Haymarket continues to run on MADAME VESTIS'S legs, and without enquiring how far MADAME may be fatigued by the experiment, we have only to answer for the audience, who are certainly as completely worn out as heart can desire---the general result of all attempts to aggrandize any performer of even greater merit than VESTRIS, at the expense of a whole company. The fate we predicted would await Roses and Thorns has come to pass, for we find it is to be superceded by MR. POOLE'S Comedy, on Tuesday next, of which opinion is very favourable in its report. Thus much of the Haymarket ---of Drury Lane and Covent Garden we hear that Mr. ELLISTON is, under favour of the Ramsgate sea breezes, recovering rapidly; and MR. C. KEMBLE was expected---with that degree of anticipation that attended the meeting of two as great men on the raft of Tilsit---to meet SIR G. SMART at Vienna this week; that both theatres are about to produce Aladdin, operatized by BISHOP at the one house, and WEBER at the other; and that they commence hostilities on the 24th and 26th of the present month. We further find, on the authority of the Birmingham Gazette, that Mr. BUNN has brought an action against a London Journal for a libel on the character of his wife; and that the celebrated ROSSINI nearly put an end to his existence, by having swallowed, for a wager, fifty ices in a certain given period---upon hearing which our worthy friend, SIR WILLIAM CURTIS, exclaimed that this predilection, in so celebrated a composer, for high screams, (ice creams we presume) was not at all to be wondered at. Beyond these points, we are not aware that any thing of import has occurred at this present writing.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

GREECE.

Extract of a Private Letter, dated Corfu, August 11.

"I cannot fail to communicate to you the following satisfactory news from Greece. After Missolonghi had been blockaded 105 days, by Romeli Valessi, and strictly besieged for some days by land and sea, by all the Turkish forces, they endeavoured, through the means of the commanders of the European vessels at that station, to persuade the besieged to capitulate, promising to leave the inhabitants, not only their arms, but also all their effects. The mediators did not fail to intimidate the inhabitants, by saying, that if they did not give up the place, the enemy would take it by assault, and give quarter to none; and they even represented the Greek fleet as unable to come to their assistance, since the mariners were occupied in transporting their families to places of security in other countries. And the said, also, that the whole of the Peloponessus was on the point of falling into the power of Ibrahim Pacha. On hearing this, some timid Chiefs began to hesitate, and a council of war was held. The first who answered the proposition was the brave Nota Bozzaris, who spoke to this effect, 'I and my 500 will sacrifice ourselves, and the enemy shall, at least, not gain Missolonghi, without having planted his flag among our bones.' In the same manner the famous Nicetas replied also, and after him all the others, who at first had been inclined to capitulate. The Capitan Pacha having heard this, informed Romeli Valessi, that the time was precious, since he expected the Greek flotilla every moment in those waters, and that then he would not be able to remain there any longer, and that, therefore, the order for the assault should be immediately given. That he, in the meantime, would second the assault with his boats. Romeli Valessi immediately ordered all his troops, who were in great numbers, some say 32,000, to arms; and on the 2d of August, two hours before sunrise, the Turks assaulted the place on all sides by land, and 4,000 men in their boats assisted their operations by sea. The firing lasted four hours, and all the surrounding places were shaken by it.

"The commanders of the European vessels stood on the look-out, on the masts of their ships, with telescopes in their hands, but the denseness of the smoke impeded their seeing. When the carnage was somewhat subsided, they saw, with surprise, the banner of the cross still waving on the walls of the fortress; for they had not doubted in the least of its being obliged to surrender to the assault of so formidable a force. The Greeks fought with indescribable ardour and intrepidity, and filled the trenches with the enemy's corpses. Several thousands found a grave beneath the walls of Missolonghi, and the rest fled, pursued by the Greeks, to Kerascovo. A great quantity of ammunition, baggage, colours, &c., fell into the power of the Greeks. Nicetas performed prodigies of valour at Vassilad against the enemy, who attacked that place by sea, all of whom fell victims, as the Turkish fleet fled before they could regain their vessels. An Austrian schooner of war brought this intelligence to Zante. An English frigate arrived here, has brought many letters, and couriers, which come express from all sides, and confirm this important victory. Our Lord High Commissioner shed tears of joy, and conceded the merited tribute of praise to Grecian valour, and particularly to that of Nota Bozzaris. The same frigate, coming in haste with the news, passed the Turkish fleet, which was in action with the Greek squadron. A merchant vessel from Ithaca, confirms the above, and adds, that on Monday and Tuesday the Captain heard a heavy cannonading, and saw the summits of the mountains covered with people with telescopes in their hands. We expect to hear almost immediately the result of the naval engagement. We hope that the Peloponessus will soon convince Ibrahim Pacha of the valour of its inhabitants. He has already lost many of his followers in different engagements. He is surrounded by 20,000 Greeks at Tripotama, who will not permit him to escape."

MADRID, Aug. 28.—Our Gazette publishes this day the following despatch addressed to the Minister of War:—

"The sovereign decrees of his Majesty of the 17th and 21st of this month, and the orders communicated to me by your Excellency, dated the 25th, have already been executed. As soon as Don Georges Bessieres, and the men in his suite, had been taken by the troops under my command, which had been in pursuit of them, they brought them to my head-quarters, where they arrived yesterday at nine in the evening, as I have already had the honour to announce to you by my despatch of yesterday. The decree of his Majesty was immediately made known to the Chief, and the seven accomplices of his crime, whose names and rank are subjoined. All the spiritual aids of our holy and consoling religion were administered to them, and when they had confessed the frightful crime of which they had been guilty, they were shot. The execution took place this day, the 26th, at half-past eight in the morning. They died like Christians, repenting their high treason, and praying to God that their punishment might serve as an example, and prevent the recurrence of a similar attempt. The troops of the Royal Guard, infantry and cavalry, and a squadron of the 1st Regiment of the line (formerly Santiago,) which was at my head-quarters, have been witnesses of this execution, and have defiled before the dead bodies.

(Signed) "Count D'ESPAGNE."

"Molina d'Arragon, Aug. 26.

Bessieres had published a list of proscriptions of 17 persons whom they were to use all possible means to make away with, and the name of M. Zea Bermudez was the first. Arragon seems to be the province on which the General and his party had more particularly fixed their views. The Captain-General has acted with as much firmness as prudence, and this part of the country, after a momentary ferment, has returned to a state of the most perfect tranquillity.

The death of Paul Iglesias has produced among the people of Madrid opposite sensations. When they saw arrive, drawn on a hurdle, a man whom they had known as one of the most flourishing citizens of the capital, a general sentiment of pity was manifested. But Iglesias mounted the scaffold, and having already the cord round his neck, asked to speak. "Spaniards, my brothers," said he, "I have been devoted to liberty; I die like a Christian; I have received the aids of religion; pray for me. I die for my country, for you all; learn from me to die with courage." Here the executioner threw himself off with him, and Iglesias, already suspended, cried with a loud voice, "Liberty or Death." At this unexpected incident, cries of "Long live the King" burst from all parts. In the midst of these shouts an exclamation of an opposite character was heard. It was with difficulty that the individual from whom it proceeded was saved from the hands of the people.

The Royalist Volunteers of Salamanca have voted an address to the King, to solicit from him the re-establishment of the Holy Office, in order to restore public tranquillity in Spain.

ST PETERSBURGH, Aug. 20.—On the 16th, at 5 o'clock in the morning, the race between English and Cossack horses, of which notice has long since been given, took place. There were two extremely beautiful English stallions belonging to an English society here, and two Cossack horses belonging to General Orlow Denissow. The distance ran was 74 verste. The second English horse gained the prize of 25,000 rubles.

Major-General Schulgin is appointed chief of the police at Moscow, and Major-General Pissarow (out of service) Rector of the University of that city.

STOCKHOLM, Aug. 23.—This evening the Court will return to the capital from Rozenburg, and on Saturday or Sunday their Majesties will set out on their journey to Norway.

Sir B. Bloomfield has returned from his journey to St. Petersburgh.

Baron Stierneld, our Ambassador in London, is expected here before the winter, on leave of absence.

CORK, AUG. 14.—No doubt now remains of the entire defeat of the besiegers at Missolonghi. Redschid Pacha, having attempted three different times between the 13th and 16th of July to take that place by assault, and having been driven back each time with considerable loss, assembled fresh troops in order to try the success of a fourth attempt. He, however, remained irresolute till the arrival of the Turkish fleet under the Capitain Pacha, which also blockaded Missolonghi closely by sea. The Capitain Pacha having landed a quantity of artillery and several europeans, sent to the Commanders of the European vessels on that station, to request of them to persuade the inhabitants of Missolonghi to capitulate, on being permitted to retire with their arms and all their possessions. These pacific mediators, from pure philanthropy, endeavoured to induce the inhabitants and Chiefs to accept the generous proposition of the Pacha, representing them the danger they would be exposed to if they did not, and telling them that Ibrahim Pacha was in the heart of the Morea, that our mariners disagreed, that the Spezziotes were transporting their families to America, and that the Hydriotes were preparing to do the same; and they said many other things suggested to them, no doubt, by their desire to save so many persons from the unsparing anger of the great Aga; but all their rhetoric had no effect on Bozzaris. Many Chiefs hesitated and seemed inclined to surrender, thinking they might confide in what was told them, and trust to the counsel of so many brave men. But the hero Bozzaris told them, that he and his five hundred men would remain and become victims of their devotion to their country. He, therefore, sent away the mediators with words dictated by the bitterness of his soul, and they returned to the Pacha with his answer, begging him to pay no attention to the words of men driven to despair, but to treat them with his accustomed philanthropy, on his becoming master of the place. In concert with Redschid Pacha he began then to prepare for the assault, which took place early in the morning of the 3d of August. The Captain Pacha sent 100 small armed vessels, with 5000 men, who began the attack by sea, whilst Redschid Pacha, with 50,000, as it is generally said, seconded him by land. The engagement was obstinate; the sky was hidden by the smoke, and the earth trembled with the shock of the cannon. The battle lasted six hours, during which time the European Commanders could see nothing on account of the smoke. At last the cannonading ceased, and two hours after, when the smoke had a little subsided, they saw the standard of the Cross still remaining on the fortress of Missolonghi. Then the Commanders approached in their boats, and saw how terrible the defeat of the barbarians had been. The trenches were filled, and the sea covered with dead bodies. They say there were fifteen thousand killed and wounded. In the mean time arrived Miaulis, and the Captain Pacha was obliged to flee to Castra, on which the Greeks burned one frigate, one corvette, and one schooner, and took all of the 100 small vessels which had been engaged in this affair. Thus ended this famous expedition against Missolonghi. The land forces fled, pursued by our troops. On the 4th of August the Captain Pacha appeared in the waters of Zante, and Miaulis was in chase of him. This news was brought us by eye-witnesses of the combat, among whom were the Austrian commander, Bonratovitch, and the Captain of an English frigate arrived at Corfu. The bells of Zante rang from the morning to the evening. The people seized on several merchants, who were known to be in the service of the Captain Pacha and Ibrahim Pacha, and would have put them to death had not the local government prevented it. The Austrian vessels in the port were ordered to retire, lest the enraged multitude might do them some injury. Thus have all the hopes of the enemy, and of those Europeans who aided them, been frustrated.

TANGIER, JUNE 15.—The French Consul in Morocco left this city on the 9th of May to proceed to Fez, where he arrived on the 19th. After the usual repose of three days, the Emperor sent in the morning one of his most distinguished officers to acquaint the Consul that he would receive him the same day at ten o'clock. Accordingly, at nine o'clock a detachment of troops, consisting of the Imperial Guard, and the garrison of Tangier, came for him. He set out with his consort, preceded by the presents intended for the Emperor, and accompanied by two French officers, who had accompanied him from Tangier to Fez, by the Vice-Consul, the Physician, and the interpreter of the Consulate.

When they got near the place which his Majesty had fixed for the audience, they heard the order of the Emperor given to repair to his presence. After a halt of half an hour, an officer conducted him to within 200 paces of his Majesty's Palace of Pleasure. He was on horseback, surrounded by his troops on foot. When the Consul was near the Emperor, he ordered the troops to open their ranks.

They then formed two lines, between which the Consul advanced to fifty paces distance, and made his first salutation with his head uncovered. Those who accompanied him did the same, except the two French Officers, who only raised their hands to their caps, according to the French military custom. The Pacha of Tangier seeing that the two French Officers did not take off their caps, stepped out of the ranks, where he was mingled with the common soldiers, and spoke about it to the Consul, who satisfied him by telling him that the French soldiers never salute their officers, or even his Majesty, except by respectfully raising their hands to their caps. Upon this answer, which his Majesty heard, he retired, but the Emperor called him, and said, "Tell the Envoy of the King of France, that he and the French nation are the first in my friendship, and the most esteemed by our Majesty."

The Pacha repeated these words to the Interpreter, who told them to the Consul.

The French Consul delivered to the Pacha his Majesty's letter in a bag made of a rich brocade, and a little box covered with brocade of the same pattern, which contained a diadem of diamonds, and caused the other customary presents which accompanied it to be shown to his Majesty.

The Emperor having received these presents retired.

On the 25th of May, the Emperor sent to the French Consul, for his Majesty, Charles X., a lion, an ostrich, and four horses.

The fêtes of Ramadan, which had began the day before the Consul arrived, not being yet ended, delayed his departure, and he returned to Tangier, after a rapid journey of five days.

PARIS, SEPT. 7.—A Journal endeavours to-day to excite uneasiness in the planters, respecting the communications which the new state of St. Domingo might have with our islands. We are authorised to declare that the foresight of the Government has taken away every pretext for this uneasiness. The ships of Hayti will not be received in our Colonies, and will not even show themselves there. It is but justice to add, that this regulation has not met with any difficulties in St. Domingo.

CADIZ, AUG. 19.—An English ship of war, which arrived here on the 17th with dispatches, has had a lively altercation with the French stationed off Cadiz. The English frigate having arrived at the entrance of the port, a French brig on guard fired a gun for it to lay by and cast anchor. The Englishman gave no signs of obeisance, and the signal was repeated; on the same indifference continuing, the Amazon, a French frigate lying at hand, fired a shot at her, on which the Englishman lay by, and sent on board the Amazon, after which she again put out to sea. The following day the English frigate returned, carrying a particular flag, and entering Cadiz, discharged her dispatches and passengers without the French station taking any notice; after which she put off to sea. A similar altercation took place relative to the English frigate, the Active, coming from Tangiers.

MADRID, AUG 26.—Sir Frederick Lamb, the new English Ambassador, makes himself remarkable by his circumspection. Public attention is at present peculiarly fixed on this Ambassador, as a rumour is prevalent that France and England are about to entreat the King to desist from those acts which have heaped such misfortunes on Spain. This, then, is the time for England to shew her gratitude for the aid she received in the long war of independence, and for France to realise the noble idea of Louis XIV. when he said, "Let there be no Pyrenees!" And to crown the triumphs of the Prince Generalissimo, by fulfilling his magnanimous intentions after so sad an experience of what the contrary may produce. The moment could not have been better chosen, for the Monarchical faction having thrown off the mask, the King may form a just notion of the intentions of these pretenders to the exclusive defence of the Throne and the Altar. At this period it is highly necessary that a firm and prudent man should be sent hither on the part of France. Calomarde is the avowed instrument of the Monarchical faction, and M. Zea is, with reason, suspected of being attached to the Holy Alliance. The official instructions published by M. Recaho figure well, when placed by the side of those of his predecessor, but all have lately committed the fault of taking away from the nation even the hope of bettering its condition. The Ambassador of France would have an easy task to fulfil, for the only three acts of France in the year 1823 that any stress is laid upon are, the Proclamation of Angoulême at the passage of Bidassoa, the memorable Decree of Andujar, and the Negociations with General Alava, at Port St. Mary. The Spaniards, it may be well to remark, were well pleased that no steps were taken on the grounds of the military capitulations of Morillo and Ballasteros, as they composed a power wholly illegal, while, on the contrary, General Alava was furnished with full power on the part of the King, and of a Government recognized by all the Powers of Europe. Wise Spaniards, who are without prejudice, and are real admirers of the virtues and magnanimous intentions of the Prince Generalissimo, place much faith in the publication of these truths throughout France and England, in the hopes that it will be the means of preventing fresh errors being fatal to Spain and France.

VARIETIES.

SHOOTING.—Messrs. Bartleman, of Royston, Herts, and two other gentlemen, Montgomery and Martband, matched themselves to shoot on the 1st September, with single barrelled guns, 150 head of game it, six hours, for 100 sovereigns. The parties commenced operations at day-break, and after two hours shooting, Mr. Bartleman had bagged from the shooting place at Puckeridge, Herts, over the manors to the right of Colhers, thirty-nine partridges and four hares. Mr. Montgomery killed, over the inclosures towards Cambridge, forty birds and two hares; and Mr. Maitland, who beat towards Kniveton, killed thirty-seven birds and three hares. The whole produce killed at the expiration of the time, 12 o'clock, was 192 head of game.

AGRICULTURE.—The principal feature in husbandry at this season of the year is the harvest. No one will attempt to deny that the crop of wheat is the most abundant that this country has produced for many years, and the dry weather previous to the commencement of harvest, together with the moderate falls of rain since, have contributed to make the sample as perfect as the crop is bountiful. The barleys have suffered very materially upon light soils, but, independently of this local failure, the crop is so remarkably fine, that there will be found little or no deficiency in the aggregate quantity. This does not perhaps coincide with the general impression on the subject, but we are greatly mistaken if it does not turn out that the price of barley in the provincial markets was higher the first few days that it was offered for sale, (viz. about the 20th of August,) than it will be again during the remainder of the year. The turnip crop is more partial than we almost remember to have seen it: in some places so bad as almost to amount to an entire failure, whilst in others it is impossible to conceive any thing more perfect and luxuriant than the appearance which the fields exhibit. We fear, however, that the defalcation is sufficiently extensive to produce serious loss and inconvenience to the grazier, more particularly as the rick-yards are greatly deficient in their customary supply of hay and clover; and no auxiliary can be afforded to them in the shape of a second crop, owing to the necessity of consuming it upon the land in consequence of the great scarcity of feed during the month of July and the beginning of August; moreover, as the oat and bean crops are neither of them very abundant this year, it may be fairly presumed that horse-keeping will be attended with a serious expense during the approaching winter, a circumstance that has already had the effect of reducing the value of these animals some twenty or thirty per cent within the last three months.

Lean stock is also a trifle lower of late, but artificial food is now so universally resorted to in the grazing department, that the holders of lean beasts and store sheep know how to profit by the circumstance, being fully convinced that the opulent farmers and graziers will supply themselves with cattle, however distant may appear the prospect of remuneration.

There has hitherto been but little doing in the wool trade, and the price evidently disappoints the growers, most of whom still hold off, under an impression that it will eventually advance.

Hops have risen in value very materially, and are still looking upwards, great deficiency being now considered inevitable.

The harvest in the neighbourhood of Nottingham is nearly finished. There is an abundant crop, and it has been well got.

The extensive importance of the date-tree is one of the most curious subjects in natural history. A considerable part of the inhabitants of Egypt, of Arabia, and Persia, subsist almost entirely upon its fruit. They boast also of its medicinal virtues. Their camels feed upon the date-stones. From the leaves they make couches, baskets, bags, mats, and brushes; from the branches, cages for their poultry, and fences for their gardens; from the fibres of the boughs, thread, ropes, and rigging; from the sap is prepared a spirituous liquor; and the trunk of the tree furnishes fuel: it is now said that from one variety of the palm-treee, meal has been extracted from among the fibres of the trunk, and has been used for food.

ROBBER SHOT.—An inquisition was held at the Jolly Gardeners public-house, Peascod-lane, Windsor, on the body of Thomas Cooper, who was shot last week by Mr. William Blowfield, a market gardener. —William Cooper, labourer, residing in Peascod-row, deposed that he was the father of the deceased. On the night of Saturday week, he went to bed about ten o'clock. About two hours afterwards he heard the deceased open the street door, and go to his own room. He groaned very much; and in consequence, witness and his mother went to him, and inquired what was the matter. He answered, that he had been shot, and requested a doctor might be sent for, which was accordingly done.—Mr. Holderness, surgeon. Had been called in to attend the deceased. There were nearly seventy shots in different parts of his body, but principally on his left breast; six of them had penetrated to his heart, and several on his lungs. Witness attended him till the time of his death, which he was of opinion was caused by the effusion of blood into the cavity of the chest, and by the inflammation of the heart and lungs, both produced by the gun-shot wounds he had received.—Mr. Blowfield, the market gardener, stated that he resided in a cottage in the garden, and that his most valuable fruit having been continually plundered, he determined on keeping a watch; and on the night of Saturday week he saw three men gathering apples from a tree, near the centre of the garden. He called out to them to desist and surrender themselves, telling them that if they attempted to move, he would fire upon them. They, however, ran off, and he fired his gun at them when at a distance of about forty yards. He was not aware that he had wounded any of them till the following morning.—The Jury returned a verdict of "Justifiable Homicide."—The deceased was buried last Sunday in Windsor church-yard.

THE GRAND STREETS.—The street from the British Museum to Northumberland House will be the chef d'œuvre of Mr. Nash's skill, for report speaks of it in the highest terms of panegyric. It will be perfectly straight, ascending by St. Martin's-lane to the spot called "The Seven Dials," cutting away numerous triangles in its approach to Holborn, and three cross streets to the Museum.

The whole of St. Martin's-lane, right and left, comes down, for it is to be the widest street in Europe. The centre of the left is Lord Salisbury's estate, and the houses now standing were many of them mansions, the abode of Members of Parliament, little more than half a century ago. The Tuscan, the Doric, and the Composite, are to be the favourite orders; the first, being the most simple and solid, will take the lead.

The united parishes of St. Martin's, St. Anne's, and St. Giles's, have had plans laid before them by the Government. It is to be "the most magnificent street in the world"—the words are so expressed! Lately the plans have been recalled, by the Board of Works, from each Vestry, with an intimation, that they will be returned in January next.

This street will improve the Bedford estate by at least twenty thousand a-year; and, had Waterloo-bridge been in a line with it, what a matchless picture it would have produced. It is the due consideration of this that has suggested the commendable idea of opening a wide street from Waterloo-bridge to the New-road, upon a plan which will render it perhaps the most magnificent thing of the kind in all Europe. —Morning Paper.

MURDER.

CORONER'S INQUEST.

Wednesday afternoon an Inquisition was taken before R. CARTER, Esq. the Surrey Coroner, at the Carlisle Arms, Carlisle-lane, Lambeth, on the body of John Furlonger, aged 27 years, late in the employ of Mr. Jackson, the proprietor of the Shades Tavern, Charing-cross, who was found drowned in the river.

William Carey, a waterman, stationed on board the floating bath, near Westminster-bridge, said, on Monday evening last, between the hours of six and seven, he saw something under water foul of the mooring chains, and with his hitcher endeavoured to clear it away, when he discovered it was the body of a man. Witness instantly got assistance and conveyed him on shore. In clearing the body from the chains, he struck him several times with the hitcher, but whether on the body or head he could not say, as he remained under water. Part of the hand, from the wrist, which appeared clenched to the mooring chain, came away in consequence of the putrid state of the deceased; it presented a most horrid spectacle. Considers the body must have been in the water for several days.

John Berry, a waterman to the hackney-coach stand, at Spratts-bottom, otherwise Charing-cross, said, that the deceased was an assistant to the same rank; he attended his duty on the evening of Friday, the 19th August last, and left the stand between ten and eleven o'clock at night; he then went towards his master's house, the Shades, at Charing-cross, and from that time he saw no more of him until Wednesday, when he was lying dead in Lambeth bonehouse.

CORONER—If the deceased had been found without his clothes, should you have known him?

Witness—No, Sir; I merely go by the clothes he wore, and those I can swear to.

Mr. Jackson, the proprietor of the Shades at Charing-cross, begged also to say, that he accompanied the last witness to view the body, and knew it was the deceased in consequence of his clothes.

CORONER to Berry.—Do you know of your own knowledge of any person ever having threatened his life?

Witness—No, I only know at the time he parted from me, that he was perfectly sober, and in good health. The deceased did tell him on the evening preceding his being missed, that he had taken up two men before the Magistrates at Queen-square Office, for an assault upon him, and they were committed to prison; also that part of the same gang had threatened his life. The deceased resided in Duck-lane, Westminster.

Diana King sworn.—Is not married, but lived at No. 9, Duck-lane, with the deceased. On the day that the two men were taken before the Magistrates, and committed for assaulting John Furlonger, on their return home, a young man named Spratt, standing opposite the house, said to her (witness), don't be surprised if your husband is brought home on a shutter, for he would make one to do it; the deceased at that time had gone to the stand; he promised to return as soon as he could, but never did, nor did she hear any thing about him before yesterday, when she saw him in the bone-house. A young woman named Bowen was present when Spratt used those words; she (Bowen) had given evidence against the two men, Hinton and Chester, for the assault, and said to the man then, if any thing happens to Furlonger, we shall know who has done it.

Catherine Bowen also resides at No. 9, in Duck-lane, Westminster. She deposed to seeing the assault committed on the 17th of August, and gave evidence against the two men the next day at Queen-square. The man Spratt was in company with the two prisoners now in Tothill-fields, when the assault took place. She fully corroborated the testimony of the last witness, as to the expressions being made by Spratt; but thought at first he alluded to her husband, upon which she asked for what cause? He replied, for Bob Hinton's sake. Afterwards it was understood it meant Furlonger, now deceased.

CORONER—How many were included in the warrant?

Witness—Only Hinton and Chester.

CORONER—How happened it that Spratt was not taken up, as you say he was in their company?

Witness—He could not be found.

CORONER—Where is the man Spratt now?

Witness—I believe he is either in Horsemonger-lane or at Brixton. I have been told he was apprehended last Friday fortnight. The deceased was missing the same day.

CORONER—Now, tell the Jury the precise expressions he used?

Witness—He said, don't be surprised if your husband is brought home dead upon a shutter.

This being the whole of the evidence, the Jury consulted for about ten minutes, and then returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against some person or persons unknown.

FASHIONABLE OBITUARY.

DEATH OF THE EARL OF CARLISLE.—This much respected Nobleman died on Sunday last, at his seat Castle Howard, in the 78th year of his age. His Lordship was a Knight of the Garter, Lord Lieutenant of the East Riding of Yorkshire; and had formerly held the offices of Lord Privy Seal, and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. He is succeeded in his titles and estates by his eldest son, Lord Morpeth, now Earl of Carlisle; who becoming thus a Peer of the Realm, vacates of course his seat in the Commons House of Parliament.

The late Earl was of high and unimpeachable character through life. His political principles were general Whiggish; but he was amongst those distinguished persons, who, justly alarmed for the safety of the Constitution during the democratic rage arising out of the ferociously lawless example of the French Revolution, patriotically abandoned the post of Faction for the standard of his country, and honourably fought her battles in the Senate, under the wise guidance of the illustrious and immortal Pitt.

DEATH OF THE EARL OF BRADFORD.—Died, at his seat, Weston, Staffordshire, on Wednesday, the 7th instant, in the 64th year of his age, the Right Hon. Orlando, Earl of Bradford, after a painful and lingering illness of nearly two years.

Sir THOMAS STEPNEY died suddenly at his house in Henrietta-street, Cavendish-square, on Sunday last. This polished gentleman, of the old school, was seen, in his usual attire, perambulating St. James's-street, from club-house to club-house (his daily practice), so recently as the preceding day. His dress had been the same for half a century, namely, a blue coat, with a broad back and long waist, of "the Monmouth-street cut," that is, much too large for his body, and he commonly wore a remarkably short spencer; nankeen was his constant wear in small clothes: and his blue broad striped silk stockings, produced a remarkable contrast: added to these was a hat not deeper in the crown than an inch and a half, but with a rim of greater proportion, and a black ribbon tied round it. Sir Thomas, in his 70th year, on the coldest days of winter, was clad the same as in the dog days; and was an amiable character and accomplished gentleman. His piquet parties on Wedesday from February to July, were regularly attended by some of the most distinguished persons in high life.

Died, early on Friday morning, the 2d instant, at North Luffenham House, Rutland, the Right Hon. Lady Anne Noel, sixth daughter and last surviving child of the late Baptist Earl of Gainsborough. Her Ladyship had attained the venerable age of 87 years. The funeral will take place next week at Exton. By her death, Sir Gerard Noel, Bart., her Ladyship's nephew, obtains an addition of 2,000l. a year to his property.

ACCIDENTS, OFFENCES, &c.

At twelve o'clock on Monday, the Courier, a Leeds coach, was overthrown opposite the church at Islington, by the near hind wheel coming off. Several persons were severely hurt, and one gentleman (an outside passenger) had his thigh broken, and an infant inside, an arm crushed. No blame appears to attach to the coachman, who was himself severely bruised.

The family of Mr. Connor, North-street, Cavendish-square, being expected home from France in a few days, the servants were on Monday morning busily occupied in cleaning, and employed a man and two charwomen to assist them: they made a very large fire in the back kitchen, and while sitting near it at breakfast, the whole house was suddenly shook by the fire exploding with a loud noise, and with such violence as to shatter the fire-grate, copper, &c. and throw down not only them, but every thing in the place; the man who was sitting farthest from the fire-place had his skull fractured by the falling of an iron weight, or smoothing iron; the house-maid was so dreadfully scorched and burned in the face, that it is feared she will lose her sight; one of the charwomen was very much injured in her breast; the cook was also hurt by the hot water bursting over her. Two of the injured persons were removed to the Infirmary for medical advice. The accident, it appears, was occasioned by a paper of gunpowder, which had been placed most carelessly in a corner of the grate a few days ago.

SUICIDE.—Thursday morning, at five o'clock, Mr. Philips, keeper of an eating house in Angel-street, St. Martin's-le-Grand, got up as with the intention of going to market. His not returning at the usual time was the source of some surprise to his family. At about nine, the servant having occasion to go into the cellar, found Mr. Philips suspended by a cord from a beam, quite dead.—In the evening an inquest was held upon the body, when the Jury, after about an hour's consultation, returned a verdict "That he committed the act himself, being at the time in a state of temporary derangement."

Thursday afternoon a dreadful accident happened to a young man of the name of Thomas Holmes, employed in the erecting of new buildings in Henry-street, Waterloo-road. While fixing the tiles, one by which he held gave way, and he was precipitated from the top to the bottom of a house. He was severely hurt, his ribs being broken, and his thigh, left leg, and his head materially injured. The poor man was conveyed to Guy's Hospital, with very little hopes of recovery.

MISCELLANEOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The following curious account of the cause of damning a play is given in an old dramatic register:—

"The Wary Widow, or Sir Noisy Parrot" a comedy, by Henry Hidgen, in 1693. This is very far from being the worst of our English comedies, being ushered into the world by several complimentary verses, and a prologue written by Sir Charles Sedley: yet it was damned the first night, owing to a very extraordinary circumstance, which was, that the author had introduced so much drinking of punch into the play, that the performers got drunk during the acting of it, and were unable to go through with their parts; on which account, and the treatment the audience gave them by hisses and cat-calls in consequence of it, the house was obliged to be dismissed at the end of the third act."

Workmen are busily employed in erecting a handsome bridge over the Serpentine, at the eastern extremity of Kensington Gardens, which when completed, will add greatly to the beauty and conveniences of Hyde Park.

Several popular actors are now on shooting excursions. They should bear in mind the misfortunes of certain of their fraternity—Bannister, Barrymore, Dowton, and Mathews, who have each been severely wounded whilst busied in such pursuits: the former, on being some few years since pressed with a similar invitation, declined, alleging as an excuse that in his last attempt he made a very bad hand of it, and, that in his opinion it was best for performers to decline such engagements, confine their talent to the stage, and only "shoot folly as it flies."

A singular circumstance occurred at Islington a few days ago. Mr. Hickman, after an absence in India of more than twenty-one years, returned, and found that his landed property, which was considerable, had been disposed of by his heir at law, a Mr. Laycock, who had sold it to the parish, and upon which land are erected numerous dwelling houses, and a chapel. Mr. Hickman, of course, claims his land, and also the edifices erected thereon.

FEATHERS, FEATHER-BEDS, and MATTRASSES.—W. TIBBATTS, Feather-bed, Mattrass, Bedstead, and Sea Bedding Manufacturer, No. 339, HIGH HOLBORN, near Chancery-lane, begs leave to return thanks to his Friends and the Public in general, for the very liberal support he has met with, and assures them that no pains shall be spared on his part, to supply them good clean Bedding at fair and moderate prices, not pretending to sell cheaper than other tradesmen: but to sell such goods as will always be a credit to himself, and really serviceable to his customers. W. T. trusts by assiduity and perseverance, and an honourable mode of conducting business, still to merit the favours of a generous and discerning public.—Families Furnishing and Tavern Keepers, will find their advantage.

 Bedsteads made to order, but no fixed price, as the Proprietor is determined not to sell trash of any description, and knows, as a man of business, that it is impossible to make Bedsteads at the price some tradesmen advertise.—Schools liberally supplied.

It is the Proprietor's particular request that those families who honour him with their commands, will send their servants, or some trusty friend, to see the feathers put into the Ticks, and by that means prevent any possibility of being cheated, and have the great advantage of buying their Feathers by weight, so that it will remain entirely with themselves what price they give for Beds.—Persons fearful of not having their Feathers quite dry, may see them put into their Ticks hot from the Stove.

HIS GRACIOUS MAJESTY OF GREAT BRITAIN, and most of the Nobility and Gentry, use now PRINCE'S celebrated RUSSIA OIL. It ought really to be generally known, that physicians have of late experienced that those who wear false hair are subject to complaints in the head, as the false hair, through the warmth, will shrink, become tight, makes a dent round the head, and prevents free circulation of the blood in the head, causes head-ache, giddiness, slight apoplexy, and other complaints; but it is proved through the aromatic Oils Prince's Russia Oil is prepared with, makes it healthy, and by often rubbing the head all over with it, when the false hair is taken off, is wholesome, refreshing, and cooling, and will prevent the above complaints; even eminent medical men have recommended it to the King. The Duchess of Rutland has declared in a letter to Mr. Prince, from experience, has found his Russia Oil the best article for preserving the hair. Colonel Grant has often declared to the proprietor, that from experience he has found the Russia Oil the best article for the hair.—Also a Gentleman, turned of sixty, has a good head of hair and whiskers, and not a single hair grey, and has declared it is through the Russia Oil, for he has used it constantly for the last twelve years; and when in the country and out of Russia Oil, and not having used it for a fortnight, his hair began to get harsh and inclined to turn grey, but by using it again, it became immediately soft and black; it is really a wonder, for whoever sees him are quite surprised at his having such a fine head of hair and whiskers, without any grey at his age. The Gentleman has given the proprietor leave to mention his name and residence to respectable persons, to convince them the above is a fact. There are hundreds of Ladies and Gentlemen who have used constantly Prince's Russia Oil, have also declared that it is the best article for the hair. In short, Prince's celebrated Russia Oil, through the aromatic oils it is now prepared with, is acknowledged the wholesomest and best article for dressing, preserving, and promoting the hair of Ladies, Gentlemen, and Children, and if used constantly not a hair will fall off or turn grey, and is such a nourisher to the hair, that if it has began to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour, which hundreds of Ladies have experienced. It is the pleasantest for Ladies to dress their own or false hair, will make it look elegant, and will curl beautifully any way; clears the scurf, and keeps the head and hair clean, and by using it regularly for a few months will restore the hair on the bald part, if the least signs of roots are remaining, which thousands of Gentlemen have experienced when used regularly. It is an old saying—'Tell the truth, and fear nobody.' If persons are bald, and the roots are entirely gone, it is against nature that any article can restore it; and if persons pretend to restore hair when the roots are gone, by any article, it is a falsity. Persons who have begun to get bald, ought to be particular to use the Russia Oil daily, or at the least every other day, as there must be a complaint in the scalp, which may go further, and carry off the hair entirely, if neglected, which has often been the case.

Ask for Prince's Russia Oil—the Ounce Bottle 5s.; a large bottle containing Five Ounces, 11. which is a saving. Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. PRINCE, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders. Be particular, and observe his address, "A Prince, No. 9, Poland-Street, Oxford Street, London," on the cover of each bottle; without, it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose.—Purchasers ought to be particular, as counterfeits are in circulation; and some villains, to deceive the public, put the original proprietor's name on their counterfeits. Good allowance for exportation. Merchants and Captains ought to be particular, as impostors are going about to counting-houses with counterfeit Russia Oil, saying it is the genuine.

A CHALLENGE FOR 1000 GUINEAS.

H. MOSS, PRIZE HAIR CUTTER, PERRUQUIER, and PERFUMER, No. 181, FLEET-STREET, (Two Doors from Fetter-lane, claims the honour of announcing that by the urgent request of many distinguished friends, who so highly patronised him while conducting Mr. Money's business, he has opened an Establishment, and respectfully solicits the attention of the connoisseurs in the scientific Art of Hair-cutting. By many years application to this particular department of his profession in London and Paris, he is enabled to introduce a new and peculiar system, never contemplated by the vulgar empirics who presume to call themselves Hair cutters, but who in fact only destroy the head of hair. Moss's style rigidly adhering to fashion, always adapts itself to each particular countenance the grand desideratum, and his intercourse with the Courts of Europe furnishes him with a never failing variety. Moss begs to state that his personal attention, and that of his Chief Artist (late with Money), are devoted to Hair-cutting, as he never trusts so important an operation to inexperienced apprentice boys.

The beautiful system of fabricating perukes, scalps, and heads of hair, (Secundum Naturam,) has claimed Moss's particular attention, and he submits to the Beau Monde an exquisite specimen of talent in his new system of Wig making, every hair is singly inserted, the superfices of the skin and complexional colours of the head are astonishingly imitated—the whole forming a coup d'œil, the most brilliant and natural, calculated to embellish the charms of youth or cover the deficiencies of age.

Moss has prepared a superlative choice of Ladies' Fronts, on a new system, that always retain their curls. Plaits and Curls, in all the variegated Tints and shades of nature, which, with an assortment of French Perfumery, he invites his best friends—the public—to examine. Patent Hair Brushes on Moss's new plan, are ready for the taste of the curious; and for One Thousand Guineas he challenges competition with all Europe in every branch of his Profession.—Vivat Rex et industria omnia vincit.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

Bow-Street.—Yesterday a person of about the middle age, and very gentlemanly appearance, was brought before Mr. Minshull, on the charge of having been engaged with others in the commission of very extensive forgeries The prisoner gave his name to the Magistrate John Berger, but it will be seen by the statement below that he has passed by the name of De Clifford.

Mr. Bennett, a clerk in the banking-house of Sansom and Co. stated that on the 24th of June he paid a check, produced for 117*l.* purporting to be drawn by Joseph Green and Co. He had no recollection of the person who presented the check, but he remembered that he paid it all in 5*l.* notes, except two odd pound sovereigns. Joseph Green and Co. kept cash at Messrs. Sansom's.

Mr. Benjamin Green, clerk in the firm of Joseph Green and Co. potters in Upper Thames-street, stated that the check now produced, to the best of his knowledge and belief, was not in the hand-writing of any one of the partners. There was only one of the partners, Mr. Joseph Green, who ever signed checks. The check produced had a general and pretty accurate resemblance to those issued from the firm, but he believed it was not a genuine one. Mr. Joseph Green was not in town on the 24th of June, the date of the check in question.

Mr. Freshfield, jun. of the Bank of England, who attended for the prosecution, here stated to Mr. Minshull that he had to offer the testimony of a young man, who was undoubtedly to be regarded in the character of an accomplice, but who had voluntarily surrendered himself into custody, on an understanding that he would be admitted an evidence for the Crown.

Mr. Minshull asked if Mr. Freshfield had no other evidence than that of an accomplice, because it was only in absence of better that such testimony could be received.

Mr. Freshfield said that, without the evidence of the accomplice, he should be unable to bring a charge home to any individual.

Alfred Johnson, the accomplice, a spruce-looking young man, stated he was brought here in custody from the House of Correction, he having surrendered himself. He had been about two years a junior clerk at Messrs. Sansom's, from which situation he was dismissed about six weeks ago. Some time in May last, he saw a person of the name of Henry Cooper Peckham (in custody) at the Oyster Rooms, known as "Mother Hodgkin's," opposite Drury Lane Theatre. Peckham addressed him, and said he knew him very well—that he himself had been in Smith, Payne, and Smith's banking-house, and that he had seen him (witness) at Sansom and Co.'s. They afterwards met at a masquerade, and becoming well acquainted, Peckham invited him to dine with him at his lodgings in Upper King-street, Holborn, where he introduced him to another person of the name of Jones. They had frequent meetings there, and on one occasion three forged checks for 117*l.* 150*l.* and 75*l.* all forged upon Messrs. Sansom and Co. were produced, and conversation took place upon the subject of uttering them. Two of them purported to be drawn by Joseph Green and Co and the third by Messrs. Wilkinson. A day or two after, witness was sent for, from the Banking-house, to some gentlemen at the Spread Eagle, Gracechurch-street, and he found Peckham and Jones there. They told him that a gentleman, whom they described very accurately, in order that he might know him, would come in a few minutes to Sansom and Co.'s and present the check for 117*l.*, and that he was to go back to the banking-house and watch for his coming He did go back, and very shortly after he saw the prisoner, who was dressed exactly as Peckham and Jones had described, come in and presented a check for 117*l.* The prisoner received the money and went away. According to previous agreement, the witness went again to the Spread Eagle, and there he found Peckham and Jones, who took him in a coach to the foot of London Bridge, and desired him to wait a few minutes, when he saw Peckham, Jones, and the prisoner standing together, and saw them receive money from him. Peckham approached him and said, "Do not let him (pointing to the prisoner) see you." He saw the three enter a public-house by Old Swan stairs. A day or two after this, the accomplice met the prisoner at Packham's lodgings, and was introduced by the latter to him as a stranger. They all dined together. They afterwards met together at the Opera Colonnade Coffee-house, and there the forged check for 75*l.* was talked about. Peckham had declared that the prisoner had received 20*l.* for presenting it, at which, accomplice and Jones felt angry, and appealed to the prisoner, who declared that he only received 15*l*; that Peckham had the other 60*l.*, and that for the falsehood he would never speak to Peckham again. Peckham said he had lost the 60*l.* at a gaming-house; upon which the prisoner took out a large sum of money and said, "I can go into a gaming-house with all this in my pocket, and did the other night, without gaming at all." They were then all in general conversation about the produce of the forged checks, which was always divided between them.

Some money which had been taken from the prisoner (19*l.*) was restored to him, and he was taken from the bar to be re-examined next Saturday. The solicitor for the prosecution stated, that at the next examination he should be able to produce confirmatory evidence, and the case would assume altogether a much more serious complexion even than it did now.

The prisoner during the examination preserved the most perfect composure, if we except an occasional expression of astonishment at several of the statements of the accomplice.

He has borne the rank of Major in the Life Guards, which commission he sold after the battle of Waterloo.

TO FAMILIES.

To prevent Baldness and all Complaints incident to the want of the nutriment Nature has provided, there is nothing equal to the

GENUINE MACASSAR OIL, IMPORTED BY PRICE AND GOSNELL,

PERFUMERS TO HIS MAJESTY, No. 12, Three King Court, Lombard Street; who have sold it, pure and unadulterated, for the last thirty years, and who, in fact, first introduced it to the notice of a British Public. Price and Gosnell's Macassar Oil possesses a richness superior to any other Oil, and will retain the moisture much longer, leaving the hair soft and silky, and increasing its thickness and growth. They therefore respectfully beg to caution the Public at large against the pretensions of base impostors, (falsely styling themselves importers,) who imitate every popular article produced; and as some persons have been imposed upon by these miscreants, Price and Gosnell, the sole Proprietors and only importers, (which has been proved by the Import List daily published, and sworn before the Lord Mayor,) of the Genuine Macassar Oil, wishing to protect the Nobility and Gentry from imposition, have, at a very great expense, affixed a label (with an engraving from a design by Sir Wm. Congreve, of extreme difficulty of execution, on the outside of each bottle, with their names and address in full thereon, which purchasers are particularly requested to observe; and as a further security, every genuine bottle is signed in red ink in their own hand-writing, to counterfeit which is Felony.—Price 3s 6d. 10s. 6d and 21s each bottle.

Caution to Families.—As many venders sell the "spurious Macassar Oil," the profit on which is much greater than on the Genuine, and as the appearance of the label, at first sight, may deceive the unguarded; in order to prevent such fraud and consequently the destruction (by the use of the deleterious composition) of the greatest ornament Nature has bestowed upon the human race—the hair. Purchasers are requested to ask for "Price and Gosnell's Macassar Oil."

Offices, No. 149, Leadenhall-street, London, Sept. 11, 1825.

IT is evident from recent communications (though numerous convictions took place some time since) that Tea continues to be adulterated with spurious leaves, which at once accounts for the difficulty so generally experienced of purchasing it genuine, or if it happens to be of good quality, at reasonable prices. This, as well as a Combination taking place among nearly all the extensive Tea Dealers, of an injurious public tendency, which the East India Company strongly objected to, and have ineffectually endeavoured to prevent, caused very extensive arrangements to be made by which have been many months in progress, to establish a cheap, regular, and permanent system of supplying the Public with pure Tea and Coffee, upon the principle of reciprocal benefit, which being now completed, are submitted with a firm conviction that the benefits all classes will derive from their adoption will be their best advocates.

Pure Tea and Coffee, packed in leaden cases of a peculiar kind, to preserve its quality, is delivered to Retail Agents in London, direct from the Company's Ware houses, to sell to the Public for ready money, at a commission of only 5*l.* per cent. (about a third of what is allowed in similar cases) having the price, quality, and Secretary's Signature on each package, to secure its delivery free from adulteration.

Depôts are established throughout England—the principal are at Bristol, under the management of	Mr. J. Stevens.

	Sheffield	Mr. R. Harrison.
	Leeds	Mr. J. H. Ridsdale.
	Hull	Mr. T. Topping.
	Manchester	Mr. F. J. Glover.
In Scotland.—At	Aberdeen	Mr. J. M'Kay.
	Edinborough	Mr. W. Munro.
	Glasgow	Mr. M. Leslie.
	Lerwick, in Zetland	Mr. J. Leask.
In Ireland.—At	Dublin	Mr. J. West.
	Cork	Mr. R. Hardy.
	Waterford	Mr. A. Pope, Jun.

and, in a few days, those at Belfast, Athlone, Norwich, Leicester, Newcastle-upon Tyne, Liverpool, Portsmouth, Devonport. Birmingham, and Nottingham, will be opened.

From whence the Retail Agents in these places, and their surrounding districts, will readily obtain supplies for the Public, and always enable the residents in the remote parts of the United Kingdom to purchase Tea and Coffee, free from adulteration, at the reduced rates, as easily and advantageously as in London.

The Company have earnestly endeavoured to enable the working classes to obtain quantities suitable to their means with the same facility as their wealthier neighbours; a measure hitherto deemed unworthy of consideration, though of great importance, from their forming so large a portion of the population, as well as from the necessity of their hard earnings being laid out in the most advantageous manner.

The advantages to be derived by the public from these extensive, liberal, and economical arrangements, are too considerable and obvious to require further commentary; the test by which they can be ascertained—that of comparison—is simple, open to every one, and the East India Tea Company are sure will be conclusive in favour of their pretensions.

BY the KING'S ROYAL PATENT.—GODBOLD'S VEGETABLE BALSAM, the greatest discovery ever found out for Coughs, Consumptions, and Asthmas.—Messrs. N. and S. GODBOLD beg leave to inform the Public, that the Honourable Commissioners of his Majesty's Stamp Office have allowed their names to be printed on the stamps that cover the corks of their VEGETABLE BALSAM, to secure it from fraud. The Purchaser may in consequence rely on its being genuine. The various and sudden changes of the weather at this season of the year are particularly dangerous to the above complaints, the Balsam is therefore strongly recommended to be kept in the house by every family, that it may be taken on the first attack of cold. In that case it never has failed of its usual success, or even in the first stage of a consumption it has restored the patient, and distinguished itself by cures unequalled, under circumstances when numbers of the first medical abilities had consigned their patients to despair, and it is allowed by them to be the only efficacious remedy. Stronger proofs cannot be given, than being recommended by the following nobility:—The Most Noble the Marquis of Lothian, the Right Hon. Viscount Dudley and Ward, the Right Hon. Lords Macdonald, Grantley, Fortescue, Montford, the Right Hon. late Viscountess Dudley and Ward, Dowagers Grantley, Falmouth, and Fortescue, Lady Appreece, Sir Francis Blake, Edward Newuham, John Coghill, George Armstrong, and Robert Peate, Generals Doyle and Droniy, Colonels Baker, Debath, Lenox, &c.—Advice every day from ten to two, at No. 3, Bloomsbury square, where only it is sold at Cost Price, as usual, to the Poor.—Sold Wholesale and Retail, No. 3, Bloomsbury-square; and retail at Messrs. SUPERIOR FOOD FOR CHILDREN, INVALIDS, and others.—By the King's Royal Letters Patent.—Of all new introductions in Domestic Economy, none have ever met with more universal approbation than ROBINSON'S PATENT BARLEY AND PATENT GROATS; they completely supersede the use of the common Pearl Barley or Embden Grotts, for a Superior Beverage is produced in Ten Minutes, and at One Half the Expense. These Nutritious Preparations have been submitted to the Medical Profession throughout the United Kingdom, and have met with the most decided approval and recommendation; in fact, many Physicians of the greatest celebrity have declared, that the Patent Preparations of Barley and Groats excel all other articles in use, as a Food for Children, &c. The Patent Barley makes superior Barley Water in Ten Minutes, and is infinitely better than the common Barley for thickening Veal, Mutton, and other Broths: it is also in the highest repute for making a most delicious Pudding or Custard. The Patent Groats produce in Ten Minutes an excellent, smooth, and delicate Gruel, which, owing to the Patent mode of preparation, will never turn sour on the stomach.

Sold Retail by all Grocers and Druggists in the Kingdom, and Wholesale by the Sole Inventor, Patentee, &c. Matthias Robinson and Co. No. 64, Red Rion-street, Holborn, London.

 Several imitations, under the titles of "Anti-Patent," "Prepared," &c. which are gross impositions, being daily offered to the Public, particular care should be taken to observe that the words Robinson's Patent, the Royal Arms, and the signature of Matts. Robinson, are affixed to each Package, as none others are genuine.

GENUINE SELTZER MINERAL WATER.

THE Nobility and Public can be supplied with the Real Genuine Mineral Water, imported direct from the Spa, at Seltzer, in Germany, in stone bottles, by applying (if by letter, post paid) to N. W. Symonds, 7, Crescent, Minories.

PATENT ECONOMICAL AND UNIVERSAL LAMP.

THOMAS PIERCE & CO. acknowledge with gratitude the liberal patronage of the Nobility and Gentry to this invention, and from the confidence placed in them by families in distant parts of the country, who have inspected their Advertisements, that the Public may not be deceived by imitations in the shape of their glasses or otherwise, they deem it necessary to state, that if any are offered as "THE PATENT ECONOMICAL and UNIVERSAL LAMPS," either in London or the Country, except at the Soho Bazaar, by Mrs. Clarke, (who has a tablet shewing her authority,) it is a deception; Pierce and Co. being the sole venders. The great variety of these excellent Lamps for general domestic uses, in addition to the French Table and Side-board Lamps, also Drawing Room ditto of 2, 3, and 4 lights (in making which they are scrupulously nice, gives them a decided superiority in choice and competition. Families and persons residing in hot climates, or passengers to the East and West Indies, or any distant part, will find in the Economical Lamps a valuable acquisition. Captains and Owners of Ships, or Gentlemen having Yachts, &c. who aim at perfection, and are liberal in attaining it, are invited to the most perfect Lamp adapted to a binnacle.

Letters addressed, post paid, to T. Pearce and Co. 268, West side of St. Clement's Church-yard, two doors from the Strand, will meet with prompt attention.—Also, Dealers in Genuine Sperm Oil.

DREADFUL CATASTROPHE.

LAUNCH OF THE PRINCESS CHARLOTTE.

Portsmouth, Sept. 14.

At about one o'clock, or a quarter of an hour before the Princess Charlotte was let off the slip on which she was built, a most dreadful accident happened, as the public were crowding over the bridge across the dock, wherein it was intended to bring the launch. There are three docks, all of which were dry, and every preparation to receive the launch was made. Under each bridge there are flood-gates to let the water in or keep it back; the comber now filling two feet above the usual height, the weight of this water carried away the flood-gates on which the middle of the bridge rested, and the whole of the crowd passing thereon fell into the dock, and were hurled over and over, the water falling three or four and twenty feet before it came to a level—the whole mass of people hurled away to death in a moment.

As the bridge is upwards of eighty, or nearly ninety feet, as it appears to me, across, and about four feet six inches wide, you may judge how many persons it would hold, closely wedged together, and all pressing to be over first, to get a good standing place. I judge there might be nearly 150 on at the time it gave way; the number lost it is as yet impossible to ascertain. Eleven are now dragged up, but as there happens to be two ships in the basin or comber, and they cannot work the engine to pump out the water, until these ships are properly shored up, all the labourers are ordered into the dock-yard all night, to proceed as fast as possible to forward the work, and get the water out.

(ANOTHER ACCOUNT.)

Portsmouth, Sept. 14, Five p. m.

A dreadful accident has just happened, and my object in writing is to prevent any uneasiness respecting me, for you will see by this, I am not among the sufferers. I had procured an admirable place on board the Queen Charlotte for witnessing the launch. There was I, amidst a a crowd of beautiful women and naval officers, to the number, perhaps, of a thousand, for she is a 110 gun ship, and we occupied nearly the width and length of the upper deck. Every thing boded well; the day, which at first lowered, became quite fine; the water was covered with gay boats, yachts, &c. and the Ganges, an 84, opposite to us, on the other side the launch, had her yards manned, which had a very fine effect. The time of the launch was fixed at half-past 12 o'clock. Every countenance looked lively, and every pretty eye appeared prettier and more interesting as the time when the vessel should be let off approached, when I was alarmed with a cry of horror, and looking to the Dock-yard, saw the persons assembled there, together with many of the marines, running as fast as they could to the south.

At a door in the canvass, raised to screen us from the weather, the accident could be seen by persons nearest, but as I could not get close without disturbing some ladies, I was obliged to listen to the reports of others. These were various. The first was true—a bridge was broken down. Some said a person had been drowned; and others, perhaps in order to quiet the ladies, said it was only a convict had escaped.

The launch instantly took place, under a royal salute from the Ganges, the Admiral's ship Victory, and the ships at Spithead, and nothing could exceed the grandeur of the sight. The noble appearance of the vessel, the delightful way in which, through so immense a body, she took the water, making scarcely any undulation, the glorious appearance of the host of boats and yachts, and the fine British cheer, all made it a most animating spectacle. Milton would have called it truly sublime. But when the exultation was over, a sad reverse followed, and we learned the general fact, that a fatal accident had happened, from seeing the wreck of a broken bridge, and a number of boats actively employed in rescuing the victims.

The accident happened in this way—The water had been let into what is called the basin, into which the new vessel was to be immediately towed to be completed, and to give the company a fine additional view. Adjoining, and connected with the basin, is a dock which was dry, in which the men were working in the morning, to lay down the keel of a new frigate. The gates of this dock were old, and apparently rotten at the bottom; new ones had been making these two years. The rotten part gave way before this immense mass; between 20 and 30 feet of water blew up the rest; and from its dreadful rush, forced the bridge round under the water with all the people upon it. Only a plank of it remained, which was some way disconnected, and on this four or five persons were saved. You can conceive the rest. The greatest part were either killed by the fall, or drowned. Of twelve taken out, five were dead, and seven saved. I saw two of the latter carried off—the one a young woman, whose countenance was of a blackish paleness. The terror this event has occasioned in Portsmouth and Portsea may easily be imagined. When I got ashore I inquired for some of my friends, and found they were safe, having fortunately passed the bridge only ten minutes before the fatal accident took place.

A female told me that one of her feet gave way on the bridge, but she sprang forward, and was saved by a person catching hold of her gown. A young woman was bewailing the loss of her father, nor was she alone in her sorrow or the cause of it. A respectable Jew was in a state of distraction for the loss of his son, and I think his brother, who were missing. A medical man was passing the bridge with his wife and sister; he saved the former, but the latter perished. A mother, with a little babe in long clothes, were saved; but the poor child's arm was broken. The extent of the loss will not be known for two hours, at low water. Some say a hundred persons perished, and by no one is the number calculated at less than forty. I hope, however, the calamity is not so extensive. Every aid that the medical men could give, has been given. One gentleman made an incision in the windpipe of a stout man, but whether he was saved or not remains to be ascertained.

There was to have been a grand ball to-night here, but I trust that for decency's sake it will be put off.

HURRICANE IN THE WEST INDIES.

Great mischief has been done by the late hurricane at Porto Rico, Guadaloupe, and other places. At Guadaloupe a number of public buildings have been thrown down; many private houses have suffered in the same way, and more than 150 persons were buried in the ruins. Some account of the shipping in those parts will be gained from the following extracts:—

"THE LATE GALE.—The arrival of the mail-boat yesterday has put us in possession of our files of Papers to a late date from the Windward Islands. The gale of the 26th appears to have been severely felt at St. Kitt's, St. Martin's, Dominica, and Martinique, but of all the islands Guadaloupe appears to have been the greatest sufferer, and the dreadful havoc committed there is detailed in the following extract of a letter from Basseterre, dated the 29th July, with which we have been favoured:—

"'A dreadful calamity has just fell over our unfortunate town and the greatest part of the colony. A hurricane more dreadful than any mentioned in the annals of this island, has in a few hours changed Basseterre into a heap of ruins. On the 26th of this month, about nine o'clock in the morning, the most sinister warnings announced the approach of the desolating misfortune. The barometer fell several lines below the degree of storm, the wind blowing by squalls and whirlwinds: the overflow of the Grass River, whose waters rose several feet above the parapet of the bridge, poured in torrents into the streets: a furious tide and earthquakes, the falling of the houses of the inhabitants and of the public buildings, the largest trees rooted out, presented the most terrible sight, and which I cannot think of without shuddering.

"'The country has equally suffered; the houses, works, the trees, all are destroyed. Our unfortunate town and its vicinity (a few days ago so flourishing) presents now only a vast ruin. A multitude of people have been crushed by the falling of the houses, or carried away by the river; we are now about clearing away the rubbish, from which 150 dead bodies have already been taken out, and among them some of the most notable people of the island. In Basseterre more than 500 houses have been unroofed or entirely destroyed, and those remaining have suffered more or less.

"'The Government-house, the Palace of Justice, the Register-office, the Records, the Gaol, and the beautiful Hospital of St. Louis, the new Barracks, and the King's Stores, are entirely destroyed or materially damaged; a part of the walls of Fort Richepanse are thrown down, &c.

"'Government immediately issued orders to open the harbours of the colony.'"

ST. KITT'S, JULY 29.—A severe gale was experienced here on Tuesday last, the effects of which have been very injurious. Early in the morning, the wind, which had been easterly, veered to about E.S.E.; and towards noon, the weather assumed a terrible appearance, from which time to a late hour in the evening, it blew with unabating violence, with a high surf from the southward. The American brig Sarah, of Philadelphia, with a small schooner and a sloop, were driven on shore in the afternoon; the former so injured as to cause her to be abandoned. The ship Britannia (for whose safety considerable fears were entertained, she having dragged so near in, as to almost touch) with the ship Ruth, and brig Egeria, of London, and ship Everthorpe, of Glasgow, rode out the gale. The following vessels put to sea:—

Snow Fortitude Increased, of London; returned hither yesterday afternoon.

American brigs Edward, from Newhaven, and Agenoria, of Kennebunk, now beating up for the harbour.

American schooner Ceres, from Elizabeth City; returned this morning.

Sloop Governor Maxwell, of this port; returned yesterday; and all of which, we believe, are uninjured.

The long boat belonging to the Everthorpe, with five hhds. of sugar, was lost at Old Road, on Tuesday afternoon; and we lament to add, that the seamen on board of her, four in number, were drowned.

The sloop Gig, of this port, and a small sloop called the Mary, of Anguilla, lying at Sandy Point, were driven on shore there; and we understand, that one or two other small craft were lost at the out-bays.—The Gazette.

DOMINICA, JULY 27.—Yesterday morning we were again visited by one of those gales of wind which at this season of the year are so much dreaded. About seven o'clock A. M. the wind began to blow with great violence from the northward, veering to N.W. and then to southward, till about one o'clock P. M. when it began to abate. The damage done in this harbour and the out-bays is distressing.

The schooner Five Brothers, Mildrum, of New London, and schooner Emilia and Eliza, Scull, from North Carolina, parted their cables, and were driven on shore under Fort Young, and soon went to pieces. The sloop St. Joseph, Andre, and sloop Attalie, Tanez, (droughers) lying in Woodbridge Bay, went ashore and are bilged. The sloop Venus, Baker, and sloop Perseverance, Isaac, went ashore at Soffrere, and in pieces; and the Caroline, Thomas, we hear, is a complete wreck at St. Joseph's. A very large and valuable flat, belonging to Captain Wilson, was also lost. The brig Saulton, Dalrymple, laden with produce, which was to sail the same day for London, unfortunately was so near the shore that her stern struck the ground so heavily as to unship her rudder. The brig Peter Proctor, Brown, rode out the gale without injury. The schooner Selina, Clark, got under weigh at the commencement of the gale; and also the sloop Fox, Burton. Both of those vessels have returned to their anchorage this morning. It is also melancholy to relate, while Mr. R. Giraud's people were out with his seau, in endeavouring to get to Roseau, the boat upset off Morne Daniel, and one man lost, together with the boat and seau.

We have not as yet any particulars from the country of what damage has been sustained.—Chronicle.

BARBADOES, JULY 26.—The wind having blown strong during the night, the sloop Beautiful Maid was driven on shore in the bay; and the swelling of the sea still continuing, the American brigantine Ramble was this morning east on the reef of rocks at the mouth of the Careuage, and bilged.

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE METROPOLIS.

The new street, from the west, will take a direction north-east by north. It will commence opposite to Coventry-street; and, by the removal of the south side of Sidney's-alley, (taking in Mr. Hamlet's, the goldsmith, and Mr. Gibbon's, the saddler, both in Whitcomb-street,) the line will be formed, by the north side of Leicester-square. Then it will proceed, in a gentle curve, due north, cutting away Cranborne-alley; and henceforward the line will be straight into the grand street, and opposite Long-acre. This sweep will be effected by the removal of all the houses in Cranborne-alley, the west end of Bear-street, the east end of Great Newport-street, part of Ryder's-court, and the corridor leading into the Panorama. The new street, on entering the grand street, will terminate the improvements in that quarter.

The grand street will nearly annihilate all the triangular streets, which are very numerous about the Seven Dials, and particularly, Great and Little Earl-street, and Tower-street.

IMPROVEMENTS WEST OF THE METROPOLIS.

KNIGHTSBRIDGE.—During the past week, numerous have been the labourers, busy in clearing away the trunks of trees, on the Park-side of the Knightsbridge-road; for when the stone coping and iron railing were introduced, the unseemly sight of a serpentine wall was required to be obviated. It was in no part straight; the evil is now removed, by an inroad of several feet into the Park itself. The change has brought to light the Old Conduit, so celebrated in former times for the purity of its water; it was almost totally forgotten by being buried behind the old elms. It is now an agreeable object, being repaired and beautified.

A new street is nearly finished from Knightsbridge, running due south, near the foot barracks of the Guards; this will connect itself with the magnificent square now erecting by Lord Grosvenor in the Five Fields, Chelsea.

BROMPTON.—The superb new Church for Kensington is to be erected in the Nursery Grounds leading to Old Brompton, and opposite to Brompton Park.

PARK-LANE.—The removal of the old wall, the widening the road, and the introduction of iron railing, have improved the situation from Dorchester House to Grosvenor-street greatly.

HYDE PARK.—The ride and drive, from Stanhope Gate to Grosvenor Gate, is now straight and spacious, sufficiently so for six carriages abreast, and this has been effected by the removal of the old riding-house, and the wretched tenements so long a disgrace to the spot.

On the north side is the matchless new road, one of the finest objects imaginable; it is composed of flint stones, nearly a mile in length, and of considerable width; it is in line with the Bayswater-road, and terminates at the gate of Kensington Gardens. Several magnificent Palladian villas are rearing their heads in this quarter.

THE REGENT'S PARK.—The streets, crescents, and squares, which extend themselves nearly to Kilburn, are truly astonishing; many with their elevations carried two-thirds up in a fortnight. The Marquis of Hertford's Tuscan Villa will be an unique pile, and if he gets the eight acres, it will be magnificent.

A Meeting was held on Wednesday, for the purpose of extending to the City its share of the general improvements which are taking place in other parts of the Metropolis. It was proposed that the avenues to St. Paul's should be opened by wide and spacious streets, one running from Crescent-place, New Bridge-street, due east to St. Paul's Church-yard, destroying a great number of mean tenements behind Ludgate-hill, and joining Ludgate-street at the corner of Creed-lane, where a large opening, approaching to the form of a square, is to be formed, with a statue of George III. in the centre. On the south side of St. Paul's a curve will run nearly to Black Swan Court, where a wide street should be opened, cutting through Little Carter-lane, Little Knight Rider-street, part of St. Peter's-hill, and Upper Thames-street, down to the river, on the side of which a crescent is to be formed. This street will destroy many paltry lanes and courts in its progress. On the north side a curve is to run, making the north of the church-yard more regular than at present, from the centre of which a street is to pass into Newgate-street, by which Queen's Head-passage and Canon-alley will be taken down. The plan will be rendered complete by hand some streets communicating with Ludgate-hill and Earl-street, and two regular places, the northern facing Cheapside, and the southern Distaff-lane.

ELECTIONEERING HINTS.

The revival of the rumours of an early dissolution of Parliament has caused a fresh stir in the electioneering world, and the "note of preparation" for its coming, manifest in most parts of the kingdom, denote a pretty general belief amongst both representative and constituent that the day of account between them is close at hand. As relates to this county, we do not hear that there is any likelihood of the present Members being disturbed in their seats; we believe it is the intention of both to ask again the suffrages of the freeholders, and it is understood they will receive them without opposition. With respect to the representation of the city, Mr. Robinson remains firm to his avowed purpose of offering himself for a share in the honour which it confers, and his friends and partisans speak sanguinely of the probability of his success. The Noble Lord and the gallant Colonel who now fill the post, also severally express their determination to contest its maintenance to the very utmost, and such demonstrations have already been made on all sides, as bespeak the earnestness of their intentions, and lead us to expect a severe and protracted struggle.—Worcester Herald.

It appears that Mr. N. Calvert intends, at the close of the present Parliament, to transfer the offer of his services from the borough of Hertford to the county. In that event, the Hon. Mr. Lamb, it is thought, from aversion to a contest for the county, will be proposed for the borough. Two other gentlemen have been named as candidates for the town, Mr. Daniell and Mr. Duncombe. Mr. Daniell is an inhabitant of Hertford, but, it is understood, would not oppose Mr. Lamb, if the freemen of the borough are solicitous for his services. Mr. Duncombe, it is said, is slighted as a foreigner, because he is a gentleman of Yorkshire. In most other boroughs, when a seat is vacant, the electors, if they meet a stranger, are always ready to take him in.—Bucks Chronicle.

LONDON.—The Candidates mentioned for the City are Sir W. Curtis, Mr Wilson, Mr. Alderman Wood, and Mr. Alderman Brydges (the present Members); the Lord Mayor, Mr. Alderman Waithman, Mr. Alderman Thompson, and Mr. Alderman Lucas.

GUILDFORD.—This Borough will be severely fought. The Candidates are, Mr Serjeant Onslow, Mr. Wall, Mr. Drummond, Mr. Delap, and a Gentleman who contested this place at the last election.

SHOREHAM.—The Candidates for this Borough are Sir C. M. Burrell, Bart. the Hon. Mr. Howard, and Mr. Sugden the barrister.

LEWES.—T. R. Kemp, Esq. M. P. for Arundel, is now canvassing Lewes with extraordinary perseverance.

WOODSTOCK—is expected to be warmly contested. The names of five candidates already appear on the lists—viz. the present members, Mr. Langstone and Mr. Gladstone: the Marquis of Blandford, Lord Ashley, and Mr. M'William, of Torrington-square, London. The latter gentleman gave a splendid entertainment at the Balloon-inn, on Tuesday last, to all the freemen of Woodstock resident in Oxford.

QUEENBOROUGH—it seems, will be the scene of great exertion, and Mr. Capel's friends are most sanguine that he will succeed.

DOVER.—The Candidates for this ancient Cinque Port, are Mr. Bootle Wilbraham, Mr. Butterworth, and Mr. Thompson. Hythe, and other places in Kent, are expected to be contested.

BERWICK—will be fought desperately, as a very strong Tory party has been formed to carry the election.

RENFREWSHIRE.—The New Candidate for this district is W. Maxwell Alexander, Esq.

PERTHSHIRE.—The contest for this County will, it is understood, be severe, and it is generally expected that the number of contests in Scotland will be greater than at any former election.

BOROUGH OF PENRYN.—Mr. Grenfell has withdrawn his name from the list of candidates (already five in number) for representing this Cornish Borough in the next Parliament.

TAUNTON, SEPT. 14.—On Friday last, Mr. Baring resigned all pretensions to represent the borough of Taunton in Parliament, at the next general election. Mr. Baring's address to that effect was dated London, 31st August—and was not published at Taunton till the 9th of September. Prior to Mr. Baring's resignation, some sharp cannonading took place between the gallant General and the man of the long purse—Mr. Baring found himself outflanked by the spirited and tremendous charge made upon him by the Blues, headed by General Peachy and Mr. Baylay: the Honourable Gentleman made a very precipitate retreat, and has shut himself up in Yellow Ochre Castle, Piccadilly. General Peachy and Mr. Baylay are men of honour—they make no empty professions; all who know them will agree with the loyal Tauntonians in general, that no Gentlemen are more deserving of success.—A report is in circulation, that Mr. Warre has no intention to offer himself as a candidate at the next general election for this borough.—Dorset County Chronicle.

The independent Freeholders of the county of Waterford, are resolved to discountenance and put down the unjust coalition formed by Mr. Power, M. P., and Mr. Stuart, against Lord George Beresford, at the next election.—Cork Constitution.

Various rumours have for some time prevailed in this town, respecting a contest for the representation of the borough, at the expected dissolution of Parliament, but, we have learned from good authority, that neither of the gentlemen mentioned, as likely to come forward, to stand for the borough in Parliament, have expressed their intention to that effect. We believe the whole to be an idle rumour, invented to serve an electioneering purpose. Whatever grounds for complaint the freemen may have against either of the present Members, no contest is expected by those best informed on the matter.—Plymouth Journal.

One of the most numerous assemblages of Worcester Freemen resident in London, took place on Monday evening last, at the Coach and Horses, in High Holborn, when G. R. Robinson, Esq favoured them with his company. Mr. James Meek, in the Chair.

It was about nine o'clock when Mr. Robinson entered the room, which was crowded to excess, amidst the most rapturous applause. On his health being drunk, he expressed the gratification he felt, after a considerable absence from town, to find so numerous and respectable a body of freemen greeting him on his return. He thanked the committee for their zealous exertions on his behalf, and was happy to assure the meeting, that while much had been done in London, he was enabled to make a favourable report of the good feeling and excellent spirit that prevailed in Worcester, and in all those places where there was any considerable number of freemen. He noticed the various rumours which had been circulated; they did not require contradiction, many were so absurd as to refute themselves. He assured the meeting that he would not swerve from those principles on which he originally offered himself to their notice, and intimated that those who would insinuate to the contrary, merely expressed the hopes and fears by which they were actuated. He disclaimed all idea of a coalition or secret understanding with either of the present members, and was willing to stand individually upon public grounds; and while supported by so large a body of independent freemen of the city, he should consider it presumption to interfere with their choice of another candidate. The merits of the parties were before them, and he was satisfied to put the issue of the election on the public claims of the different candidates.

Mr. R. retired, amidst the applause of the assembly, about eleven o'clock.—Worcester Journal of Thursday.

On Monday and Tuesday, Lord George Beresford, accompanied by several of his friends, was actively engaged canvassing in the County Waterford suburbs of Clonmel.—Dublin Morning Post.

Lord Viscount Doneraile has declared for Lord George Beresford. Thursday, a portion of the Doneraile tenants of Tramore, thirty-six in number, were entertained at Hanlon's Hotel, Tramore, at a dinner, provided we believe, at the expense of Lord Doneraile. After dinner they proceeded forth in a body, bearing a flag, and shouting for "Beresford:" but their appearance quickly occasioned the formation of a much more numerous body with the flag and acclamations of "Stuart for ever!" After a few noisy, but harmless demonstrations, the adverse crowds dispersed, and from seven o'clock the town, although thronged, was as tranquil as Paradise. The police were watchful and idle. During the day, Lord George Beresford canvassed Tramore.—Waterford Mirror.

The Visitors to Marshall's Peristrephic Panorama, Spring Gardens, were agreeably surprised, the other evening, by the appearance in the boxes of no less a personage than the "Living Skeleton;" and being a Frenchman, he seemed much interested with the subjects illustrative of the life of Buonaparte. He was carried up and down stairs by his mother.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

As the opinions relative to a GENERAL ELECTION become daily more prevalent, we beg to apprise our readers that we are collecting the most authentic accounts of every movement of the different candidates, their pretensions, and above all their DISQUALIFICATIONS; and it is our fixed resolve to use every means we possess to put the different Electors in possession of those various circumstances which ought to regulate their choice at the ensuing contests. In prosecution of this task we invite the communications of our numerous correspondents, without delay—their nature shall be duly weighed and propagated—and the readers of THE AGE may feel assured of the adoption of those means which shall expose the impudent and rotten pretensions of many Members of the present Parliament—the nature of their conduct in the principal trying events of the late Session—and, at the same time, the suggestion of such persons as may, by their being selected, establish the respectability of the Senate, and hold in sacred trusts, the vested rights of Church and State.

THE RAKE'S PROGRESS in Paris, we willingly find room for, and with reference to the Noble Lord, who made his appearance last Monday at our Office, on the principal subject of the said communication, we beg to inform His Lordship we shall trouble him with a private letter in the course of a day or two.

MR. ROWLAND STEPHENSON will consult his own interest, particularly if he is likely to be visited with a parliamentary fever, to be a little more circumspect in the opinions he delivers respecting us. We shall not rest satisfied with ridiculing the present amatory propensity of this testy CIT, but as we are aware of a variety of topics that would be particularly amusing to his Cornish constituents, we shall not fail to give them a PICTURE of the Cockney retreat at Romford, a little city HORN work, and one or two other amusements which he has once in his time put his FOOT in.

In answer to " KITTY'S ADVOCATE," we beg to say we have ever admired, and ever must, her great talents, and have always spoken in the most flattering terms of them; and so far from illiberality, our allusion to her in a former number was meant kindly. The story was, and still is, in general circulation at the clubs and other fashionable places: WE disbelieve it in toto; but why does not her brother, who must have heard of it (for we AGAIN ASSERT the Noble Lord vouches for the fact,) set the matter to rights, by a proper refutation.

The communication of W. J. wants terseness, but particularly some greater IDENTITY OF CHARACTER than it possesses in its present form; it is left under cover for him at the Office, agreeably to his request.

We have answered our Correspondent's conundrum, or whatever he designates it, relative to the next Taunton Election.

The two pamphlets by AN ACTUARY, have been duly received.

We shall reserve the particulars of TOM DUNCOMBE'S ELECTIONEERING visit to Hertford, for "the hereafter."

We have seen the paragraphs BON TON alludes to, but again beg to decline making any remarks on the separation in question, as it is quite of a private nature. We really wonder that some of our cotemporaries make such a mystery of it, and therefore to prevent any further misrepresentations which may arise through their innendos, it is as well to say at once that the COUNTESS OF UXBRIDGE has separated herself from the EARL, in consequence of a disagreement in disposition.

We regret we have not heard again from MEMNON—he must continue "up to the mark," or he will lose our favor, as well as the ST. LEGER.

NOTE is informed that we HAVE seen the errors in the Morning Papers, and have no objection to rectify them, "by AUTHORITY." LORD CLANRICARDE is to be honored with a MARQUISATE, and to become a REPRESENTATIVE PEER of Ireland.

THE AGE.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 18.

The arrival of the Albion, Captain SWAINSON, on Monday last, at Liverpool, from Calcutta, which place she left on the 16th of April, has furnished us with papers to the 12th of that month, extracts of which we subjoin; in addition to which the CAPTAIN states, that on the day he sailed, the HON. JOHN ADAM, who, it will be remembered, filled the important situation of GOVERNOR GENERAL in India, during the period between the departure of the MARQUIS of HASTINGS and the arrival of LORD AMHERST, received a letter from the Secretary to the Government, communicating the intelligence that Arracan had been captured on the 31st March, by the division under the command of GENERAL MORRISON. CAPTAIN SWAINSON further states, that MR. ADAM who came over passenger in the Albion, died two months after that vessel sailed from Calcutta, but whether from any immediate cause, or from a decay of constitution after so long a residence in that dangerous climate, we regret to say we have no information. The opinion therefore which we thought proper to deliver last week, relative to the capture of Ummerapoora, is confirmed, and the report that a consequent termination of hostilities in the Burmese empire had followed, is entitled to just as much credence---for although no effectual resistance has been opposed to the advance of our troops, the letters which have been received, announce that the war continued to rage with just as much ardour as ever. While the attack on the Burmese empire was followed up by GENERAL MORRISON from the west, SIR ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL advanced from the south, towards Ummerapoora, having broken up about the middle of February, with 2000 men, with which he had advanced up to the 23d, about 50 miles, without any molestation from the enemy; and BRIGADIER GENERAL COTTON, whom SIR ARCHIBALD had directed to move up the river with 1000 men, to support his own march, had taken PALANG, a very important post, with great ease; he had also captured Yang-You-chu; and on the 7th of March attacked Donabyoo, (where SIR ARCHIBALD mentions the principal Burmese force was assisted) with 200 men of the 89th, and other troops; and although he succeeded in taking the first stockade, his attack upon the second failed, and he was compelled to retire, evacuating in his retreat the one he had already taken, and dropping four miles down the river to await reinforcements from BRIGADIER GENERAL M'CREAGH, to whom he had forwarded a despatch to that effect. The particulars of this encounter, and the other communications from SIR ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL, will be found in the following extracts:—

Extract of a despatch from Brigadier-General Sir A. Campbell, dated the 23d of February, 1825.

"My letter of the 12th instant would inform you of the immediate advance of the different columns composing the small field force from the army under my command. The land column under my own immediate orders arrived here yesterday, a distance from Rangoon, by the road, of fifty miles, without having met the slightest opposition, although a strong division of the enemy, under Maha Silwah, waited our approach at the old Talian fort at Mophie, until I had actually made my disposition for attack, when it broke and dispersed into a close jungle in the rear. The Carian inhabitants of the country through which we have passed, have viewed the expulsion of the Burmese with much satisfaction: they have received us with kindness and friendship: their ruined villages and fields laid waste convince me they must be sincerely happy at the change; and I have endeavoured to confirm the hope of peace they entertain by the enclosed Proclamation, which has already procured us some assistance in rice, road-making, and slaughter buffaloes.

"I have not heard directly from Brigadier-General Cotton since I left Rangoon, but prisoners inform me Palang has been taken with great ease, the Kee-Woongee and his troops retiring before my marine column upon Donahew; there, by all accounts, the whole Burmese force still remains, with what intention I cannot understand, for by all the rules of modern warfare, the position of Donahew is turned the instant I reach the Irawnddy either at Saroo or Naugur; the intervention of a broad and rapid stream, with the want of pontoons, will necessarily prevent me from deriving the full advantage my situation would otherwise give me; but I shall at least prevent the Burmese army from crossing to the left bank of the river in sufficient time to cover Prome. I do not, of course, expect to reach that point without some fighting, but to the best of my information there is nothing now in my front that could materially impede my progress."

CALCUTTA, MARCH 16.—We have letters from Martaban to the 13th ult. They state, that the Siamese are up in arms, and in great force, in the immediate neighbourhood of our forces. Col. Smith, C.B. commauding the light brigade, is to reside at Martaban, for the purpose of communicating, on the part of Sir A. Campbell, with the Siamese Government. We are told, that they appear to have the greatest anxiety to get possession of Martaban; and it is added, that they would not scruple much about the means. It is understood that all these offers of assistance are made by the Sirdars alone, the King of Siam not having yet publicly declared his views; apparently he is restrained by the usual cautions and timid eastern policy; but no doubt his officers are now acting under his secret instructions, reserving to himself, however, a loop-hole, through which to escape from the resentment of the Burmese, in case of our failure, which he probably thinks at present not altogether impossible. It is, however, expected, that he will now, very soon, come forward in an open and undisguised manner, and we hope that we shall be able to make such terms eventually with him as will secure a future regular commercial correspondence with the whole of the Siamese dominions.

MARCH 25.—It is not easy to conjecture where the enemy mean to make their stand; if, indeed, they mean at all to dispute our march to Ummerapoora. Prome is situated at the entrance into the hills, and is described as naturally strong, and as the key to Ava Proper; yet there appears to be no disposition on the part of the Burmese to try their strength with us at this Thermopylæ of their country.

MARCH 19.—We have perused letters from Rungpore, Assam, of the 9th instant. They contain no news of any great importance; but merely state that we are now in full possession of that country; and the campaign, so far as military operations are concerned, is nearly closed.

APRIL 1.—The Pascoe, it appears, has despatches on board from the King of Siam to the Right Hon. the Governor-General. We have not heard a surmise as to their contents, except that his Siamese Majesty expresses his readiness to send 50,000 men against the Burmese.

APRIL 4.—Letters from Rangoon, arrived per the Charles Forbes, which left the Pilot on the 18th, give some additional interesting intelligence of the progress of the army. Sir Archibald Campbell was still at Sarrawaddy on the 11th, eight days' march from Prome; he had advanced thus far without firing a shot, and was feeling the want of supplies, which, however, were daily expected from Rangoon. Brigadier-General Cotton, after the capture of Yang-you-chu, proceeded to Donebew, and on the 7th attacked that place with 200 men of the 89th (what other troops were engaged we do not know), and took the first stockade. He then attacked the second, but was unsuccessful, and obliged to retire, (evacuating the stockade he had before taken), and to embark his men in the boats. He dropped down four miles below, and forwarded a despatch to Brigadier M'Creagh, stating that he must wait for the reinforcements under him. Our loss was great; Captains Rose and Cannon, of the 89th, killed, and three wounded; 110 men killed and wounded. The Bundoolah is said to have 14,000 men in the works, and 3000 in war-boats. Major Sale had taken Bassein, the Burmese having burnt the town to the ground; but it is feared he cannot get on so rapidly as he expected, for want of means. The 45th (King's) from Ceylon was entering the river as the Charles Forbes came out; and Brigadier M'Creagh was expected to move from Rangoon immediately, to reinforce Brigadier General Cotton, the bullocks and carriages, for which he was waiting impatiently, having arrived. He takes with him the Royals and the two native regiments. The High Priest of the Dagon Pagoda had come into Rangoon on the 13th, with all his followers, and the town is now as thickly inhabited as ever, the people still crowding in from the country with supplies.

APRIL 5.—We understand that Sir David Ochterlony has issued a Proclamation, explaining the reason for the assembling of the force in Bhurtpore. This measure, it is hoped, will have the effect of rendering hostilities unnecessary. The whole of the Meerut force, troops from Cawnpore, and a very large battering train, are concentrating. Sir David Ochterlony was to be at Muttra on the 23d of March, and at Agra on the following, or next day. We have a copy of the Proclamation, which we shall publish in our next.

We were incorrect, we find, in stating yesterday that Sir A. Campbell had not reached Sarrawaddy until the 11th ult. He was there on the 4th ult., and he expected to be in Prome in eight or ten days. The discomfiture at Donabew will probably delay him, as he may retrograde a little to chastise the Bundoolah. Brigadier M'Creagh's reinforcement was to follow, and join Sir Archibald's column, not Brigadier-General Cotton's, and was to march by land.

We have received letters from Bauskundy, Cachar, 26th March. The rains had fairly set in at Munnipore; and operations there are at an end until November. Gumber Singh, the Cachar Rajah, remains at Banskundy with his Munnipoores, about 1,200 strong. Captain Dugdeon's corps will occupy a position in advance, towards Sylhet; and in this manner a chain of communication will be kept up between Sylhet and Bauskundy.

APRIL 11.—Letters from Rangoon of the 20th have reached us. They do not contain much additional information to what we formerly possessed. The Royals and some artillery had marched on the 18th, to reinforce Brigadier-General Cotton, and the King's 45th were stationed in the Great Pagoda. Sir Archibald Campbell was falling down upon the Bundoolah at Donebew, and expected to reach it about the 19th, when the letters speak of the place being then regularly invested. Some letters, to which however we can scarcely give credit, speak of the Burmese beginning to stockade themselves again in the neighbourhood of Rangoon.

Arracan, the chief town of the province of Arracan, in the BURMESE EMPIRE, (the capture of which we have herein spoken of,) is situated in lat. 20. 40. N. and long. 93. 5. E., and the following particulars of it are given by SYMES:—

Arracan, the capture of which is announced in another part of our paper, is the chief town of Arracan, a proviuce of the Burmese empire. It is situated in lat. 20. 40. N. and long. 93. 5. E. "This town and fort," says Symes, "were taken by the Burmans in 1783, after a feeble resistance. They found a considerable booty, but on nothing was a higher value placed than an image of Gaudma (the Gautama of the Hindoos, a name of Buddha), made of brass, and highly burnished. The figure is about ten feet high, and in the customary sitting posture, with the legs crossed and inverted, the left hand resting on the lap, the right pendent. This image is believed to be the original resemblance of the Reeshe (saint) taken from life, and it is so highly venerated, that pilgrims have for centuries been accustomed to come from the remotest countries, where the supremacy of Gaudma is acknowledged, to pay their devotions at the feet of his brazen representative. There were also five images of Raeshyas, the demons of the Hindoos, of the same metal, and of gigantic stature, the guardians of the sanctuary. A singular piece of ordnance, of most enormous dimensions, was also found, composed of lnge bars of iron, beaten into form. This ponderous cannon measured 30 feet in length, two and a half in diameter at the mouth, and 10 inches in the calibre. It was transported by the Birmans to Ummerapoora by water, as a military trophy, and Gaudma, with his infernal guards, were, in like manner, conveyed to the capital, with much pomp and superstitious parade."

APRIL 6.—It is said that Brigadier General Cotton conveyed the intelligence of his unsuccessful attempt on the stockade at Donabew, to Rangoon, wrapped round a quill, which was stuck in the ear of a Burmese. The ears of many of the Malays and others to the eastward are bored with large holes, in which they frequently carry their cheroots.

The following poetical advice was lately sent by LORD NORMANBY to LORD GLENGALL, returning him a Comedy which has been for some time lying on the Covent Garden shelf; and although the effusion does not possess much more originality than some other of his Lordship's late writings, it is amusing enough:—

"Your comedy I've read, my friend,
And like the half you pilfer'd best;
And if your play you wish to mend,
Take courage, Dick, and steal the rest."

We think it but common justice to record the present praiseworthy attempt of the LINEN DRAPERS' ASSISTANTS in VERSE, in order that they may see we are not ungrateful for the many things occasionally measured out to us at their hands, the particulars of which they will find herein measured out to them by ours.

COCKNEY STUDENTS.

AIR—"Run, neighbours, run."

This is the time to get a little knowledge, boys,
To leave off cutting linen up, and take to cutting leaves;
SQUIRE BROUGHAM has promised that he'll build us up a college, boys,
And he's the man as promises, and never once deceives.
From Drapers' Hall we are to have a rail-road Mount Parnassus up,
From ev'ry Cockney's Mews to take a lot of Cockney asses up;
And as to MRS. PEGASUS, we're all resolved to mount her too,
Nor more, like shillings counterfeit, be all day nailed the counter to.
This is the time, &c.

At eight we'll finish Persian selling, and set-to then Perseus on,
The jurenile assistants Mr. JUVENAL to read;
The quiet ones on Tacitus, the courteous QUINTIUS Curtius on,
And some the mead of victories, and the victories of the MEDE.
To measure silk and cloths is very well to take a pleasure in,
But still we'll read the Poet's works, and rumiuate their measure in;
And though our magazines are full, of twill, and stuff, and chintz in 'em,
'Twill be as well to stuff our heads with magazines and prints in 'em.
This is the time, &c.

To those who laugh and ridicule, because we talk so glib on them
Who come to purchase stockings, gloves, a purse, or reticule,
Our wives shall deal them ribbon out, and then we'll set our rib on them,
For dealing out their jokes, because we haven't been to school.
We'll let 'em know we're none of us the least afraid of facing 'em,
For when we've served 'em out with lace, we'll serve 'em out by lacing 'em;
And then at speech, no orators will ever think of tustling us,
For though we retail muslin, there is no rule for muzzling us.
This is the time, &c.

Many statesmen, authors, actors, have as low an origin
As even us apprentices, say just what they will;
So that's a reasou why we'll seize the present time for foraging,
And till our brains with learning, though we stand behind a till.
Why BILLY FARREN, BILLY SHAKSPEARE late who wrote a treatise on,
Or paid his brother GEORGE for one, and then pass'd off the feat his own,
Was once, as well as PERCY too, a draper's lad, near Brummagem,
And studied plays, when shop was shut, and he had time to rummage 'em.
This is the time, &c.

And COOPER was apprenticed, one who manufactures brushes to,
And mops, and pails, and turnery, and all that kind of ware;
But he bristled up, came on the stage, and now makes starts and rushes, to
The wonder of the whole of us, who pay to go and stare.
There's some have made the guns and swords, who now cut monarchs' throats with 'em,
And others fiddled once for pence, who fiddle now for notes with 'em;
While most have hacked some trade or other, ere they thought to act or not—
Ask CONWAY, MUNNEN, JONES, and JOHNSTONE, whether 'tis the fact, or not.
This is the time, &c.

Look at our great poets then, both fathers and their progeny,
And see the many fits and starts their destination takes;
Sure never was there known a much completer heterogeny,
Some live for sake of Fortune, and yet Fortune some forsakes:
MR. GAY sold tape by day, and wrote all night a taper by;
And POPE got all the vag he had, a wholesale linen draper by;
One PRIOR was a joiner's son, (as well as undertaker too)
And as he was a joiner, he became a CABINET maker too.*
This is the time, &c.

AKENSIDE, we all know, was a butcher's son, but then it did
Give him such an ache inside to see the creatures slain,
That he studied physic, and a work on "Dysentery" pen it did,
"Threw physic to the dogs" and then to lyrics turned his brain.
DYER was a painter, and then WHITEHEAD was a baker's son,
COWLEY was a grocer's lad, and BLOOMFIELD a shoemaker's one;
And though the works he made on lasts of moulds the strongest cast in were,
'Tis thought the works he left behind as good and quite as lasting were.
This is the time, &c.

* Matthew Prior the poet, though the son of a joiner in London, became a diplomatic character, was Under Secretary of State, Commissioner of Trade, Member for East Grinstead, and Ambassador to France.

In the army, men of rank were men in rank, and that in long,
SIR JOHN ELLEY, and some others, quite as high in post;
Some who once sold satin, in our Parliament have sat in long,
And who in life sold thread, their thread of life in battle lost.
We're all aware, no matter, if by means upright or sinister,
That out of woolsey† once they made a Cardinal and Minister,
And one or two that we could name, who strut now in a sabre, task or Epaulets, were nothing but a mercer or a haberdasher.
This is the time, &c.

Then hey for the time to get a little knowledge, boys,
To leave off cutting linen up, and take to cutting leaves;
SQUIRE BROUGHAM has promised that he'll build us up a college, boys,
And he's the man as promises, and never one deceives.
From Drapers' Hall we are to have a rail-road Mount Parnassus up,
From ev'ry Cockney's Mews to take a lot of Cockney asses up;
And as to MRS. PEGASUS, we're all resolved to mount her too,
Nor more, like shillings counterfeit, be all day nailed the counter to.

A CORRESPONDENT wishes to know, "What GENERAL PEACHY will be like, at the next Taunton election?"

We understand that he will be "something like"---overbearing.

It is with feelings of deep melancholy we record the unfortunate death of MRS. WELLESLEY POLE, which event took place on Monday morning last, at Richmond, after an indisposition more lamentable in its nature than in its duration; for we do not know a person whose situation, for several years past, has excited a greater degree of public sympathy than this ill-fated lady; and that tribute of affliction, which those higher in rank or more distinguished in public service, or attainment, would naturally command, cannot be denied to her who became associated with our feelings by unprecedented injuries, and endeared to us by peculiar sufferings. At the period of her unfortunate marriage, Mrs. POLE might be considered the most singularly favoured lady of her day, for, in addition to a pleasing person, engaging manners, and more than ordinary accomplishments, she possessed a larger fortune probably than any commoner in the kingdom; and thus highly GIFTED, she blazed in the world a prize that Princes well might, and even did envy; there was no rank that could be compromised, no talents that could be sacrificed, and no fortune that could be disadvantageously disposed, in an union with her; and the MAN who, contending against the importunities of ONE OF THE BLOOD ROYAL, the addresses of Peers, and the advances of many of our Gentry, could attract, and eventually triumph over the affections of this Heiress, might well be considered at once the most singularly fortunate man of his time. The fortune MRS. POLE bestowed with her hand, upon the object of her choice, was nearly 60,000*l.* per annum, with the mansion of her family, at Wanstead, considered the most splendid place in the kingdom; and, with neither the addition of property nor the want of it, her only desideratum in a matrimonial connexion was the responsive affection of him she married, and the endearment of domestic ties. To her no luxury could be a novelty, no society an elevation; for her halls had sheltered the Princes of other lands in adversity, and feasted those of her own country in prosperity; she stood, therefore, high in the world, an enviable and an envied woman; there was no home that could be made too delightful for her, no earthly happiness to which she was not entitled; she was courted by the affluent, idolized by the poor, and walked upright in the sight of her MAKER. By a marriage which should have realized all these just expectations, she became the very reverse of all her own heart could fancy or hope, or the world could possibly believe: in a few years she was forsaken, when she ought to have been cherished, or rather worshipped---her almost EASTERN INCOME squandered away---the gorgeous mansion of her fathers rased to the ground---herself and children reduced to subsist on a reserved pittance in humble privacy, and even that privacy rudely broken in upon---and her gentle spirit at length released from all future worldly suffering, leaving no other legacy to her wretched offspring than---THEIR MOTHER'S BROKEN HEART. Let the most hardened wretch that ever lived, read our plain, unsophisticated recital of the life and death of this deplored woman, and say, whether her memory is not entitled to the warmest eulogium the pen can write---to the deepest regret the heart can dictate? And although it is but a trifling consolation to her surviving relatives, to shed even a flood of tears on the untimely grave in which this blighted scion of their hopes and affections now reposes, it may impart to them some satisfaction to know, that her loss, if lamented not by ONE, is wept over by THOUSANDS; and that, in bosoms where the mere possession of virtues could only excite that common respect their possession always should, her misfortunes have raised her myriads of friends; and as the least expiation the world can make her memory, it will be cherished with affection for ever. It is not our intention to make any reference to the origin of all this vast affliction; we should be afraid to trust our own feelings---at its very thought the heart leaps almost beyond its confines, swelling with the commingled extement of fury and execration---and under this impulse, it is far better to place on record this unaffected memorial of one of the most ill-used women that ever lived; by which we should imagine that ONE HEART, to which every quality of virtue, morality, or common honesty, has been a total stranger, may yet admit into its dark recesses the hitherto excluded feeling of REMORSE, and viewing over, in its visitations of conscience, the enormous ruin of which it has been the vile instrument, step forward and endeavour to protect the offspring of a WIFE reduced in life, from the loftiest pinnacle of fortune to comparative indigence, and sunk at last to death,

"In helpless, hopeless, brokenness of heart."

LYRICS OF TON.---No. I.

THE RAKE'S PROGRESS IN PARIS.

A Poetical Effusion, in a Letter from T. R. to his friend B. H. at Oatlands.

DEAR BALL,
Your departure has made us so low,
Our hearts all sic sic, and our spirits so so,
That by far the best way I can pass off my time,
Is, by putting a few of my mems. down in rhyme;
In order, Dear BALL, you may shew them in town,
The order of things which in Paris goes down,
Since, when PASTA was absent, no music had sway,
So Dancing was banished, when BALL shot away.
The account's very true, which you read in a page
Of that villainous Newspaper—what is it?—THE AGE:
For some fugitive PIECE is by day my delight,
And "BURKE upon Beauty" I stick to all night—
Pauvre MADAME AUGUSTE to the Gallies is sent,
To "Perpetual Motion"—in other words went,
As NUGENT would say, to the Fleet, to repine
For pois'ning a child—Nota bene—not mine.
LORD HERBERT is here shewing off in the streets,
BARTOLOZZI's famed beauties he has here in sheets;
JOHN KING is gone over to London d'ye know,
Completely in love with the charming LE GROS,
And like CHESTERFIELD, who the same net put his head through,
As his works are engrossed, they are easily read through;
The joke of "Papa's Bench" was once all the ton,
But they say KING will soon go *toONE of his OWN!
We've got an apartment in "De la Paix Rue,"
Called "Rue de la Pay," for its dearness, by you,
Where we crack every day, with our nuts, some odd joke
On the many good things, my dear BALL, which you spoke;
Above all, the mistake which you tried to conceal,
About killing the calves at the Hotel de VEAL*—
And L'Anatomie Vivante, in London just now,
Which was call'd un bone homme here by you, they all vow.
Last night introduced to chaste MADAME BEGRAND,
Having chased her already a little too long,
Walked her off from St. Martin, after playing Susannah,
Resolved not to loose any chance to trepan her,
And was bored to hear D'ORSAY, that coxcomb, exclaim,
That "Susannah with the elder" would now be her name;
That D'ORSAY here gives out a monstrous parade
Of his havoc with some of our Peeresses made;
But your Frenchman, our proverb's the man to make true,
"That those who most talk are the least ones to do."

Au Revoir, my dear BALL, I am sick to the heart
Of the place and its pleasures, and BEAUVILLIERS' carte,
With his famed petits patés 'my heart can't allay,'
While it beats pit-a-patty, FOR ONE FAR AWAY!
Not the Champs Elysées, the Salon, nor your crony,
Whose ices remind one of Oxford—Tortonis,
Have charms, when compared with the sparkling delights
Of OATLANDS, and CROCKY's, and BROOKES's, and WHITE's,
For one, an unwilling adieu who now takes,
By subscribing himself,
Your's sincerely,
T. R—KES.

P.S. SIR JOHN says he is longing to frisk
With the ewes down at Oatlands, while I long to whisk
Back again to its woods, to its waters, and plains,
To some other BEAUTY its beauty contains.

THEATRICALS.

The Stout Gentleman, as the French say, "a parut et disparut." The Shepherd Boy really draws money. Broken Promises, which we have already anatomised, has been reproduced, in both of which dramas MISS KELLY evinces such perfect, yet opposite powers, that we hardly know whether to yield the palm to the simpathy excited by her performance of Alexis, or to the laughter created by her personation of Susan Roseby---while, to the admirers of melody, we know no higher treat than the ballad singing of MISS PATON in this opera, the most delightful specimen of which, is that one to the air of Kelvin Grove.

The expectations that had been raised relative to the comedy of Paul Pry, were, in its production on Tuesday last, completely realized; for whether in respect of plot, dialogue, character, or continual incident, a more perfect drama has not appeared on the stage for many years; and it would be the height of injustice to omit this opportunity of expressing our unfeigned admiration of the general talents of its accomplished author, and our conviction of the numerous obligations our Stage is under to his apt pen: but in this instance we are the more obliged, because, in addition to a very agreeable play, he has held out a temptation, we cannot resist, to visit once more the little Haymarket, on the positive assurance that the hitherto deranged state of the management is, as we predicted, set somewhat to rights by him. Without entering into the plot, which has been before the town for nearly a week past, we shall content ourselves by referring to its supporters, among the foremost of whom we would class FARREN, whose delineation of Colonel Hardy was the best thing we have had for many a day from this comedian: there is no actor but DOWTON could have made this part conspicuous, and he would not have reached the perfection of FARREN. In the broad parts of PAUL PRY, it is quite impossible to fancy any thing funnier than LISTON; but in the representation of those more immediate qualities which constitute the character, we think HARLEY or JONES would have been happier---a distinction we make by no means in a disparaging point of view, for in a particular branch of comedy, of which Paul Pry is in part a compound, you will never see a man that can be named for a moment with this incomparable performer. Mr. POPE, in Witherton, was a superannuated parody of an event which took place on the morning of the day this play made its appearance, viz.---The marriage of SIR HARRY FEATHERSTONHAUGH, "of Uppark, Sussex," with his Cook and Housekeeper; while RAYMOND, in his pea-green coat, was the fac-simile of HAYNE, and about just such a nonentity. Mrs. GLOVER acted (or rather was) Mrs. Subtle to the life, and it would make a drawn bet, whose merit herein is the greatest, the author's knowledge of CHARACTER, or the actress's assumption of it. Her daughter had a part, which, in Mrs. HUMBY's hands, would have been made "a refined Cowslip"---but, as it turned out, was about as insignificant as its representative. Mrs. WAYLETT convinced us, by her vivacious personation of Harry Stanley, that she has the talents of making a great deal out of a very unimportant part, and although the Globe and Traveller informed us she was labouring under indisposition the night before the production of Paul Pry, her really delightful performance of this open-hearted Midshipman betrayed not the least symptoms of a valetudinarian; and although, as a principle, we had much rather see her in Phœbe, we doubt if any one could have enacted her character so well as it was done by her. MADAME VESTRIS marred a downright good acting part, by the introduction of two uncharacteristic ditties---but she looked as beautiful as pink silk, white paint, and rouge, could possibly make her; and to her appearance we are indebted for a very fair joke from NUGENT, (sitting in the same box with ourselves,) who observed, that it was quite unnecessary visiting the Diorama, as it was impossible for that exhibition to present so faithful a view of BREST, as the one presented by MADAME VESTRIS. We have herein set down the result of our examination of the merits of this most amusing Comedy; we are moreover pleased to record that, so completely is the town in the same mind as ourselves, the houses to its subsequent representations have been the best, judging by "the outward visible sign" of the present season---a circumstance that ought to convince KING DAVID of the absolute necessity of keeping in full employ such an admirable dramatist as MR. POOLE, and at the same time of abstaining from playing those monkey tricks, with some of his MOST VALUABLE PERFORMERS, he lately has been PLAYING.

The daily papers inform us, as we last week hinted at, that Drury Lane Theatre re-opens on the 24th, and Covent Garden on the 26th instant---the latter re-producing the French Coronation---a report which we hope is not true. In the first place, we, as well as our cotemporaries, have set it down as derogatory to the dignity of CHARLES KEMBLE "to strut and fret his hour", as a mere puppet; and moreover, he will find, as he did last year, that his company will not back him in this attempt at the mummeries of Bartholomew Fair. In the next place, his pageant is eclipsed not alone by bipeds, but by quadrupeds, at Astley's Amphitheatre---the scenery and dresses in which are quite as splendid, and the vehicle for their exhibition not half so tiresome, as either the LICENCER S at one, or MR. PEAKE's at the other winter Theatre. Among the dramatic on dits, we hear that MR. HORACE TWISS has been employed professionally to retain the French Monkey for Covent Garden, and that MRS. CHATTERLY has some idea of following our advice, and spending her Christmas "across the seas."

We also find, by the following extract from a Manx Paper, that KEAN has been giving the people in the Isle of Man a touch of the sublime before he sailed:

NEW THEATRE, ATHOL STREET.

"Mr. Kean has represented this week—Othello, Sir Giles Overreach, Reuben Glenroy, Shylock, and King Lear. How often did he forget himself!! (in OTHELLO) into such feeling, as to plunge into the scene with all the artless promptitude of passion! What great and shining excellence! The performance was an unrivalled piece of tragedy.

"The Sir Giles Overreach of Mr. Kean, on Monday evening, was also a performance sans tache—terribly passionate and overpowering—the leap of the tiger, and the speciousness of the slumbering snake.

"Of his Reuben Glenroy, on Tuesday night, it would be trite to speak; it possessed every beauty intended it by the author—sentimental without being tame, and fascinating without any apparent attempt to please. Such was the overwhelming power of his magic acting, that it delighted all and inspired a few.

"We have seen Mr. Kean make the character of Hamlet display, perhaps, the greatest contrariety of feeling and design that exists in the Drama. He endows it with story, feeling, and high passion, beautiful in its conception, and most effective in its development. His play-scene is most triumphant; we invoke his audience to be attentive to the manner in which he will exclaim to the King, 'He poisons him in the garden for his estate.' The audience will perceive with what bitter searching he will deliver the whole passage, and how much he must elicit enthusiastic applause. His interview with the Court 'Sponges' will also be found peculiarly fine, piquant, and effective. And his exclamation 'Is it the King?' when he unwittingly has to murder Polonius, will be acknowledged to express a combination of hope, fear, revenge, and joy, in the demand.—In the chamber-scene he will be heard to 'speak daggers.' And in his grave-scene will be discovered depth of feeling, corrected and chastened by habitual philosophy. But it will sadden the audience to think what time may elapse before they see a Hamlet of KINDRED GENIUS. Mr. Kean is about to fade from our sight through the clouds of the Atlantic ocean; he must therefore, this evening, concentrate all the interest within himself—and, when the curtain falls, it will bring that melancholy resulting from the knowledge, that the best Tragedian that ever adorned the British stage is on the eve of quitting it, probably, for ever."

By this it appears, that he very often forgot himself, as we can easily believe, in Othello---that his Sir Giles exhibited the leap of the Tiger, and the speciousness of the Snake---that his Reuben Glenroy it would be trite to speak, and it inspired a few! from which we conclude that some of the Islanders mean to try it; and that of his Hamlet many years must elapse before they can see a kindred genius, as he is going to fade through the clouds of the Atlantic Ocean. We dare say this is all as it should be. We also see that MISS JARMAN has fallen through a trap on the Dublin Stage, and when we consider the number of years we have heard of this lady, we should have thought her old enough to have been what is commonly called "up to trap." Well be it so: any thing that will contribute to the happiness of "His Majesty's servants" will be sure to add to our own, for a more amusing set of personages do not exist on the surface of the wide earth.

OLD BAILEY SESSIONS.

THURSDAY, Sept 15.

The general sessions for the county of Middlesex commenced at this court this morning before Mr. Justice Littledale, Mr. Baron Graham, Mr. Justice Gaselee, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs.

TRIAL OF WILLIAM CHRISTMAS.

William Christmas, aged 29, by profession a clerk, was put to the bar, on an indictment charging him with embezzling, in the city of London, ten Exchequer bills, value 100*l.* each, the property of Henry Merrick Hoare and others, his employers. There was also a detainer lodged against him for embezzling a Bank note, value 30*l.*, the property of Henry Merrick Hoare and others, his partners, on the 22d day of September last, at the parish of St. Dunstan-in-the-West.

The prisoner, who was very genteely dressed, entered the Court, accompanied by a professional gentleman. He held in his hand a bundle of papers, and pleaded "not guilty" in rather a faltering tone.

Mr. Law opened the case for the prosecution.

Mr. Sergeant Bosanquet stated the case to the jury, and called the following witnesses:—

Mr. Henry Merrick Hoare examined from the Bench.—I am one of the partners in the house of Messrs. Hoare. They consist of Henry Hoare, Charles Hoare, Hugh Hoare, and Henry Merrick Hoare. The prisoner was intrusted as clerk to receive sums of money. It was his business to carry the Exchequer-bills to the office, for the purpose of their being exchanged. A notice was sent from the office, and he then made out a list, which he took with the bills to the Exchequer-office. The bills in question were accordingly made out in September last. He left the employment in June last.

By Mr. Broderick.—The Bills were deposited at the Bank for security, and the partners had no right to use them. The prisoner had been in the house many years, and bore an excellent character. He came when sent for.

By Mr. Law.—The house has the power of exchanging the old for new bills, as they are paid off.

Mr. Hugh Richard Hoare examined. I am the nephew of the last witness. In September last I looked out the Exchequer-bills, for the prisoner to take them to the Exchequer. I did not take any account of them, as that was the prisoner's duty.

By the Recorder.—I had no list; I looked out all the notes of September 22. I merely handed the Exchequer-bills to the prisoner of that date. Many of them had been deposited in the house by the customers.

Mr. Holmes Snelgar examined by Mr. Law.—I am an officer employed in the Audit-office, Somerset-house, I produce a list of Exchequer-bills transmitted to our office from Messrs. Hoare. The amount of the two lists is 475,400*l.*; the lists specify the number and date of the bills. The manner in which a demand for new bills and interest was made, was by the person whose handwriting appeared at the bottom of the list signing a receipt; the words were, "Received the 22d of September the bills as specified within, with interest."

Mr. Merrick Hoare again examined.—The list of the old as well as the new bills is in the hand-writing of the prisoner.

John Henry Latham examined by Mr. Serjeant Bosanquet.—In the payment of Exchequer Bills, he paid off a number in September to the prisoner. He gave him new for old ones. The amount of the principal was 475,400*l* of the interest 14,262*l*. For which the prisoner received 365 bills for 1,000*l*. each; 129, 500*l*. each; 116, 200*l*. each; and 227, for 100*l*. each. Witness did not compare the Exchequer Bills with any account, but he had every reason to believe them to be the same. He gave the prisoner all that he demanded. The book now produced is one in which all new bills are copied. It contains an account of all the bills issued, and to whom. It also contains an account of those delivered to the prisoner on the 22d of September last, for Messrs. Hoare and Co.

The amount was here handed in.

The same denomination of notes were delivered for the old ones as were sent in. The prisoner was satisfied with the amount he had received. Witness would not give six five hundred pounds Exchequer Bills for the three for 1,000*l*. precisely the same description would be given.

Mr. Wm. Wood sworn.—Was the paymaster of his Majesty's forces, in September last. A paper now produced was not in witness's handwriting. It was copied from the original draught. Witness examined it at the time. Thinks he has seen the prisoner. Never paid him any money on his own authority. Never pays without the proper vouchers, consisting of draughts and affidavits. I paid him by draughts on the Bank. Pensions were in course of payment in September last, and remained so up to the present time.

Mr. Henry Whiting stated that he was in the service of the Bank of England—in the public drawing office.—I have a check in my own hand-writing, ordering the payment of 14,295*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* by Mr. Hetherington to the prisoner. There was another draught connected with the above for payment of 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* The order was not made particularly to Mr. Hetherington, to whom the prisoner presented it, and received the money. I did not see the money paid. I never knew, during the thirty years I have been in the office, but two instances in which the draughts have not been signed; I cannot with certainty say that he paid the draught over to the prisoner, but from all the circumstances I believe so.

William Hethingham, one of the pay clerks at the Bank, said a pay note was presented to him for payment, signed by Mr. Hetherington, and he handed over the money. Knew the prisoner by the name of Christmas.

Mr. Robert Cottle produced a book, in which an entry of Exchequer Bills, to the amount of 374,400*l.* had been made in the handwriting of the prisoner, being 1,000*l.* short. Miss Wood's account had been marked as paid off to 1824, but no new bill was entered to her account. The prisoner ought to have brought the interest check and Exchequer bills to Messrs. Hoares, but he had not done so.

In his cross-examination he admitted that he had written to two of the public prints, announcing that a public examination of the prisoner was to take place in the evening at Bow-street. If the money had been paid to Miss Woods, it would have appeared in the book.

Mr. George Melrose.—Witness had examined the account of the bills, and found the old and new to tally, with the exception of ten for 100*l* each, which were wanting.

Mr. John Turner Watts, a bill-broker, stated that he had sold for the prisoner one 100*l.* bill to the number of ten. On the 22d of June he sold three; on the 25th of June three more; and on the 14th of July four more. He understood the prisoner acted as an agent for other persons.

Mr. Melrose was again called, and swore that there was an entry of 1,365*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, in which there ought to have been an entry of three Exchequer bills for 30, but in which there was only two entered.

The case closed for the prosecution.

Mr. Adolphus and Mr. Broderick contended that no case had been made out There might be vague surmises that the ten documents might have come to the possession of the prisoner; but there was no proof of the fact, and, wanting this, there was not evidence to go to the jury.

Mr. Sergeant Bosanquet contended that it was clearly proved that the prisoner had received the identical bills which were wanting. The learned gentleman went through a numerical statement of the accounts, and contended that the indictment was made out.

The Recorder said, with respect to the 30*l* bank-notes, he was of opinion there was not evidence; but with respect to the 100*l*. Exchequer-bills, he was of opinion there was evidence to go to the jury.

The prisoner was now called on for his defence. He read from a written paper a most forcible appeal, alluding to the conduct of his past life. It had gone abroad that his difficulties had been occasioned by his connexion with a certain lady, and that he had been by her led into extravagance. This was a most cruel and heart-rending aspersion. His expenses had not exceeded more than 30*s.* per week, and his tailor's bill was beneath 20*l.* per annum. He read several letters, sent by Mr Henry Hoare, and other highly respectable personages. He solemnly denied that there was the slightest particle of truth in the cruel story circulated of him, and called God to witness that the lady alluded to was wholly blameless. He trusted that the gentlemen who attended for the public press would do him this act of justice; and concluded by imploring the Jury to carefully examine into the case—trusting they would, by their verdict, again restore him to society

Mr. Hoare gave the prisoner a very excellent character up to the present time.

The Recorder summed up the evidence to the jury, and minutely dwelt on the peculiar circumstances that characterised the present case.

At a quarter after 12 his Lordship concluded; and the Jury turned round, and were occupied in consultation for about ten minutes, when they found the prisoner Guilty.

The Recorder immediately ordered the prisoner up for judgment, and sentenced him to transportation for 14 years.

The lady alluded to by the prisoner was in Court during the trial.

MIDDLESEX SESSIONS.

MONDAY, Sept. 12.

These Sessions commenced this morning before F. Const, Esq. Chairman, and a bench of Magistrates.

PRACTICE OF THE COURT.

After the Juries were sworn, the Chairman took occasion to observe to the bar upon the inconvenience and mischief arising from the practice which had hitherto prevailed, of making motions to put off trials, respite recognizances, and so forth, at all times throughout the Session. This practice had been found productive of such consequences as led the Court to come to a determination in future, to hear no motions of this sort after the first day of the Sessions, as the necessary affidavits could as well be made on the preceding Thursday, as subsequently. The learned Chairman also intimated, that the sum at present allowed as costs of the day, was too small, and requested that the gentlemen of the bar would consult upon the sum which ought to be allowed; and whatever amount they fixed upon would be ordered to be paid in future.

LEET JURIES.

William Hand, and Elizabeth his wife, were indicted for assaulting J. Myers, when in the discharge of his duty, as one of the Leet Jury of the Manor of Stepney, on the 31st of May; and in a second indictment they were charged with a similar assault upon Peter Wilson, the Headborough, when attending the said jury.

In a cross indictment, Myers, and a young man named Collyer, were charged with assaulting Mrs. Hand. Collyer did not appear.

Mr. Andrews, on behalf of the prosecutors, Myers and Wilson, opened the case as one of considerable importance to the public. It was the province of the Leet Jury to inspect the scales, weights, and measures used by the different tradesmen within the manor; and on the day above-mentioned they were occupied in discharging this duty, when they arrived at the shop of the defendant, Hand, who carries on the trade of a butcher. They proceeded to examine his weights, which they found all right; but upon his scales being examined by Collyer, a scale-maker, whom they took with them as their tryer, he pronounced the beam to have a draught of eight drams, upon which Hand apologized for the circumstance, saying it was wholly accidental, and without his knowledge. To this the jury replied, that they believed it was involuntary on his part, and therefore, although the law allowed them to amerce him in the sum of 2*l.* they would mitigate the penalty to 5*s.* This sum, however, Hand refused to pay, upon which the jury directed Collyer to seize the scales. Upon his attempting to do so, he was opposed by Hand and his wife, the latter fixing both hands in his collar until he was rescued from her grasp by Myers releasing her hold of his neckcloth, upon which she turned her fury against the latter, and tearing his face with her nails, caused the blood to flow down copiously from it. Wilson, the headborough, upon his interference, was also violently assaulted, but ultimately Mr. Hand was carried to the watch-house. After observing upon these facts, the learned counsel proceeded to call his witnesses.

These consisted of Wilson, and several of the jury, whose testimony pretty nearly followed the opening statement. None of them, however, alleged that Hand had committed any assault.

On cross-examination by Mr. Phillips, they denied that Myers had struck Mrs. Hand, or torn off her cap; or that they had offered to allow Hand to retain his scales unadjusted, upon payment of 5*s.* The reason assigned by one of them for Collyer's absence to-day was his having absconded in consequence of robbing his mistress; and another admitted that the jury frequently dined together, &c.

The scales were said to be in court, but were not produced.

Mr. Phillips addressed the jury on behalf of the Hands. He began by animadverting on the conduct of the witnesses on the other side, who must have sworn before the grand jury that Hand had committed an assault, or else no bill would have been found against him: and yet they now admitted that he had not attempted to commit the slightest assault upon any one of them. Notwithstanding this, four of these respectable jurors had thought fit to drag him, like a felon, to the watch-house, through the public streets, at noon-day. He (Mr. Phillips) would name no names, lest he might mistake them. (Here the attorney for the opposite party laughed aloud.) Mr. Phillips said he would proceed with his statement in despite of the horse-laugh with which the opposite attorney had the decency to interrupt him.

Attorney.—Sir, I will not endure your making any such offensive observation upon me. I uttered no horse-laugh.

Mr. Phillips.—Gentlemen, the laugh I heard was certainly not like a man's laugh; therefore, if the gentleman does not like its being called a horse-laugh, he may call it the laugh of whatever other animal it belonged to.

Attorney (fiercely.)—What do you mean by that allusion, Sir? I will not allow you to offer me an affront.

Mr. Phillips insisted on not being interrupted; and the Chairman interposing, the learned gentleman proceeded with his address, in which he contended that the Leet Jury were not justified in seizing the scales of Mr. Hand, even if they were inaccurate, but were bound to have presented him. It now appeared, however, that they did not attempt to prove, because in fact they could not, that the balance was deficient; the person on whose dictum they at first pronounced it to be so, was a lad of the name of Collyer, who was stated to-day to have since then absconded for robbing his mistress. The jury were bound to infer, therefore, that the scales were correct. This fact, however, did not rest on inference alone, for the scale-maker whom Mr. Hand had employed for years would be produced to-day, and he would tell them that he had, by Mr. Hand's directions, examined and adjusted those very scales on the preceding Friday, which was only three days before. The learned counsel then said he should be able to prove that Myers had repeatedly struck Mrs. Hand, although he had sworn that he had only held her hands to prevent her from clawing his face, and that he had torn her cap off her head. He would also prove that the jury offered to leave Hand his scales, upon his paying them 5*s.*; but that Hand refused to give them one farthing, saying he knew his scales were right, and asking them was it decent on their parts, if his scales were otherwise, to offer to allow him to go on cheating the public at his leisure? The learned counsel at the conclusion of his address called Mrs Hand and other witnesses, whose testimony fully bore out the facts stated by him

The learned Chairman having summed up the evidence, the Jury immediately acquitted Hand and his wife.

The Chairman then made a few observations upon the other indictment, in which he recommended the jury to find a similar verdict respecting Myers, as the Leet Jury had acted in the discharge of what they conceived (although erroneously) to be their duty.

The Jury, through their foreman, signified their regret at differing in opinion with the learned Chairman, and returned a verdict of Guilty against Myers.

WATER v. FIRE, OR THE CORN-DOCTOR'S EFFIGY.

J. Bennet, and a whole family of Wilsons, consisting of Thomas, the father, Jane, the mother, and George, James, and Thomas, their sons, stood indicted for riotously assembling in the parish of St. Pancras, and assaulting John Mason, and Jane, his wife. Mr. Barry conducted the prosecutor's case, and Mr. Phillips the defence. The facts, as stated by Mason and his wife, were these:—

The male prosecutor was formerly a cabinet-maker by trade, but is now by profession a corn-doctor, "and more than that," said he, raising himself in the box upon his toes, "I am the first corn-doctor in the kingdom." As soon as the roar which this modest claim to professional pre-eminence excited, had subsided, the doctor proceeded with his evidence. At about half-past ten o'clock on the night in question, he was attracted to the door of his house by a great noise, when he was alarmed at the sight of a large fire quite close to his premises. Around this were collected an immense number of boys and women, and several men, all hallooing and shouting, and busily occupied in burning something over the fire. Upon examining this something, he began to suspect that it was himself; "but," said the doctor, "I soon knew beyond a doubt, it was myself; for, upon observing me make my appearance, the boys cried out 'Burn the old rogue.'" This proof of identification again convulsed the court with laughter. "But," said the learned Chairman, "I see you are not even scorched; what, then, were the boys really burning?" "I will show your worship," replied the first corn-doctor in the kingdom; and turning to his wife he took a bundle out of her arms, which was tied up in an old apron, and which he very coolly and cautiously began to untie. While this operation was going forward, the court and auditory awaited the result in anxious and awful suspense, supposing that the doctor had been speaking metaphorically, not of his wife, for she like him stood before them unsinged, but perhaps of one of his children—"Another self, reformed in finer clay"—and therefore anticipating the dread spectacle of a poor little human being half-roasted to death by the cruel urchins. Let the effect be imagined, then, when the first corn-doctor in England held up to the gaze of the admiring spectators, his "other self," in the shape of an exceedingly old and patched pair of breeches, stuffed with hay and rags; and holding it above his head, and turning it round on every side in triumph, "There, your worship," said he, "this is me that they were burning." He then proceeded to state, that one of the defendants (we could not tell which) wanted to drag him out to fight; that they had spat in his face, and in short maltreated him in various ways, while Mrs. Wilson "harked" the boys forward upon their game. The fact was, the Wilsons wanted to force him to quit his house, and he was in terror of their actually setting fire to his premises, and burning himself as well as his effigy. Here the narrative was taken up by Mrs. Mason, a lady somewhat stricken in years, and bearing a much stronger resemblance to certain characters in Macbeth, than the effigy did to the doctor. She happened to be out "doing business" (she did not mention the nature of it, and the learned counsel had not the nerve to ask her) at the time the rioters assembled outside her house, and upon her return at half-past eleven o'clock, she at once perceived that it was her husband's effigy upon which the bonfire was acting. She was no sooner observed than she was hailed with the uncomplimentary epithet of "the old b——," and was also spat upon. Having, as the counsel stated, held a consultation with the doctor, she determined to oppose one element to the other, and having a gallon can in the house, she soon contrived, with the aid of her husband, to fill it with water. Armed with this, she sallied forth, and setting Vulcan and his votaries at defiance, she scattered the contents of the can so judiciously around her, that she not only succeeded in extinguishing the fire, but in a few minutes putting the rioters to flight, and bearing off the remains of her husband's effigy in triumph, after it had first been used as an offensive weapon against the doctor, at whom it was hurled upon his sallying forth from his fortress to support the gallant and successful sortie of his wife.

After affording half an hour's exquisite mirth to the auditory, the trial terminated in the conviction of the elder Wilson and his wife, and the acquittal of the other defendants. The feud between the two parties originated, it was said, in a disputed claim to the premises occupied by the doctor.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

Queen-square.—A female, apparently not more than 19 years of age, named Jane Smith, and a child just turned of five years old, named Mary Ann Ranniford, were put to the bar, before Edward Markland, Esq. the magistrate, charged with circulating counterfeit coin in Westminster and the county of Surrey to a vast extent.

It appeared that the elder prisoner had long been known to be a common utterer of base coin, in which she dealt very largely of those individuals who are agents in London to the manufacturers of the spurious commodity at Birmingham. She has been once or twice before charged with the offence, and therefore she became so notorious that she was necessitated to leave off putting the bad money away herself; but so determined was she to keep up the traffic, that she was in the habit of employing children of tender years to pass the counterfeit money. On Friday two Bow-street officers observed her at her old trade, in company with the child Ranniford. The officers kept a strict eye upon her movements, and saw her several times pass something to the little girl: and she, by the direction of her instructor, went into different shops, such as hosiers, (where she purchased balls of worsted,) pastry-cooks, tobacconists, and fruiterers, where she passed the bad money, and received in return, goods and change. On the other side of the bridge, the patrols saw the prisoner Smith deliver something to the child, and point out the shop of Mr. Isaacs, a fruiterer, in Bridge-street, Westminster. The child went in, and asked for a juicy lemon, and gave a counterfeit shilling in payment. Mrs. Isaacs had no suspicion from the tender age of the utterer, and its respectable appearance, that the money was bad, and was about to give change, when one of the officers entered and took the deluded child into custody, whilst his companion secured the elder prisoner, (Smith,) and on searching her pockets he found twelve bad shillings, some parcels of snuff, several balls of cotton and worsted, and other trifling articles, which the child had purchased in the course of the day. The officers who had secured them learned from the child that her parents lived in Cross-street, East-lane, Walworth, and that Smith had taken her out for a walk. The patrol instantly communicated the circumstance to the child's parents, who are hard-working honest people, and their feelings on hearing that their infant had been seduced into the commission of such a crime, can be more easily conceived than described; they stated that the woman Smith had formerly lived in the same street, and was frequently giving halfpence and cakes to the child, who would, in consequence, follow her anywhere. Some time since, she removed away to Lock's-square, Lock's-fields, and they (the parents) had not seen her for some time. On Friday the child was playing in the street, and not finding her come home they became alarmed, and went every where, broken-hearted, in quest of her, but they could hear no tidings of her till the sad news was brought them by the officers. The poor mother was now in attendance, and her feelings were dreadfully affected, and excited the commiseration of all present.

The prisoner Smith made no defence, and held her head down during the examination. The child stood by her, and took no notice of the proceedings, and they were both fully committed for trial. The mother, on seeing her infant consigned to prison, became quite frantic, and wept hysterically, and had it not been for the gaoler, she would have inflicted some violence upon the woman Smith for seducing her infant.

Hatton Garden.—Wm. Mansfield, a lad of 16, was placed at the bar, having voluntarily surrendered himself on Sunday night, at half-past nine o'clock, to Robert Appleton, the watchman, of Red Lion-street, Holborn, declaring himself to be the person who robbed Mr. John Pass, of Isleworth, bookbinder, while engaged in painting his house, of a pair of top-boots, garnet ring, and 6*s.* in money.

Appleton, the watchman, informed his worship, that on Sunday-night the prisoner came up to him on his beat, and requested him to take him into custody, as he had committed a robbery in Mr. Pass's house, and was now starving, and therefore he wished to surrender to justice.

Henry Hoare, Mr. Pass's apprentice, deposed, that during his master's absence from home, the house was getting a thorough painting, and that the prisoner, who was engaged by one of the painters, and had worked there three days, suddenly decamped, when a pair of boots, a ring with three garnet stones, and 6*s.* which the female servant (Anne Goodwin) had in a pocket-book in her box, were missing.

Owing to the absence of Mr. Pass, and the illness of Mrs. Pass, the prisoner was remanded till Wednesday next.

Elizabeth Johnson, one of the frail sisterhood, was brought up, charged by a watchman with loitering about West-street, Holborn, at two o'clock on Sunday morning, and refusing to move on, though repeatedly told so to do by him. She not only continued to loiter, but was also very abusive, and disputed the authority of complainant to confine her for standing still, in so loud a tone, that a concourse of people was collected, and owing to the whole tenour of her conduct he was obliged to lock her up. The lady, with much sang froid, declared her innocence, and stated she was merely waiting for her brother, but being well known to the officers of this establishment, she was locked up for want of bail.

UNION-HALL.—Another of those disgraceful tumults which are of so frequent occurrence in the borough of Southwark, amongst the lower order of the Irish, a great number of whom inhabit the different courts, lanes, and alleys in the district, took place on Sunday during the hours of divine service. The riot at first commenced in a public-house called the "Denmark," situate in a vagabond place called the Mint, which is the general rendezvous, together with Kent-street, of all the thieves and prostitutes that swarm this division of the metropolis. Monday morning, as soon as the sitting magistrate, R. J. CHAMBERS, Esq. had taken his seat at the bench, the following five men, named Regan, Hayes, Sullivan, Morlett, and Stanton, were placed at the bar, charged as the riug-leaders of the riot. When the case was called on, a number of men and women, all bearing marks of severe punishment, some with black eyes, otbers with bruised and torn faces, and many with broken skulls, entered the office for the purpose of stating their complaints, exhibiting their wounds, and identifying the persons of those who had maltreated them so harbarously. The prisoners, too, by their appearance, did not seem to have escaped the conflict without their share of the knocks that were dealt about with unsparing hands, for one of them particularly, Hayes, had received a very desperate blow on the back of the head, which cut it open, and inflicted a wound of nearly four inches in length, and his companions were also severely marked, and had their clothes literally torn off their backs during the "row." As well as could be collected from tbe statement of a constable named Gamble, the disturbance began at the above house in the Mint, in consequence of a dispute between the wife of a bricklayer's labourer and that of a dustman, respecting an infant which the wife of the latter carried in her arms, and which was compared to a monkey by her antagonist. The comparison was no sooner drawn than Bobby tbe dustman's wife flung the young "squaller" out of her arms, and to work she went. Her opponent being a much more powerful woman, soon got the better of her after the two first rounds, and the husbands of both, anxious to decide the battle themselves, stripped, and after fighting for some time, an immense mob, chiefly of the Irish, collected, and a general "row" commenced. A great number of the rioters were armed with sticks, and appeared as if they had congregated for the purpose of breaking each other's heads; for such cracking and pelting away at each other with stones, brickbats, pewter pots, and other missiles, the constable declared he never before beheld in his life. Gamble said that he particularly obs rved the five men now before the Magistrate conspicuous in the riot, and he kept his eye constantly upon them until he received further assistance. The first one he attempted to secure was Paddy Hayes, who made a most determined resistance, and endeavoured to crack his (tbe constable's) head. Luckily, however, his shillelagh was taken from him, and he was no sooner deprived of it than he rammed his hand into his coat pocket, and pulled out a huge paving stone, with whicb he attempted to pay away at the constable's nob, who also experienced great hazard in making him drop it; for many more of Paddy's associates, seeing the danger in which their countryman stood of being taken off to the watch-house, gathered round him, and made several unsuccessful attempts to rescue him, by flinging bricks at the person who had him in custody. The paving-stone which Paddy tried to defend himself with, after tbe loss of his shillelagh, was produced for the magistrate's inspection. It certainly was a very formidable weapon, and well calculated to do mischief in the event of the loss of stick or bludgeon.

The Magistrate asked Hayes what he had to say for himself as one of the riugleaders in the disturbance. The facts of his having been engaged in the disturbance were fully proved, and he had subjected himself to a severe punishment.

Hayes, who had been but a few months in town, from Connaught, excited universal laughter, by the peculiarity of the style, and rich Irish brogue with which he pleaded his defence. "Ah, then, your honour," said he, "is it me, a poor quiet boy, tbat ye are going to punish, that did'nt stir hand or foot until he got a rap on the pate." Here Paddy pulled the plaster off his head, and exhibited a long and deep wound. "It was not," said he, "until after I got the knock that I know will be the deatb of me, that I tried to run away with my life; and just as I was escaping witb it, up comes the constable, and takes me off."

Mr. CHAMBERS.---How came the paving-stone into your pocket?

Hayes.---Why, then, upon my conscience, I cannot tell yc that, in truth; for how it came there God only knows; but I think, said he, putting on a very sagacious countenance, that it must have been thrown at me during tbe row, and it just fell into my pocket—that's the short and the long of it, your honour.

Here a man, whose head and face were desperately bruised, stepped forward, and said, "Your worship, that fellow will make you believe that the moon is made of green cheese, if you listen to him any longer; he is known to be one of the most thumping liars at this side the river; and as for a tongue, your Worship, why he'd butter over St. Peter himself with it."

Mr. CHAMBERS asked the informant whether he had suffered in the disturbauce?—"Yes," replied the man, "and it was Pat Hayes that punched my head about in the manner you now see it."

Several other witnesses proved that all the defendants had been most active in the row.

The Magistrate, in holding all the prisoners to bail, observed, that it was most scandalous the extent to whicb riots of this description were carried almost every Sabbath day, and in order to make an example of the persons now in custody, he (the magistrate) would give directions that tbe officers of the parish in which the disturbance took place should prosecute them all at the sessions. Soon afterwards the overseer of St. Saviour's parish attended, wben Mr. Chambers having expressed his intentions, tbe former said that he, on behalf of the parishioners, would most willingly attend the sessions to prosecute them. The prisoners were then committed to gaol in default of sureties.

MARLBOROUGH-STREET.—It will be recollected that a few days ago a fellow, in the garb of a gentleman, named James Simpson, was committed from this office, for an assault on a pot-boy, in the service of Mr. Sherwood, landlord of the Man-in-the-Moon public-bouse, in Vine-street, St. James's, and that the pot-boy, James Stanley, was the chief witness as connected with this case. A man of respectable appearance was on Thursday brought from St. James's watch-house, before the Magistrate, an the boy Stanley being sworn, stated, that for some days past the prisoner, who was before a stranger, had frequented Mr. Sherwood's house, and had shown a great degree of anxiety to get into conversation with the witness, following him about to different parts of tbe parlour, tap-room, &c. On Wednesday night he came again, and having found an opportunity of following the witness into a retired corner, he asked him if it was his intention to hang that poor fellow, Simpson, that was in Newgate on his account. Witness replied, that if what he had to say could hang him, he could not help it, and he should certainly say it. The prisoner then put half a sovereign into his hand, and said, that if be would meet him the next morning, at tbe gate of the Old Bailey, he would reward him handsomely, and make it well worth his while to stay away from the trial of Simpson. At this moment Mr. Sherwood came up, and he told him what the prisoner had been saying to him.

Mr. Sherwood said, that seeing the prisoner a perfect stranger, following his boy about, he watched him closely, and when he observed tbem in conversation, he went up, and was told by the boy what the prisoner proposed to him, and showed the balf-sovereign, but the prisoner said he gave the half-sovereign to pay his reckoning, and then called for his change. Mr. Sherwood, however, thought it his duty to detain the prisoner, and gave him in charge at the watch-house next door. Mr. Sherwood further said, that Simpson's trial was to have come on that day, (yesterday,) but in consequence of the circumstances, he (Mr. Sherwood) had heen that morning to the Old Bailey, and applied to the Court to put off his trial, which was agreed to, until the Magistrate should investigate the matter. The boy, he said, had been with him bcfore the Grand Jury, when they hoth gave their evidence, and the bill was found.

The Constable of the night stated, that he searched the prisoner, and found on him 32 sovereigns and a half, folded up in a letter, which were produced.

The Magistrate now asked the prisoner who and what he was?---He said his name was Maurice Dryden, by trade a boot-maker, residing at No. 7, Gray's-inn-lane. He entirely denied the statement of the boy, or that he made any offer or proposal to him; but, on being pressed as to his knowledge of Simpson, he confessed that he did know him; he knew him some years ago as a respectable linen-draper at Bath, and o t seeing in the public papers an accouut of the charge against him, and the description of his person was so accurate, that he knew him to be the same, and went to visit him in Newgate, when Mr. Wontner permitted him to speak to him through the bars. As for the money found upon him, that was a sum of 40l. he had borrowed that day to pay a bill of his own that was due.

The Magistrate said, that the case was so clear, of his having endeavoured to keep back a witness from giving his evidence, in a charge of felony, that he must find bail to answer the accusation elsewhere—two bails in 50l. each, and he, the Magistrate, would take care to see that they were responsible bail. The prisoner was then locked up for want of bail.

ACCIDENTS, OFFENCES, &c.

ALARMING FIRE.—A serious fire, threatening the most destructive consequences, and attended with the loss of life, broke out on Tuesday, in the premises of Mr. Bell, an Oilman, residing in Shoreditch. About a quarter past twelve, the watchman, on going his usual round, observed some smoke issuing from the lower part of the house and immediately gave the alarm. For some time his efforts, as he supposed, to awaken the inhabitants were ineffectual. The house was completely in flames before any tidings could be gained of the fate of the inmates. Happily, however, only one person has fallen a victim to the devouring element, and that is Mr. Bell himself. It seems that the female part of the family upon hearing the alarm, effected their escape through the back part of the premises, whilst Mr. Bell, attended by his man, endeavoured to force a passage through the lower part of it On proceeding down the stairs, however, the smoke became so dense, that they were nearly suffocated. The man endeavoured to persuade his master to abandon his intention of reaching the street by the front door, and they were in the act of returning, when the stair-case gave way, and precipitated the master into the destructive element. Mrs Bell cut herself most dreadfully by falling on the skylight, and the woman servant is most shockingly bruised. Mr. Bell's house is rendered a complete skeleton, and scarcely a vestige of the property it contained saved. The house of Mr. Jacobs, and that of Mr. Reece, which adjoin that of Mr. Bell, have sustained considerable damage, and property to a very large amount has been in the latter destroyed. Mrs. Jacobs, whose accouchment is expected every hour, remains in a very dangerous state, in consequence of the fright she has undergone. The pickpockets were, as usual, on the alert, and several offenders are now in custody to be brought before the Magistrates this morning.

On Tuesday a lady, who had been at Margate as a visitor, with her husband, on going to see him depart by the steam-packet for London, and taking the last farewell, instantly dropped down, and in a very short time expired.

CRUELTY CHASTISED.—Saturday afternoon, a man who was driving a half-starved and worn-out horse along the Edgeware road, was observed to treat the beast with unusual cruelty. At length it was unable to proceed further, and fell down overpowered with fatigue. The brutal driver inflicted several severe blows upon the wretched animal with the butt-end of his whip. A gentleman who had witnessed his conduct with indignation, on remonstrating with the driver, was threatened with similar treatment, and would probably have suffered had he not knocked the ruffian down A fight was the consequence, which, to the great satisfaction of the spectators, ended in the victory of the gentleman, who was very little hurt, whilst his opponent, to use a boxing phrase, was so "heavily punished," that he quickly relinquished the contest.

MISCELLANEOUS INTELLIGENCE.

Sir Walter Scott arrived at Abbotsford on the evening of Friday, the 26th ult. We learn that he was delighted with his Irish tour, and is in the most perfect health.—Edinburgh Journal.

GENERAL PEPE.—Some time ago a paragraph went the round of the papers, stating that Gen. Pepe died at Brussels. A correspondent received a letter from the General yesterday, in which he begs that the report may be contradicted.—Morning Paper.

The remains of a young woman of the name of Irving, who died at the back of the hill below Annan, were interred in Dornock churchyard in the following extraordinary manner:—She had long lingered under a disease, the nature of which she herself and her friends at least believed was never ascertained by any of her medical attendants, who she therefore apprehended would use every means to get her body into their possession, to open and inspect her bowels, &c.; but so abhorrent was this idea to the poor girl, that she could not rest satisfied until she got her friends to promise that they would have her grave so constructed as to render every effort to seize her body abortive. To fulfil this, the grave to the height of between from twenty inches to two feet from the bottom was lined with hewn quarry stones, closely joined to each other, and of the exact shape and dimensions of the grave, and bound to each other at the top with strong iron cramps, well and deeply fixed in every stone; a strong iron bar, running the whole length of the grave, and resting on its middle, was all grooved into the head and foot stones, and a number of iron cramps rivetted into the stones on each side of the grave, were firmly attached to this longitudinal iron bar.—Carlisle Patriot.

We understand that those elegant and spacious premises, long known as the Globe Hotel, Fleet-street, are about to be completely metamorphosed, as they have been taken within the last few days by the Imperial Foreign Wine Company, for conducting the bottled wine trade on the largest scale, and on an entirely new plan. We hope the Directors of this Company will fulfil the promises of their prospectus, instead of gambling with shares on the Stock-market. In this case they will render the public a real service; for there was certainly never a more favourable opportunity for such an association than at the present moment. The recent reduction of duties, and the notorious frauds in the wine trade, are circumstances greatly in tbeir favour, if they really mean to attend to their business.

ENTERPRISE STEAM VESSEL.—The voyage of the Enterprise steam-packet to India, on account of the magnitude of the undertaking, has attracted very general interest. She was last heard of on the 21st ult. Lisbon, bearing S E. 25 miles, and going at the rate of 8 miles an hour. The following is Capt. Johnson's own account of his voyage up to that date:—

"Enterprise, Aug. 21.

"We left Falmouth on Tuesday evening, August 16, at seven o'clock, with the wind from the westward; and at ten o'clock I took my departure from the Lizard Lights, and shaped a course directly for Cape Ortegal. We are now about seven miles to the northward of Lisbon. After leaving the Lizard, we had moderate breezes, accompanied by a very heavy swell from the West, but the lugs kept her steady, and eased the engine, which on their being set, increased its velocity from 20 to 24 strokes in a minute. On Friday it blew a hard gale from the eastward; we were weathering for eight or nine hours in the most disadvantageous position, with the sea right a-beam: here the spendings were of great use, in keeping off the sea, which they did most effectually. We made Cape Ortegal at 10. 30. with a fresh S.W. wind a-head. We are going seven knots: the engines have never ceased since Tuesday. I shall keep the steam up till I reach the Trades, I hope on Tuesday next, when I shall be prepared with good sails, to take advantage of the wind. All hands are well and highly delighted. P.S. Sunday, 10 a. m. Lisbon S.E. 25 miles, going eight knots."

TO TOWN and COUNTRY BANKERS and MONIED PERSONS.—The Advertiser has constantly unexceptionable bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes at long and short dates, and wishes to negociate the same upon mutual terms. The most profound secrecy may be relied upon, and respectable references given, if required. All letters addressed, post-paid, to F. D. S. at Read's Coffee-House, No. 102, Fleet-Street, will meet with immediate attention.

A CHALLENGE FOR 1000 GUINEAS.

H. MOSS, PRIZE HAIR CUTTER, PERRUQUIER, and PERFUMER, No. 181, FLEET-STREET, (Two Doors from Fetter-lane, claims the honour of announcing that by the urgent request of many distinguished friends, who so highly patronised him while conducting Mr. Money's business, he has opened an Establishment, and respectfully solicits the attention of the connoisseurs in the scientific Art of Hair-cutting. By many years application to this particular department of his profession in London and Paris, he is enabled to introduce a new and peculiar system, never contemplated by the vulgar empirics who presume to call themselves Hair cutters, but who in fact only destroy the head of hair. Moss's style rigidly adhering to fashion, always adapts itself to each particular countenance (the grand desideratum), and his intercourse with the Courts of Europe furnishes him with a never failing variety. Moss begs to state that his personal attention, and that of his Chief Artist (late with Money), are devoted to Hair-cutting, as he never trusts so important an operation to inexperienced apprentice boys.

The beautiful system of fabricating perukes, scalps, and heads of hair, (Secundum Naturam) has claimed Moss's particular attention, and he submits to the Beau Monde an exquisite specimen of talent in his new system of Wig making, veery hair is singly inserted, the superfices of the skin and complexional colours of the head are astonishingly imitated—the whole forming a coup deil, the most brilliant and natural, calculated to embellish the charms of youth or cover the deficiencies of age.

Moss has prepared a superlative choice of Ladies' Fronts, on a new system, that always retain their curl. Platts and Curls, in all the variegated Tints and shades of nature, which, with an assortment of French Perfumery, he invites his best friends—the public—to examine. Patent Hair Brushes on Moss's new plan, are ready for the taste of the curious; and for One Thousand Guineas he challenges competition with all Europe in every branch of his Profession.—Vivat Rex et Industria omnia vincit.

EMMETT'S QUEEN'S GOLD and SILVER-EYED NEEDLES.—T. THE ARABIAN VEGETABLE PILLS, free from Mercury or Antimony, are unrivalled in their beneficial effects in Nervous, Bilious, and Liver Complaints, Indigestion, and its numerous train of maladies, and are peculiarly mild and pleasant as an aperient. The superior efficacies of these Pills has increased the demand for them so much, that an additional number of Venders has been appointed in London for the accommodation of the Public; and they may now be obtained in Boxes at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. each, of J. V. Simpson (Proprietor,) 28, Henrietta street, Covent-garden; Messrs. Stradling, Royal Exchange; Anderson, 156, Bishopgate Without; Sequeira, 132, Whitechapel High-street; E. and F. Odling, 159, High-street, and 171, Union-street, Southwark; Ward, 324, and Hose, 309, Holborn; Prout, 226, and Burfield, 189, Strand; Stanley, 14, Tavistock-row, Covent-garden; Payne, 5, St. Martin's court; Simpson, 21, Piccadilly; Hawkins, 11, Old Bond-street; Grignon, 174, Regent-street, opposite New Burlington-street; Colley, 5, Holles-street, Cavendish-square; Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford street; White, No. 1, and Yarde, 28, Lamb's Conduit-street; and of all Medicine Venders throughout the kingdom, Mr. Renard, No. 19, Rue Vivienne, is appointed vender of these Pills in Paris.

BURGESS' ESSENCE OF ANCHOVIES, Warehouse, 107, STRAND, Corner of Savoy Steps, London.—JOHN BURGESS and SON, being apprised of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the ORIGINAL, to observe the Name and Address correspond with the above;—the general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection, J. B. and Son submit the following distinction:—Some are in appearance at first sight "Burgess' Essence of Anchovies;"—others "Burgis's," and many more without address.—JOHN BURGESS and SON having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the labels previous to purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.—Burgess' New Sauce for general purposes, having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient sauce—will keep good in all climates.—Warehouse, No. 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy Steps.—The Original Fish Sauce Warehouse.

A REAL BLESSING TO MOTHERS.—There is not, perhaps, in the whole Materia Medica any one remedy which so effectually relieves the pain of a suffering patient as the AMERICAN SOOTHING SYRUP. Who can watch the writhing tortures into which a lovely infant is often convulsed during the period of dentition, without feeling sympathy for its sufferings? and who would hesitate to procure a remedy, when a remedy can be found, which is obvious by the effectual relief afforded in so many distressing cases which are daily coming to the notice of Mrs. JOHNSON? Therefore, mothers ought never to be without the American Soothing Syrup in the Nursery; for if a child awakes in the night with pain, by only rubbing the gums with a few drops of the Syrup, it will immediately open the pores, heal the gums, and thereby prevent fevers and convulsions; for should it come in competition with any other disorder, it often destroys the mother's brightest hopes.—To be had wholesail and retail, of Johnson and Co. 28, York-place, City-road; and by their appointment, of all principal Medicine Venders in town and country, at 2s. 9d. per bottle.—None are genuine, unless signed on the stamp with Mrs. Johnson's own hand-writing, as there are several spurious sorts.

STIRLING'S STOMACH PILLS, prepared from the most choice stomachic and aperient Drugs of the Materia Medica, are proved to be unparalleled in the cure of Bilious Complaints, and all Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels, Indigestion, Flatulency, Sick Head-ache, Heart-burn, habitual Costiveness, and other complaints incident to the alimentary canal; they are also singularly efficacious in the cure of Palsy, Gout, Worms, and the Jaundice, and a powerful restorative of the system after too free an indulgence at the table, as they strengthen the digestive organs, induce a healthy action of the Liver, and promote a free and regular circulation. Females at a certain period of life should never be without them. Prepared without Mercury, or any ingredient which may endanger health by cold, requiring neither confinement or restriction of diet, nor can their virtues be the least impaired by time or change of climate.

Prepared by the Proprietor, J. STIRLING, Chemist, &c. No. 86, High-street, Whitechapel, and may be had of E. Stirling, 20, Ironmonger-lane, Cheapside, in boxes at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. each.—Those only are genuine which are signed "J. Stirling," on the Stamp Label, with his own writing.

HIS GRACIOUS MAJESTY OF GREAT BRITAIN, and most of the Nobility and Gentry, use now PRINCE'S celebrated RUSSIA OIL. It ought really to be generally known, that physicians have of late experienced that those who wear false hair are subject to complaints in the head, as the false hair, through the warmth, will shrink, become tight, makes a dent round the head, and prevents free circulation of the blood in the head, causes head-ache, giddiness, slight apoplexy, and other complaints; but it is proved through the aromatic Oils Prince's Russia Oil is prepared with, makes it healthy, and by often rubbing the head all over with it, when the false hair is taken off, is wholesome, refreshing, and cooling, and will prevent the above complaints; even eminent medical men have recommended it to the King. The Duchess of Rutland has declared in a letter to Mr. Prince, from experience, has found his Russia Oil the best article for preserving the hair. Colonel Grant has often declared to the proprietor, that from experience he has found the Russia Oil the best article for the hair.—Also a Gentleman, turned of sixty, has a good head of hair and whiskers, and not a single hair grey, and has declared it is through the Russia Oil, for he has used it constantly for the last twelve years; and when in the country and out of Russia Oil, and not having used it for a fortnight, his hair began to get harsh and inclined to turn grey, but by using it again, it became immediately soft and dark; it is really a wonder, for whoever sees him are quite surprised at his having such a fine head of hair and whiskers, without any grey at his age. The Gentleman has given the proprietor leave to mention his name and residence to respectable persons, to convince them the above is a fact. There are hundreds of Ladies and Gentlemen who have used constantly Prince's Russia Oil, have also declared that it is the best article for the hair. In short, Prince's celebrated Russia Oil, through the aromatic oils it is now prepared with, is acknowledged the wholesomest and best article for dressing, preserving, and promoting the hair of Ladies, Gentlemen, and Children, and if used constantly not a hair will fall off or turn grey, and is such a nourisher to the hair, that if it has began to turn grey, will restore it again to its natural colour, which hundreds of Ladies have experienced. It is the pleasantest for Ladies to dress their own or false hair, will make it look elegant, and will curl beautifully any way; clears the scurf, and keeps the head and hair clean, and by using it regularly for a few months will restore the hair on the bald part, if the least signs of roots are remaining, which thousands of Gentlemen have experienced when used regularly. It is an old saying—'Tell the truth, and fear nobody.' If persons are bald, and the roots are entirely gone, it is against nature that any article can restore it; and if persons pretend to restore hair when the roots are gone, by any article, it is a falsity. Persons who have begun to get bald, ought to be particular to use the Russia Oil daily, or at the least every other day, as there must be a complaint in the scalp, which may go further, and carry off the hair entirely, if neglected, which has often been the case.

Ask for Prince's Russia Oil—the Ounce Bottle 5s.; a large bottle containing Five Ounces, 1l. which is a saving. Sold by the sole Proprietor, A. PRINCE, No. 9, Poland-street, Oxford-street; and by most principal Perfumers and Medicine Venders. Be particular, and observe his address, "A Prince, No. 9, Poland-Street, Oxford Street, London," on the cover of each bottle; without, it is not genuine, and cannot answer the purpose.—Purchasers ought to be particular, as counterfeits are in circulation; and some villains, to deceive the public, put the original proprietor's name on their counterfeits. Good allowance for exportation. Merchants and Captains ought to be particular, as impostors are going about to counting-houses with counterfeit Russia Oil, saying it is the genuine.

The town and neighbourhood of Market Stainton, near Horncastle, were considerably agitated on Friday last, by a calamitous fire, which occurred in the cottage of Wm. Smart, a sober and industrious labourer, in the employment of Mr. Waterman of that place. It appeared that his wife had occasion to heat the oven, and had gone out a short distance from home for the purpose of gathering fuel, leaving a little girl about four years old, and an infant in the cradle. Before the poor woman's return, the fire had escaped from the oven upon a furze kid, which was laid near to it, and spread so rapidly as nearly to have consumed the cradle in which the infant had been left in the care of the other child, who had just time to escape—with the most intense anxiety the unfortunate mother rushed through the flames towards the cradle, from which she took the poor little sufferer with the upper part of its body literally burnt to a cinder; and but for the active exertions of her neighbours, and the almost immediate medical attendance of Mr. Sutton, of Wragby, the poor woman, who is still in a dangerous state, must also have perished at once from the effects of the fire. The flames were so singularly destructive, that not a vestige of furniture or clothing could be preserved. We understand that Miss Loft, of Stainton House most benevolently undertook to purchase clothing for the family; and Mr. Loft has liberally contributed towards the subscription, which had been opened under the superintendance of Mr. Waterman. The poor man's loss is estimated at upwards of 60*l.* and, as the contributions of the charitably disposed cannot so readily be forwarded to the village of Stainton, a subscription list is also opened at the shop of Mr. Rainey, bookseller, in Horncastle.—Lincoln Mercury.

Among the Novelties to be performed this season at the grand Music Meetings, is a Song written expressly for Mr. Braham, by Thomas Bayley, Esq. called "Charity." It has been set to music by Mr. Cutler, and is considered by the musical world one of the most classical compositions that has appeared for some time.

A woman in Montrose, in a fit of delirium, lately threw herself over a window three stories high. So far from being injured by the fall, it is said that her mental health has been in some measure restored.—Times.

As our cotemporaries are calling the attention of the public to the advertisement in this day's paper, from the East India Tea Company of Leadenhall-street, we cannot do otherwise than follow their example, premising that we know little of the merits of this new establishment other than from hearsay. It at least promises fair—let our readers judge for themselves.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN PAPER COMPANY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE AGE.

SIR,—As some anonymous Letters, evidently written by interested individuals, have appeared in certain newspapers, we feel it due to our character to state, that we never should have allowed our names to have appeared as Directors of the above Company, had we not been convinced that there was not only room for the same, but that it would afford a handsome interest to those who might invest their money therein. And as many have applied for shares on the strength of our names, we take this opportunity of stating (the deposits being now paid on all the shares), that should any change of circumstances render it advisable, at the end of twelve months from the commencement of the business, to discontinue the Company, we should feel ourselves bound, and hereby engage to return to every proprietor (who has paid such instalments as may have been called for), all the money he has advanced to the Company, ourselves bearing every expence which may have been incurred.—We are, sir, your obedient servants,

SOLICITORS—Messrs. Gatty, Haddan, Gatty, and Haddan.

THE principal object of this Company is to work the Patents obtained by Mr. Saintmarc, in March, 1824, for the kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Ireland, for the Distillation of Spirit from Potatoes by a peculiar process, and with an improved apparatus.

The Company also propose to unite the business of Rectification with that of the Distillery, which they are enabled to do under circumstances highly advantageous.

For the purpose of carrying these objects into effect, the Directors have agreee for the purchase of the Patentee's Premises at Vauxhall, known by the name of thd BELMONT DISTILLERY; and also for the purchase of a Rectifying House, peculiarly well sitnated with reference to the former establishment.

The Directors abstain from dwelling upon the probable advantages resulting from the present Company; feeling anxious, that every individual desirous of becoming a Proprietor should previously examine the Distillery and Rectifying Establishment, and the Spirit produced; for which purpose orders for admission may be obtained of the Directors, until the appropriation of Shares.

Applications for Shares may be made (post-paid) until Saturday the 24th of September, inclusive, to Messrs. Gatty, Haddan, Gatty, and Haddan, 3, Angel Court, Throgmorton Street, where the Prospectus may be obtained.

IT is evident from recent communications (though numerous convictions took place some time since) that Tea continues to be adulterated with spurious leaves, which at once accounts for the difficulty so generally experienced of purchasing it genuine, or if it happens to be of good quality, at reasonable prices. This, as well as a Combination taking place among nearly all the extensive Tea Dealers, of an injurious public tendency, which the East India Company strongly objected to, and have ineffectually endeavoured to prevent, caused very extensive arrangements to be made by
